I am just as much interested in this legislation as the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is interested in it. I know the situation of the farmers in this country just as well as he. I know the situation not only of the farmer but of the stock raiser, and of nearly every interest in the United States. We are having now hundreds of men knocking at the doors of the Finance Committee asking that all the losses for 1919 be credited upon their tax account for 1920.

I know, Mr. President, there are very few institutions of this country which are going to come out even this year when depreciation of the value of their holdings are considered, very few of them; and when we had the excess-profits tax under discussion on this floor Senators will remember that I told them then that the profits which the invoices showed were in bricks and mortar and machinery, which at some day or other would not be worth 10 cents on the dollar, and we find that to be the case to-day. When everything was advancing—all manufactured goods, all products, everything that was sold by the merchant—most anyone could have shown a profit in his business if he had taken his invoice at the increasing prices. The advances were enough to show an immense profit every time he took stock. And he took his stock that way, and he paid his taxes upon it, and it seems strange to me that men could not see what was coming.

I was in hopes after the signing of the armistice that reconstruction would be begun at once and gradually reach to the point where business would be upon a sound basis again. But no; the business men of the country did not take action looking to that end. They held up the prices just as long as it was possible. They kept up those extremely high prices and compelled the people to pay them, and now, Mr. President, the slump has come, and prices have been declining so fast that it has almost destroyed business.

So, Mr. President, all I want the Senate to do is to pass legislation which will pass the House as soon as possible to meet the situation, and section 1 will do it without any section 2.

Let us at least be consistent, and let us strike out section 2 of this joint resolution, and then let it pass.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I did not expect to say anything touching this measure, but I do not like to be indicted for doing such an absurd thing as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] seems to think the Agricultural Committee has done in incorporating section 2 in this joint resolution.

If section 2 is absurd, section 1 is absurd. Neither of these sections amends the law or changes the law in the slightest. Both of the sections contain merely an expression of opinion, an expression of desire upon the part of the Congress as to what should be done.

Let us see the absurdity which the Senator from Utah says is incorporated in section 2. If we are guilty of doing an absurd thing, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that about 30 governors from every part of the United States have not agreed with him. They did not think it an absurd thing. There was a conference of governors from various sections of the country, and one of the recommendations they unanimously agreed upon was to ask the Federal Reserve Board to do that which section 2 requests shall be done by the board.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. And I noticed that the present governor of the great State of Utah was there in person, and that the incoming, the next governor of the great State of Utah was there also. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has just said what I was going to call his attention to.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the governors wanted legislation in order to assist the agricultural interests of the United States, as well as the others, but I do not think any one of them read section 2. I do not think they ever read a line of it.

Mr. McLEAN. I would like to ask the Senator from Mississippi if he has a copy of the resolutions as adopted by the governors?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I have a copy of them, and I will read it for the edification of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. McLEAN. I have read it, and I know that the principal resolution is that Congress pass finance legislation of some sort, or words to that effect.

Mr. HARRISON. I will read the part in which they asked that the War Finance Corporation be revived, and other relief. The resolution provided:

> Let the Federal Government create a finance corporation of some sort—
> And so forth.
> The Federal Reserve Board should be urged and authorized to advise all banks to adopt a liberal policy of renewals.

Mr. SMOOT. That is entirely a different proposition.

Mr. HARRISON. That is practically what section 2 does.

Mr. SMOOT. That is, the Federal Reserve Board was to do that.

Mr. HARRISON. The Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. That is what we are asking them to do in this resolution. I am afraid the Senator from Utah did not read section 2.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes; I did.

Mr. HARRISON. He always reads everything. I am surprised he did not read it.

Mr. SMOOT. I have read it to-day.

Mr. HARRISON. Section 2 provides:

> That the Federal Reserve Board is hereby directed to take such action as may be necessary to permit the member banks of the Federal Reserve System, in accordance with law * * * to grant liberal extensions of credit to the farmers of the country——

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRISON. I will get back to the other proposition. That is what the Senator objected to most vociferously. It continues:

> To grant liberal extensions of credit to the farmers of the country upon the security of the agricultural products now held by them—

And so forth. I left out this one proposition just after "in accordance with law," "and consistent with sound banking." The Senator from Utah objects to the words "and consistent with sound banking."

The Committee on Agriculture thought that by incorporating that provision we were clothing it with some conservatism; we really pointed out to the Federal Reserve Board that in extending this liberal credit to the farmers of the country, while they must follow the law, they must also do nothing inconsistent with sound banking. So if we should adopt a motion that might be made by the Senator from Utah to strike out "consistent with sound banking," we would be putting the United States Senate on record as being against the provision of the law which said to act "consistent with sound banking."

We merely call to the attention of the Federal Reserve Board that in making credits they should follow a liberal policy, and that they should charge as low a rate of interest as is possible "in accordance with law and consistent with sound banking."

It may be that the Federal Reserve Board can not loan any more money because their reserves are not large enough.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, right there——

Mr. HARRISON. If they can not do that, then it does not say that they shall do it, because it expressly provides that they can do nothing that is not consistent with sound banking or in accordance with the law.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to ask him a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. McLEAN. Section 2 provides that they shall do all that is necessary to enable the member banks to accommodate the farmers. The Senator has just said that they may find that this can not be done.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. McLEAN. Would it not be better to use the word "possible" instead of "necessary," then?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know that I would have any objection.

Mr. McLEAN. Do you want to compel them to do a thing which they can not do?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] know that what we are doing here is that which the Senate of the United States should not be called upon to do.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that is right.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not care if the Secretary of the Treasury is a Democrat—and I have very high regard for him; I think he is a splendid man—on this proposition I differ with him, I differ with him absolutely, because I believe that the War Finance Corporation should be revived, and that liberal credits should be extended to the agricultural interests of the country in this very unusual and deplorable situation. The Congress of the United States four months after war was ended thought the War Finance Corporation should be continued, and adopted an amendment to keep it functioning. It should be functioning now, and should not have been closed by the order of the Secretary.

Section 2 does not change any law; it merely expresses an opinion of the Congress of the United States. Section 1 does the same thing—changes no law, adds nothing to the law, but merely expresses an opinion of the Congress of the United States that this War Finance Corporation should be revived.

I asked the Secretary of the Treasury while he was on the stand, "What if a majority of the Congress should differ with you as to the advisability of reviving the War Finance Corporation? How could we get it started and going?"

He said, "By passing a resolution directing me to do it."

So we are merely following the suggestion of the Secretary of the Treasury, and I believe that both of these sections should remain in the bill. It might give some relief to the great agricultural interests of the country. I am opposed to striking out section 2. I do not believe it is an absurd proposition. I believe when the Federal reserve banks make sixty or seventy millions of dollars a year it is possible for them to reduce their rate of interest so that some of the people can be taken care of who need to be taken care of. I am opposed, Mr. President, to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]; that is, that other products should be added in this resolution. I believe in facing this proposition in a courageous way.

What do we want here? The War Finance Corporation under the law to-day could make loans, if it were functioning, to the manufacturing interests, as well as to the agricultural interests. It could assist every interest in the country.

By passing this joint resolution, and specifically pointing out the agricultural interests, it does not prevent the War Finance Corporation, if it should be revived, from continuing to loan to other interests in the country for export; not at all. But we know that when depression comes, the first interest to feel the depression is agriculture. That is the breaking point, and they have felt it for months—yea; for almost a year. Twelve months ago the things they produced they could sell at a reasonable price; and those necessaries they needed, they cost highly, yet they survived because of the prices they received for their products. But to-day the prices of the farmers' products is reduced about fourfold, while for the things he buys he is compelled to pay approximately the same. Cotton in my country has been reduced from a dollar a pound to 18 cents a pound, and certain grades of cotton can not be sold at all. The price of wheat to the farmers in the West has been greatly reduced, but the things they buy have not been proportionately reduced. Oh, just a little bit it may be, but not much. I think they will come down after Christmas, but the retailers are holding on just as long as they can. The crash is bound to come, but up until this good hour there has been no such depreciation in the things that the farmer has bought as has been in the things he produced and has had to sell.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 3944) to create a Federal live-stock commission, to define its powers and duties, and to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live stock and live-stock products, and for other purposes.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the Senate proceed with the consideration of Senate joint resolution 212.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. HARRISON. Now, some Senator said that the value of exports has increased during all this time and gave figures to bear out that statement. That may be true, but I know that one product in bales for export has not increased. I read the testimony of Mr. Meyer. Mr. Meyer, on page 14 of the hearings, says this, and I merely cite this to show that while the value of exports may show an increase and may show large, when you take certain products and give the volume, it does not show an increase. Mr. Meyer says:

> Whatever the figures in dollars may be, the amounts are what interest the producer. The farmer does not produce dollar exports; he produces bales of cotton and bushels of wheat and products measured in pounds and tons. You may be misled by the dollar value of exports, and you may be misled on the total figures. The statisticians say that the volume is 25 per cent in excess of what it used to be before the war. But I have made a little compilation of the cotton situation, simply as an index. The exports from September 4 to November 27, 1920, were 1,481,450 bales—about the same as last year up to date. These 1,481,450 bales compare with the last prewar year, 1913, for the same period, when the amount was 3,837,139 bales, and the year before that it was 3,808,429 bales, and the year before that it was 3,710,514 bales.

And so on down the line, showing that we are not exporting within 2,000,000 bales of cotton of what we were before the war, and we are now trying to revive the War Finance Corporation so that it will help in the exportation of this and other commodities.

I am against adding other products, because we know that the basis of prosperity in this country is agriculture, and it is agriculture that needs help right now. They must have help now. They are laying their plans for their future crops, and they need to be financed. Mr. Meyer, in his testimony, said this when the War Finance Corporation closed. I asked the question of the Secretary of the Treasury if it should be revived whether he could show any preference in making loans, and he took the view that they could not. I think he is wrong. I think the board could say what loans they ought to make, but he takes a different view of it; and so we would be placed in the attitude, unless it is specified and pointed out to the War Finance Corporation that we wanted the agricultural interests taken care of, that they might make all these loans to some one else and aid other industries and not aid this that we think is vital and necessary at this time.

Here is what Mr. Meyer said:

> Under more or less similar arrangements the War Finance Corporation financed the export of $12,000,000 of wheat to Belgium and $5,000,000 of condensed milk to various countries in Europe. At the time that it was requested by the Secretary to suspend financing exports it had applications involving the export of $17,500,000 of copper—

That was not financed, because the War Finance Corporation closed—

> $2,200,000 fabricated steel to Italy; $5,000,000 "Black Patch" tobacco from Tennessee and Kentucky; $4,000,000 cotton to Czechoslovakia for a large southern exporter; $25,000,000 cotton to Czechoslovakia for a group of southern bankers; $3,000,000 for cotton to Italy by a group of bankers; $9,000,000 by a group of bankers for export of cotton to Italy; $24,000,000 for the export of cotton by a syndicate of banks headed by one of the largest national banks in the United States; $2,400,000 by a group of bankers for coal to Italy; $4,000,000 by a group of bankers for cotton to Italy; $4,000,000 for ships to be bought or constructed in this country for Italy—in all, $100,000,000 in applications promising practical results with adequate security, according to the opinion of the directors of the War Finance Corporation.

He said that the reason these loans had not been made to carry on the agricultural exports was because it was a slower process to get the loan arranged for them than for the others. So it is merely as a protection to this great interest upon which the prosperity of the country is based, namely, agriculture, that I think it should be pointed out specifically in the resolution to be taken up, and that in no way will it affect the board in making loans to other interests in the country. The effect of the passage of this resolution will be good. It should help the situation. The least we should do is to pass it, and do it now. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to some imports of grain into the country during the last month. I first wish to call attention to the fact that during the whole year of 1919 we imported 5,405,405 bushels of wheat. Now, that was a whole year's importation. In October of 1920, in a single month, we imported 10,517,528 bushels. A telephone message to the Department of Agriculture brings the response that in all probability the November importations will be at least 12,000,000 bushels. Thus, in a single month of 1920 we have imported twice as many bushels into the country as we imported in the 12 months constituting 1919.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to support by my vote the joint resolution introduced and which is in charge of my colleague. I am not certain that it will produce all that we would like to secure, but I do believe that it will be helpful in giving encouragement and confidence to the export business, and it may help us to export a few of the bushels of grain that we are now importing.

But why not apply an effective remedy? If a merchant finds that he can not sell half of his stock of goods that he now has on hand, he quits buying. Do Senators know of any reason why, when a Government finds that it has more goods than it can use in the United States and is attempting to find some place to sell them, that it should not also quit buying? Why should we be buying Canadian wheat at the rate of 10,000,000 to 12,000,000 bushels a month and at the same time be seeking for some method by which we can export not only that many bushels but in addition export our own surplus?

In other words, while we acknowledge that we have a surplus in the United States which must be exported, we are still allowing that surplus to be increased at the rate of 10,000,000 to 12,000,000 bushels per month.

I know a great many Senators are fearful of the word "embargo," but there has not come a single resolution from one of the commercial bodies of my State asking for relief which has not asked that an embargo be placed upon the importation of these articles. They seem to think that the President of the United States has the power under present law to declare an embargo. I do not think he has, I will say candidly. I do not know of any power that is imposed upon the President to apply an embargo restriction except in that contained in the anti-dumping law. In order to constitute dumping into the country it must be established that the product is being sold from the importing country for export cheaper than it is sold to its own citizens. I do not understand that that is the case in Canada.

Therefore I do not think, under the present law, that we could apply any embargo restrictions. But we can make the law. We can do it in a very few minutes if we see fit. We could pass it through the Senate if we saw fit. We could stop this enormous importation of wheat into the United States. There is a bill now before the Finance Committee or the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry asking that such embargo be placed for one year; of course, for a less time if we finally get a tariff bill that will prevent the excessive importation. That is reaching the situation right where it is. The trouble is we have too much grain in the United States for home consumption and we are adding to that trouble by increasing the number of bushels at the rate of about 10,000,000 to 12,000,000 per month.

Now, Mr. President, I hope we will get some benefit from the joint resolution under discussion. I have little faith, I admit, but I think there is an opportunity for it to do some good. I have tried to ascertain how we are going to get the money, because that, after all, is the real crux of the situation. We say "give credit to Germany and Austria." I hope we can do it. I hope we can take the obligations of those Governments and furnish them with the money, but where are we going to get the money? That is the question. If the banks have loaned to the limit of their ability on the basis of safety we can not get it from the banks.

We hope to sell bonds. The bonds, if they can not be bought by the banks, will have to be bought by the public, by the people generally; but if the banks have not got the money the people have not got the money, because what they have is in the banks as a rule. I do not think they will subscribe very liberally at the present time even for bonds to furnish money to buy these crops, though I hope they will. But what little it can do, if it is only a very little, ought to be done. Anything that we can do in relieving the situation ought to be done.

We ought to apply any remedy that we think will be in the slightest degree effective; but I again suggest that the most important remedy, a remedy that would be quickly effective and would show its effectiveness in an immediate response by way of an increased price of these products, would be to prevent their importation.

We can not get anything for our wool; wool is coming into the country in enormous quantities; and I am informed—and I believe credibly—that the Australian and New Zealand and Argentine wool crop is now ready to be thrown into the country in greater quantities than ever before. Now, I simply say that so long as we have enough wheat in the United States to supply the American people with flour for a full year, and then some to spare, I would stop the importation of wheat under the present exigencies. If we have wool enough in the United States to make all the clothes that we shall need for the next year—and I am informed that we have—I would stop the importations of wool until the farmers could get a price that would allow them at least to buy the cloth with which to clothe themselves.

The situation, Mr. President, is a most serious one, and I have not as yet heard of any remedy which I think will be adequate to meet it. The remedy of an embargo would be more valuable than any other possible remedy at the present time. If we can not get that, I shall cheerfully vote for the pending joint resolution, from which we hope to secure at least some benefit.

Mr. HARRIS. I offer an amendment to the joint resolution, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, section 2, line 16, it is proposed to strike out the words "the lowest possible rate of interest" and to insert "not exceeding 6 per cent per annum."

Mr. HARRIS. I will ask the Secretary to read the section as it would stand with the amendment which I have proposed inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The READING CLERK. As proposed to be amended, the section would read:

SEC. 2. That the Federal Reserve Board is hereby directed to take such action as may be necessary to permit the member banks of the Federal Reserve System, in accordance with law and consistent with sound banking, to grant liberal extensions of credit to the farmers of the country upon the security of the agricultural products now held by them by permitting the rediscounting of such notes of extension at not exceeding 6 per cent per annum.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I desire to state that I should favor the rate of 5 per cent interest instead of 6, but I think the amendment I have offered will meet objections which have already been urged against section 2. In my State the legal rate of interest is 8 per cent and the discount rate of the Federal reserve bank is 7 per cent. Many of the smaller banks in my State are not willing to take the risk for the difference in the rate of interest. For that reason many of our farmers are not getting accommodations in carrying their crops which they otherwise would get if the rediscount rate were made lower.

The distressing financial condition in the agricultural sections of our country, especially in the South and West, can, in my judgment, be relieved to a great extent by the Federal reserve banks reducing their rediscount rate and by resumption of the activities of the War Finance Corporation. In Georgia, my home State, many farmers have been unable to borrow money and hold their cotton for prices anything like the cost of production, and are selling it to-day at less than half what it cost to produce. The rediscount rate charged by the Federal reserve banks is 7 per cent and the legal rate of interest in Georgia is 8 per cent. With unsettled conditions, many of the Georgia banks were unwilling to loan a large amount on cotton for a profit of only 1 per cent; they claim the risk is too great.

My amendment reduces the rediscount rate of the Federal reserve banks to not exceeding 6 per cent. I would gladly make it 5 per cent, but it would meet serious opposition in the Senate, and I hope the Federal reserve banks will not exceed that amount. If they make the rediscount rates to the banks at even 6 per cent, the banks of the South would loan to the farmers the necessary money to hold their cotton for prices that would enable them to sell at a price equal to the cost of production, and aid the farmers in selling cotton to the European countries at a fair price. The world is in greater need of cotton than ever before. There is less cotton on hand to-day, considering the needs of the world for cotton goods, than ever before in our history. The Federal reserve banks were not organized to make money, but to meet conditions that exist at this time.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I do not intend to take any great length of time of the Senate in discussing the pending joint resolution. I think a majority of the Senators present see the necessity for the action contemplated by the proposed legislation. The situation is such that no one can be dogmatic as to what has caused the present conditions, nor can he accurately forecast the future. There are, however, some causes which have contributed to the present unfortunate situation with which we are all acquainted and which we appreciate. There are certain forces that were not in operation heretofore, even before the war, which have tended to bring about a condition which the Federal Reserve Board and other authorities thought it was their duty to correct.

I do not read very well from manuscript; I should prefer to speak in reference to this matter just as I feel about it; but in order not to allow the feelings which I have on this subject to influence what I have to say, I shall now read from manuscript some observations in reference to the causes which have brought about existing conditions.

The condition that now obtains throughout the country is not the result alone of post-war forces; perhaps in a way it is brought about in a less degree by post-war forces than by certain other influences.

Our Federal Reserve System in 1914 supplanted our old banking and currency system. It perhaps became a workable plan, or, in other words, the machinery and the principle of the Federal Reserve System got into practicable operation about 1915. It was a radical departure from the old system in that it placed in the hands of the Government the control of the banking business of this country. This necessarily gave to the Federal Reserve Board and the officers of the regional banks almost unlimited power in the control of the currency of the country, so that whatever attitude they assumed toward finance and commerce was immediately and powerfully effective throughout the Nation and the world. On account of our almost unlimited resources available, geographical position, and the combination of other fortunate circumstances, together with this new and wonderful system of banking, the main feature of which system was its elasticity and its power to mobilize or capitalize the resources of the country, we easily and rapidly became the bankers of the world. Money, gold, and credits poured into this country from Europe especially, and elsewhere, during the war in exchange for our commodities and foreign securities for our credits. The result was an unusual demand for our commodities and unusual facilities for liquifying or cashing them. Prices rose in this country to unusual points, partly because of the unusual demand caused by the war, and partly because of our new system of banking.

After the armistice was declared it was natural to suppose that there would be a readjustment, but no one ever dreamed that we had first to paralyze commerce, bankrupt agriculture and all producing and commodity handling institutions, before we should again assume the sane and normal function of business. We seem to have acted on the principle the old farmer announced when in attempting to burn out the débris that had accumulated around an old wooden rail fence he burned up the fence. He consoled himself for his loss by saying that he had a nice clean place to build a new one.

There is no justification whatever for the present condition of affairs in this country. As I see it, the causes are so manifest that one need not be surprised that we are in the condition in which we find ourselves. The causes as I see them are these:

First. The power to expand or to operate the elasticity of our currency system necessarily carries with it the power to contract. Those Government officials clothed with this power have in their hands the fate of the commerce of this country. The influence that they exercise determines in a large degree the prosperity or the depression of our commercial and industrial life. The business men, the bankers, and the financiers of this country are more or less dependent upon it and, consequently, are influenced by the action and attitude of our Government officials in charge of our exchange system. When, therefore, it was announced and reiterated that the policy of our Federal Reserve System was to deflate the currency, to restrict credits, it naturally had an immediate effect upon everyone engaged in business. Under modern conditions the close and intimate relation of every kind and character of business and commerce makes it well-nigh impossible radically to affect one without in greater or less degree affecting every other one likewise and in like manner. Consumer and producer are not in distinct classes, but each one is both. The producer of one article is the consumer of another, and so there is no line of cleavage between the two classes. The policy thus announced was vigorously put into operation. The banks were insistently required to call certain classes of loans and the rate of rediscount was made very high. In addition to this and apparently for the purpose of carrying out the same policy, the War Finance Corporation was discontinued. This corporation was created by Congress to meet the very condition that now exists, and the amendment adopted to the original act in the latter part of the last session had a similar object in view.

It appears from the testimony of Mr. Meyer before the hearing of the Agricultural Committee on Senate joint resolution 212 that—

> There were being negotiated at the time of the discontinuance of the War Finance Corporation applications involving the export of $17,500,000 of copper, $2,200,000 fabricating steel to Italy, $5,000,000 "Black Patch" tobacco from Tennessee and Kentucky, $4,000,000 cotton to Czechoslovakia from a large southern exporter, $25,000,000 of cotton to Czechoslovakia for a group of southern bankers, $3,000,000 for cotton to Italy by a group of bankers, $9,000,000 cotton by a group of bankers to Italy, $24,000,000 for the export of cotton by a syndicate of bankers headed by one of the largest national banks in the United States, $2,400,000 by a group of bankers for coal to Italy, $4,000,000 by a group of bankers for cotton to Italy, $4,000,000 for ships to be bought and constructed in this country for Italy. In all $100,000,000 in applications, promising practical results, with adequate security according to the opinion of the directors of the Finance Corporation.

He says further in reference to the above:

> These are not repetitions; they are separate applications. * * * In addition to these definite purposes various other negotiations are under way for further extensive loans, which, no doubt, would have materialized in large financing of exports of various kinds of American products.

Therefore it is not surprising that we find ourselves in the condition now prevalent.

Just let me take for a moment the situation as it is. There is not a Senator here who does not know that there is nothing half so sensitive as capital; money, cash, is the most timid of all the agencies used in commerce. Therefore, when by the act creating the Federal Reserve Board we made the financing of the country a Government function it goes without saying that the attitude of those having it in charge immediately affects every commercial and financial interest of the country. When the board announced its policy of contraction of credits and raised the rate of its discount, and then pari passu with that the War Finance Corporation was discontinued, notice was served on the public that the very center and source of the Nation's circulating medium was adverse to any further expansion of business, or at least were in favor of its contraction along such lines as they themselves deemed necessary.

With the announced policy of our banking governors to restrict credits, to deflate prices, and the chairman of the War Finance Corporation, the Secretary of the Treasury, arbitrarily discontinuing the operation of the War Finance Corporation, the whole business world was filled with apprehension, skepticism, and the effect is the condition under which we now find ourselves. It has been pointed out that during this period the credits extended have equaled to or exceeded the period of prosperity just preceding.

In the colloquy I had this morning with a number of Senators it was pointed out that in certain sections of the country credits are equal to or in excess of the credits during the period preceding deflation.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the trouble is our excessive bond issues. Under the law we made the bonds issued by the Government eligible to rediscount at the Federal reserve banks and to become the basis of the issuance of Federal reserve notes. At the time of the passage of that law there were less than a billion dollars of United States bonds outstanding; to-day there are approximately $25,000,000,000 of bonds outstanding. Those who bought the bonds and received credit at the banks for carrying them were assured that they would not be charged up to the commercial accounts of those thus borrowing. Farmers, merchants, bankers, business men throughout the country took these bonds in the small banks on that assurance. Now the rate of rediscount on these bonds has been raised, and they have been transferred to the commercial accounts; and I am going to insist that the officials here give me a statement as to what per cent of the so-called loans extended to the agricultural centers of this country consists of transferring bonds to commercial accounts and what per cent consists of actual commercial credits granted for real commercial purposes.

It seems to be the policy of this Government at this time to be solicitous of and to take care of those who own bonds, while the actual producing classes of the country, upon whom its prosperity depends, must be restricted in credit for fear of inflation of the currency through the extension of credit on the bonds. We ought fearlessly and bravely to meet that issue, and to take some action taking care of the bonds owned by those who bought them in good faith, and not have them placed against the commercial credits of this country. I understand that it has been the universal practice of the banks to transfer these bond credits to the commercial account.

I do not believe that we would have had any such condition as that now confronting us had the policy of those having these matters in charge been such as to inspire confidence rather than fear and apprehension. With practically all of the raw material of this country now at prices far below the cost of production, and some of them with no market at all, the future does not look very inviting. With the tremendous obligations of this Government to be met, and those who are to produce the material out of which the ultimate wealth of this country must come broken and bankrupt, the probabilities are that our deficit will be doubled and trebled rather than gradually diminished. The estimates of the income of the Government, based upon incomes and profits, will have to be revised; and if a sales tax should be imposed, with the purchasing power of the country at large practically destroyed, the expectations of those advocating such a tax also will be disappointing.

There has been criticism of the seeming tendency or of the actual fact of the country coming to Congress for relief in this situation. Why should it not, when by an act of Congress the control of the situation was made a Government function? I am not adversely criticizing the act of Congress that made the banking of the country practically a Government function. I consider the Federal reserve act one of the greatest pieces of constructive legislation ever passed, and I believe it is our hope now, if properly and wisely used. The world needs all the staple products that we can produce. It may not have the cash to pay, but surely the energies of these nations, the man power, the brain power, plus the material resources of the several nations, are adequate security for the extension of such credit as we may allow them to use our resources to our benefit.

The War Finance Corporation act was passed to enable us wisely and efficiently, broadly and impartially, to meet this very situation; to extend credit to our corporations upon adequate security, and to foreigners upon like security, without favoritism and without special interests being served.

As showing the attitude of the English Government with regard to this very problem, I quote from a news item to one of our news services in this country:

> We have had the privilege of a confidential talk with a gentleman close to Lloyd-George and a participant in the councils of the Government, regarding the politico-commercial policy to be pursued. We report the interview substantially as follows:
> "The British Government's confidential reports and figures show that other countries, previously among her best customers, are now crying for goods, and that these countries could absorb the entire maximum exportable production of the United Kingdom. Nevertheless, the dislocation of the natural relations of supply and demand has resulted in the building up of a great volume of surplus supplies in England which can not be moved. The official figures placed before the cabinet show that Great Britain is trading feebly, if at all, with nations of the white race aggregating 300,000,000 people. The Government can not run the risk of social unrest involved in a stoppage of industry and commerce. It is its first duty to assure the prosperity of its own people. It will, therefore, reopen trade with any part of the world where trade can be got, irrespective of protests.
> "Conversations of an important character have taken place unofficially and informally between industrial leaders and members of the cabinet to consider concrete means for stabilizing particular industries which are threatened in the immediate future not only with severe curtailment but with actual closing down. Lack of purchasing power in foreign markets, adverse and fluctuating exchange, money stringency, exaggerated agitations against profiteering, and restriction of credit were adduced as factors which had undermined confidence."

I presume that in England the very same propaganda had been spread broadcast as in this country; that there was undue profiteering, and that there had to be a reduction of the existing currency.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. KING. I hope I did not misunderstand the Senator. Does the Senator seek to convey the view that there has not been undue profiteering in the United States; that prices have not been maintained at too high a level?

Before the Senator answers that, may I suggest to him that contrary to what one might expect, when the armistice was signed, instead of prices going down gradually and steadily and persistently until they reached a proper level there was a slight sagging and then a rise, and that rise continued until quite recently, as a result of which, it seems to me, the prices everywhere in commodities and perhaps in labor were entirely too high, and were abnormal. Does the Senator seek to convey the idea that there ought not to have been a reduction in commodity prices and in prices generally in the United States following the war?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I answer the Senator by saying that I think the reduction in prices should have been governed by the law of supply and demand, and that it was no part of a governmental function to go out and state that prices must come down. That was for the business world to do. Especially was that unfortunate when the Government at that time had the machinery conveyed to it by law by which it could enforce radically, and as the result shows disastrously, its decrees.

Answering specifically the Senator's question about profiteering, I think there was and always will be profiteering, but I think that the cry against profiteering in this country was largely exaggerated. I will explain what I mean by saying that the little bootblack got 15 cents for shining a pair of shoes when heretofore he had gotten 5 cents; so that from the bootblack to the highest commercial interest there was a tremendous rise in the price, and a larger volume of currency was necessary to liquidate it. The very genius of the Federal Reserve System was that when there was a vast amount of commodities in this country there would be an adequate circulating medium to represent them, and not the old, rigid, inflexible rule of 1863. That would have enhanced values had it been allowed to operate as we who passed the law thought it would operate. That, in conjunction with war conditions, did inflate prices; but prices would have been deflated by the very course of trade without making the world believe that the Government had set its face against a further continuance, right or wrong, of these conditions; because, as I said before, you could not pick out certain businesses and refuse credit to them without destroying the whole commercial structure.

We have a law against cornering; we have a law against undue restraint of trade; and that was sufficient without the fear that was cast into the hearts of the world at large by the radical procedure of raising the rate of discount and denying credit, and creating the sentiment of fear and apprehension. I think the War Finance Corporation was one of the most splendidly conceived ideas, in that it supplemented the Federal Reserve System by looking after the kinds of paper, foreign and domestic, that might be received and discounted, and doing it impartially as a governmental function and an aid to corporations that otherwise might not be able to get it, enabling them to do business and create healthful competition.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will still pardon me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina further yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. KING. I venture to suggest to the Senator the fact that for months following the armistice, more particularly during the latter part of 1919 and the beginning of 1920, not only in both branches of Congress but throughout the United States, there was a persistent demand that prices should fall, and appeals were made to Congress for legislation that would call for a fall in prices. The Senator will recall that the President of the United States communicated with Congress, and suggested certain remedies which should be adopted for the purpose of bringing down prices to a proper level, and Congress was very much interested in that; and, as I recall, numerous hearings were ordered either in this branch or in the other branch for the purpose of determining what legislation should be enacted in order to bring prices down.

I do not think there has been any deflation. As a matter of fact, the Senator, I am sure, knows that the amount of paper rediscounted by the Federal reserve banks has been very much greater in 1920 than in 1919; and the Senator knows that hundreds of millions of dollars have gone into new enterprises—indeed, that the list of incorporations of new enterprises in 1920 has scarcely been exceeded in the history of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, Mr. President, I do not know that I shall accede to the statement that more loans have been extended and more paper rediscounted. That is a proposition that it would take more time than I would care to consume this afternoon in going over, and in referring to this very bond proposition to which I have called the attention of the Senate. In my own time I am going to lay before the Congress the facts as to what per cent of the so-called loans extended consists in commercializing these bond loans, rather than in letting them stand on their own bottom.

This quotation continues:

It was brought out that a congestion of goods has blocked the flow of trade, and that the situation was so serious that some of the oldest and strongest merchandising firms in London will find it difficult to meet their obligations unless given relief. It was decided in the conferences that the clot of goods must be removed. The general solution proposed was to ship these goods to countries which have an exportable surplus of raw materials, but which require credit and organization such as can not be supplied adequately by private firms, but which could be dealt with if the Government enthusiastically assisted associations of business men. It was urged that the Treasury officials had assumed an obstructionary attitude toward the British export credit scheme. It was decided that this attitude must be changed at once. The crisis in all its phases was presented to Sir Robert Horne, president of the board of trade, who will set the pace for the other Government departments. The administration in liberal terms of money of credits already voted by Parliament for meeting exactly just such a position will be pushed forward without great delay. It is regarded as reproductive expenditure in the national interest, and bold policies on broad lines may be expected.

The last and closing paragraph of this seems to me should be the attitude of those who have the welfare of this country at heart. It is as follows:

The theory animating the whole process will be that a pound of sterling spent abroad in creating conditions to rehabilitate exchange of goods and to restore the economic balance of nations will be worth 10 pounds of sterling spent in the United Kingdom.

Mr. SIMMONS. From what was the Senator reading?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I was reading from a communication sent to this country by one closely associated with Lloyd-George and the Parliament of Great Britain, showing the policy of that country in regard to the present crisis, which seems to be similar to that in this country.

Mr. President, whatever else may be said, this fact stands out paramount, that the attitude of our governmental officials has gone further than I believe it should go. They started an avalanche which they are unable to check, and Congress alone has the power to restore confidence to the American people, by showing that they are in sympathy with any move which will look toward aiding them in getting their exports abroad, and at least receiving the cost of production in this country.

Talk about there not being money! We financed a $26,000,000,000 war in order to save our country from being ruined by the influx of an alien foe; yet, when the war is over, with our resources practically untouched, with our recuperative power unimpaired, with the development of our country still as potential as ever, we are confronted with the statement that we are powerless to even capitalize or even aid those who are not only to spell the prosperity of this country, but upon whom the prosperity of the world largely depends.

Wealth is not money; credit is an evidence of confidence, and real wealth is no more money than a biscuit is a gold dollar. We have destroyed the confidence of the people and of the commercial and the financial world, and what we should do here in this body is to give voice to the sentiment that to the fullest extremity this Government will come to the rescue of those who produce the raw material, who by the very nature of the case are the first to suffer.

We do not even retard the operation of a natural law by any artificial laws we may pass, and things will move along the line of least resistance in every department of the universe, and the first to feel the effects of these restrictions of credit and these demands that there be a contraction of the currency was the man who had no resources, but had the commodity which the other could realize out of, and the consequence has been that cattle and sheep and hogs, farm products in every form, have fallen below the cost of production, and the farmer left helpless and alone. We seem to have forgotten that he made his crop at the peak of prices, and that his only way to recoup is to get out of the sale of this present crop at least the cost of production. He has no other way to recoup himself. Every other business has some manner by which it can recoup its losses by sale; but the farmer, when he has made his crop, has in it the investment of the high-priced material that he made it with, and when he sells it at a loss, it is gone forever. It is for that class that I am standing here to-day and pleading, for the man whose crop is still to be sold, the man who is now obtaining a price that would not give him anything like the cost of production.

The second part of this joint resolution, as pointed out here by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], was to call attention to the fact that the agricultural classes of this country, under the governmental function of the Federal Reserve Board, should be granted a lower rate of interest on properly executed agricultural paper than any other class of our commercial life, because upon them depends, in the last analysis, the ultimate success of every other business in this country.

I do not believe there should be a modification of section 2, but I would not object if the desire of those who wish it were carried out; but, so far as the intent and purpose of it is concerned, it is as essential as section 1, to serve notice on the Federal Reserve Board that the people of this country recognize that agriculture is in a class to itself and more helpless than others, and that therefore they should have a preferential rate, in order to feed and clothe the masses of this country and aid in feeding and clothing the starving nations of Europe. I believe it would be a good business policy and a piece of good statesmanship if we should furnish them money to run their business without interest at all, because enough interest would be made out of the manufactured proceeds of what they produce to more than repay the country, and I hope, Mr. President, that both these provisions of this joint resolution will pass.

It is very easy for us to sit off at a long distance and talk about the farmer being independent, and talk about him taking along with other people his losses. There is not another business in America to-day, practically speaking, that is not organized to protect itself, except the farming classes of America. And whether you will have it so or not, Congress is the only organization the farmer can now look to for a fair and square deal in protecting him from the encroachments of organized power, and that is the reason these two amendments are here.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I am pleased to note the strong expressions of approval on the part of Senators of the purpose of this resolution. Its passage will bring about what I, with certain other Senators, sought to accomplish last summer, and will, I hope and believe, help the farmers of the country to protect themselves in some measure at least against further losses from the condition it seeks to remedy.

I do not share the doubts entertained by some as to the effectiveness of the revival of the War Finance Corporation for the purposes expressed in the resolution as a means of mitigating the agricultural situation, nor do I share the apprehension likewise expressed that its revival will involve the withdrawal of large sums from the Treasury needed to meet the obligations of the Government. In support of these doubts and apprehensions it is said that the only fund that will be practically available to the corporation, if revived, is the $375,000,000 now standing to its credit on the books of the Treasury, and as to this fund it is claimed that while its withdrawal for this purpose at the present time would be embarrassing to the Treasury the amount would be inadequate to accomplish any substantial relief.

It is also argued that the comparatively small amount loaned by this corporation during the war, when operating under its war powers, to banks on advances made by them to industries whose operations were necessary or contributory to the war shows it was not a potential factor in accomplishing its original purpose. Again, it is alleged that the even smaller amounts loaned by it to finance our exports under the amendment to the original act of March 3, 1919, was of little assistance in promoting and facilitating these exportations.

In my judgment, none of these several contentions are justified by the facts. Let me briefly review the situation with respect to these several matters:

When this Government-owned corporation was created the war industries it was intended to aid were having serious difficulty in getting advances, either from banks or from private investors, because they feared in the conditions then existing they would be unable to rediscount their paper.

But when this corporation was organized for the purpose of financing these very industries with the Government practically behind it, with a paid-in capital of $500,000,000, all subscribed and owned by the Government, and with a potential loaning power of $3,000,000,000, these apprehensions were removed, and the resulting confidence produced a situation with respect to credits which made resort to the War Finance Corporation unnecessary, and as a result of this psychological effect the corporation was called on but to a limited extent for help.

Again, shortly after the armistice, we were suddenly confronted by a serious situation in our foreign trade on account of the unsettled conditions in Europe. Exportations of our products to those countries was arrested because of the inability of the banks and private investors to extend the credit needed to enable these countries to buy our products. To meet this situation, on March 3, 1919, we amended the act creating this corporation, and it was authorized to extend credit to banks making loans to finance exportations. The psychological effect in this instance, as in the other instance I have just referred to, was the same. It inspired confidence in investment in securities based upon bank advances on exports and it was again found unnecessary to resort to the corporation for any great amount of credit.

The same thing happened shortly after the beginning of the European war, when, on account of the temporary embargo upon exportations of our agricultural products, the price of these products fell until there was practically no market for many of them. This was especially true with reference to cotton. There was practically no buyers on the market for it. Cotton fell to 5 cents. That meant there ceased to be a market for cotton in this country. That, of course, created a situation in the South both grave and menacing. To meet this emergency and avert this threatened disaster the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, announced that he was prepared to deposit $500,000,000 by way of deposit in the banks of the South and the West, if necessary, to protect the cotton and wheat growers, not to withhold these products from the market but hold them until there was a market for them. The effect of this action of Secretary McAdoo was electrical. Banks and the private investors came at once to the relief of the farmers, and, as I recall it, it was not necessary for the Secretary to deposit but a very limited amount—about fifty millions of the sum mentioned—for the purpose of protecting the farmers in these sections from threatened ruin.

Mr. President, until about the middle of May of this year, when the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Houston, suspended the operation of this corporation under the amendment of March 3, 1919, we were having no serious difficulty about financing our exports, and the business of the country was moving smoothly. Shortly after this corporation ceased to function business and credit conditions began gradually to become unsettled and unsatisfactory, and conditions grew rapidly worse when in September the Federal Reserve Board promulgated certain suggestions to reserve and member banks intended to bring about deflation and restrictions in credits. Mr. President, as a result of the present financial and credit situation the farmers are threatened with ruin largely because of financial and export conditions practically the same as existed at the time the adoption on March 3, 1919, of the amendment to the finance corporation when McAdoo came to their assistance in 1914. Early in September the Secretary of the Treasury was appealed to to revive this corporation that it might function in the emergency then so ominously threatening to bankrupt the farmers of the South.

It was urged in this behalf that the crops were just beginning to move and that it was of the utmost importance that the channels of foreign trade in these products should be kept open. At the same time a relaxation in the restrictions on credits was urged upon both the Secretary of the Treasury and the Reserve Board. Now, Mr. President, the farmers of the country believe that if the War Finance Corporation had then been rehabilitated and the stringent rules of credit had then been modified in behalf of loans made to enable them to have protected themselves temporarily until market conditions could be stabilized, while there doubtless would have been substantial reductions in the price of farm products, the disastrous slump which followed his refusal would have been avoided.

The present distressing situation of the farmers does not affect agriculture alone. It affects practically every other industry in the country. It is estimated that as a result of these conditions our farming population has suffered a loss in purchasing power aggregating between six and eight billion dollars as compared with last year. It is impossible that this condition should not affect those engaged in other industries. Every man engaged in making and selling goods and wares will of necessity feel the effect. If the farmer is ruined, the manufacturer, the merchant, the wholesaler, the jobber, and the laborer will have in the end to bear their share of the general depression which will follow. For a time they may minimize or ward off the blow, but it will inevitably come.

Those of us who are advocating this measure believe that the rehabilitation of the War Finance Corporation, thus affording the farmers of this country a credit to which they can resort of one and a half billion of dollars and a reasonable modification of the credit policy of the reserve banks in behalf of agricultural products, will materially help in the present situation. If this legislation was intended or calculated to help the farmers alone or to help them to the injury of some other industry or interest, it might be open to the charge that it is class legislation, but it is not and does not. It is not class legislation to help the farming industry, because this legislation in helping this basic industry to protect itself against ruin and keep on its feet will at the same time help to relieve the universal depression in every line of business which in a large part has been brought about by the overwhelming misfortune which has befallen our agricultural population and the disaster which is certain to befall every industry if help is not promptly extended to the producers of the raw material essential to the other great industries of the country.

Mr. President, I wish to address myself for a few minutes to the suggestion and argument urged here and elsewhere that the rehabilitation of the War Finance Corporation will mean the withdrawal, greatly to the embarrassment of the Treasury, of large sums of money on deposit in that institution of the Government to its credit. I do not believe there is anything in this contention, because I do not believe it will be necessary for that corporation, if reestablished, except for a very short period in the beginning of its operations, to withdraw from the Treasury any considerable amount of the $385,000,000 now to its credit. Of course, I know it would be inconvenient, not to say somewhat embarrassing, at this time to have that amount of its funds now available to meet current expenses of the Government withdrawn for other purposes. I realize that.

But, as I have said, I have no idea that that will be necessary, and I am confident whatever part of it may have to be temporarily withdrawn will be returned as soon as the corporation can get its machinery in active operation again and place its bonds on the market.

There will, I think, be no difficulty now, as there was none when it heretofore offered them, in selling the bonds of this corporation. It is a corporation every dollar of the capital stock of which is owned by the Government, and while the Government is not legally liable, there is a general feeling that the Government is morally bound, and therefore would not allow any holder of its securities to suffer loss. This corporation, if revived, will, under the amendment of March 3, 1919, have authority to issue bonds to the amount of a billion dollars. Mr. Meyer, the able former managing director of this corporation, in his statement before the Agricultural Committee, said it sold while in operation about $200,000,000 of its bonds without serious trouble, and predicted an easy market for them now. But it is said that bonds may not sell so easily now as then. Mr. President, if not, why not? Certainly not because of any lack of available money, for there never was as much money in the United States for investment in safe securities as there is to-day. It may not be in circulation, unfortunately, but it is here in even larger quantity than last year, when everybody's pockets were bulging with money and our enormous excess of exports has increased the amount then in pocket. The funds available from the sale of these would make this corporation abundantly able, in cooperation with the Edge law export corporations recently authorized and that now are being formed in the different sections of the country, to finance the situation we have now under consideration.

Mr. President, without reference to the cause of the trouble I think no one acquainted with the facts will deny the serious plight in which the agricultural classes to-day find themselves.

Bad as it undoubtedly is in the grain and live-stock producing sections it is even, as I have before intimated, worse in the cotton and tobacco growing States of the South. Indeed it would be difficult to overstate the seriousness of the situation which confronts the farmers of these States.

Such part of their crops as they have by force of circumstances already been compelled to sell, has brought less than one-half the cost of production and in many cases less than the cost of the fertilizer used in their production, and if they are forced to sell the balance for prices now obtaining the part unsold will likewise fall far below the cost of production.

The tenant classes, and they are numerous, who raise their crops largely under mortgage or lien, have in most instances had to turn over their whole crops to the fertilizer and supply men and are left practically without anything to start upon the next crop. The landlord, who generally indorses the obligations of his tenants for fertilizer and supplies, in many instances finds the liability thus incurred exceeds his rents. It can not be said in any true sense that there is or has been during this fall a market in the South for either tobacco or cotton. The extreme money stringency which has prevailed there since early in September has driven from the markets to a great extent the local or so-called independent buyers who have heretofore bought and exported largely of these products, thus maintaining competitive conndditions and stabilizing the market.

Whatever the cause of these conditions and whoever may be responsible for them, I think it will be admitted they lend themselves to the exploitation of the speculator and make easy the monopolization of the market, if it may be called a market, for the product by a few great exporting and industrial corporations backed by unlimited money and credit, who deal in these raw commodities, and invites a drive to capture the crops of this great section of our country at starvation prices.

Let those who fear if money is loaned the farmers on their cotton they will hold it from the market for higher prices to the injury of the consumer not overlook the fact that those who are now buying it for half cost are much more likely in due time by the same process to exploit the consumer to a much greater extent than the farmer could.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DIAL in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. THOMAS obtained the floor.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to present at this time a proposed amendment to the joint resolution?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. SPENCER. I send to the desk a proposed amendment in the nature of a substitute for the pending joint resolution, which at the proper time I shall move.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. SPENCER is to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That in the judgment of the Congress the War Finance Corporation should resume its operations.

SEC. 2. That the Federal Reserve Board should fully cooperate in such renewed activities of the War Finance Corporation.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the address of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] indicates the excitement under which the Senate, in common with the country, is now laboring. It will explain, and possibly excuse, the speed with which the pending joint resolution has been reported out of the committee and laid before the Senate for immediate consideration. It discloses a state of mind almost hysterical in character, under the influence of which we propose to legislate in the direction indicated by would-be beneficiaries and take chances upon a successful issue. We are not dispassionately considering a very important proposal by giving it that careful and exhaustive investigation which should precede any measure designed to bring the Government to the financial aid of a portion of its people at the expense of the remainder.

At the last session of the present Congress the question of the high cost of living constituted one of our great problems, and each political party was casting or attempting to cast upon the other the responsibility for its existence. For a period long anterior to the commencement of the German war the country was confronted with a continued and progressive rise in prices, under the operation of which the great majority of the American people were suffering and some of them intensely. Those living upon fixed incomes, upon salaries, and upon wages found it difficult to meet the requirements which these prices imposed upon the necessities of life, and their suffering was almost universal. They erroneously held the Government responsible for these conditions and clamored for relief, a clamor to which we quite as erroneously responded, sometimes by the enactment of legislation aimed at its consequences instead of its causes.

Some of us thought that these inflated price conditions could not continue. Some of us warned the country from this floor that the reaction would come, inevitably, and with it a period of suffering, and possibly of disaster. We were justified in this attitude by the history of other nations and of other crises. We called attention to the operation of a law as inexorable as the law of gravitation, and to the folly of avoiding or repealing that law by human statutes. We realized that the evil was a great one. In discussion the cause of it was frequently, perhaps I may say generally, ascribed to the speculators and the profiteers, to the cornering of the market, and sometimes to the destruction of necessities in order that the supply might not overcome the demand.

During the campaign the Republican Party charged the Democratic Party with responsibility for the high cost of living, and seem to have proven their case pretty effectually, if one may judge from the ultimate result. The Democrats countered by the same process of crimination and recrimination, but all contended against the evil. Inasmuch as the Republican platform has been confirmed by the popular verdict, I may refer to it:

The prime cause of the "high cost of living" has been first and foremost a 50 per cent depreciation in the purchasing power of the dollar, due to a gross expansion of our currency and credit. Reduced production, burdensome taxation, swollen profits, and the increased demand for goods arising from a fictitious but enlarged buying power have been contributing causes in a greater or less degree.

That is but another way of saying that the high cost of living was due to inflation, and of course it was more largely due to that condition than to any other.

Then follows a condemnation of—

The unsound fiscal policies of the Democratic administration, which have brought these things to pass, and their attempts to impute the consequences to minor and secondary causes. Much of the injury wrought is irreparable. There is no short way out, and we decline to deceive the people with vain promises or quack remedies. But as the political party that throughout its history has stood for honest money and sound finance, we pledge ourselves to earnest and consistent attack upon the high cost of living by rigorous avoidance of further inflation in our Government borrowing, by courageous and intelligent deflation of overexpanded credit and currency, by encouragement of heightened production of goods and services, by prevention of unreasonable profits, by exercise of public economy and stimulation of private thrift, and by revision of war-imposed taxes unsuited to peace-time economy.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, which platform is that?

Mr. THOMAS. This is the Republican platform.

Mr. McLEAN. The other is very much the same.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, yes. The only difference is that each seeks to "pass the buck" to the other as regards the responsibility for these conditions.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. So far as the buck will pass.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Then follows a condemnation by the Republican Party of the Democratic Party for "failure impartially to enforce the antiprofiteering laws," to which the Democrats counter by pledging the party to—a policy of strict economy in Government expenditures and to the enactment and enforcement of such legislation as may be required to bring profiteers before the bar of criminal justice.

The same old cry, so far as strict economy is concerned, on the part of both parties. It is remarkable that the people have stood the repetition of that rot so long. There is no intention, no desire, no purpose on the part of either of the great parties to practice economy, and the people would not let them do so if they attempted it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, in 1909 and 1910, I believe, I served on a committee investigating the high cost of living—even at that time.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, as I stated at the opening, the high cost of living has been a problem growing out of a condition that began to manifest itself long before 1909, due very largely to inflation, as represented by our constantly increasing indebtedness—I mean State indebtedness, public-utility indebtedness, and municipal indebtedness—and also by an extension of the activities of the Government, requiring added revenue, and consequently added sources of revenue, for the National Treasury.

Mr. President, in the discussion of this subject—that is to say, the high cost of living—which used to come up here every morning, we were substantially agreed that inflation must cease before high prices would disappear or even dwindle, and we were also agreed that production on one hand and thrift upon the other were the essentials to this change, and we also advised the public not to buy when they could help it. I had the honor to make a speech upon that subject, I think last April, which attracted some attention throughout the country, and which succeeded the so-called overalls program, aimed at this identical condition, and as a protest against the price of clothing. It seems that the people to a far greater degree than we supposed have followed the advice thus given, so that a decline in the retail business of the country soon became apparent. It may be that instead of following this counsel the purchasing power of the consumer has reached its climax; but, at any rate, the change came, and about that time came the collapse in Japan, where the identical preceding conditions had been in operation until the commerce and the buying power of the people could stand it no longer, whereupon the banks were obliged to curtail credit, the huge structures of speculative business collapsed, and that great empire found itself in the throes of a panic. Again the warning was sounded in this country by its thoughtful and experienced people, who perceived in this the beginning of the change soon to occur in our very midst.

About this time the Federal Reserve Board raised the rate of discount, if my memory serves me correctly; and, with all due respect to the opinions of Senators differing from me here, I think the only mistake made by that board was in postponing such action so long. If this new system of banking is to function as it was designed to function, then it must exercise its power to raise the rate of discount for the purpose of preventing speculation and reducing credits, just as it is expected to relax that policy by a reduction of the rate of discount when more money is needed and greater credit should be extended; and, in my judgment, no man familiar with the condition of affairs in this country from the armistice up to that time can successfully deny the proposition that our credits, both public and private, had swollen almost beyond endurance.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question in reference to the raising of the rate of rediscount?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Does not the Senator think that raising the rate of discount is almost a useless method of seeking to discourage speculation? Is it not true that you intensify speculation, because the speculator rarely pays very much attention to the rate of discount he pays, providing he can get the wherewithal to make his venture, while the real business man is discouraged from investing at the high rate of discount?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the speculator flourishes in times of inflation. He is as much the natural product of an inflated credit condition—which, of course, means high prices—as maggots are the product of a decaying carcass. The speculator is not the cause, but the consequence, of this plethoric condition of credit and of finance.

I agree that the mere act of increasing the discount rate does not put a stop to speculation; but I was about to say when the Senator interrupted that the Federal Reserve Board did more than that. It caused intimations to be made whereby the lending of call money for speculative purposes upon the exchanges in New York and other cities was for the time being terminated. I wish there were some way of prohibiting entirely the making of loans for those purposes. I do not know that there can be; but the remarkable feature of this measure, and of the days that have elapsed since this session of Congress began, is that we seem to have reversed our processes, and instead of denouncing the high cost of living we now propose to mobilize the assets of the Nation for the purpose of prolonging its dominion.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the condition now is worse than the other, why not go back?

Mr. THOMAS. The condition now here may be worse than the other.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It seems so to me.

Mr. THOMAS. But it is as absolutely unavoidable——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Why unavoidable?

Mr. THOMAS. It is as absolutely unavoidable as is the penalty that comes always to man for the violation of a fundamental law. I have heard a number of causes ascribed for this unfortunate condition. The Senator from South Carolina ascribed it to the action and policy of the Federal Reserve Board. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] sees a huge financial conspiracy, which has culminated, or is about to culminate, in the destruction of an essential class of a great national community.

We can easily determine the cause, Mr. President, by a review, however hasty, of the action of economic laws in other times under similar conditions, and I affirm that there has never been a period in the history of civilization in which great periods of inflation and speculation have not inevitably brought about panics, depression, suffering, disaster, and despair. If Senators familiar with history can place their fingers upon a solitary exception to this sequence of cause and effect, I will confess that I might be mistaken. I have not been able to find one, and I have been curious enough to read economic history from the days of the feudal system.

The wars of the Spanish Succession, away back in the first part of the eighteenth century, in the prosecution of which Great Britain contracted an enormous debt, for that period—a debt, by the way, which she has not yet paid and which she never will pay—brought this statement from the Craftsman, published in London, in 1736, some time after the return of peace:

The vast load of debt under which the nation still groans is the source of all those calamities and gloomy prospects of which we have so much to complain. To this has been owing that multiplicity of burdensome taxes which have more than doubled the price of the common necessaries of life within a few years, and thereby distressed the poor laborer and manufacturer, disabled the farmer to pay his rent, and put even the gentleman of plentiful estate under the greatest difficulties to make a proper provision for his family.

The student familiar with Allison's History of Europe need not be told of the consequences of inflation caused by the Napoleonic wars. They paralleled this situation, and, what is worse, they were accompanied, which I trust will not be the case here, by bread riots, insurrections, and other revolts against authority and against social and economic conditions, by those suffering from their consequences. The result of the Franco-Prussian War, not quite so extreme, was of similar character, and we, Mr. President, after our vast expenditures in the Civil War in the early sixties, had our period of inflation, both of prices and of speculation, followed by an effort at deflation shortly after which came the terrible panic of 1873, a panic which reduced the agricultural classes to the lowest depths of dependence and poverty; a panic which closed hundreds of banking institutions; a panic which placed a pall upon our manufacturing industries from which they did not recover until 1879; a panic whose immediate and disastrous consequences extended through four or five long years of discipline and of suffering.

We discovered by bitter experience that the way of extrication from the morass was to work and save and do what we could to rescue as much as possible from the disaster of the wreck. Dependent upon that self-reliance and confidence in the individual which is the glory of the Anglo-Saxon, we retrieved our fortunes and regained our normal prosperity.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator will not forget the Black Friday of 1869?

Mr. THOMAS. No. That preceded the panic of 1873. That was one of the dire consequences not only of inflation, but of speculation, and was the result of an effort to secure a corner in gold, which commanded a premium, and the use of which in our foreign exchanges and for the payment of our national obligations was absolutely essential.

But the panic of 1893 followed the wildest days of speculation and inflation I have ever known, chiefly in real estate, throughout the country. I know everything east of Denver on the plains was laid out in town lots until we met a similar extension from Kansas City, and it is said that a would-be purchaser was shown some lots by a Kansas City real estate dealer during that period, which he declined to buy, and came to Denver to look for a better bargain. His Denver real estate dealer took him out and showed him the identical lots, which seemed to form part of an addition to both of those great cities.

From 1887—and there was a little flurry then—to 1893 we indulged in an orgy of development and of speculation and of inflation. Then came the harvest of suffering and of tears which paralyzed the business energies of this country for several years afterwards.

Talk about the farmer—in our section of the country it wiped him almost from the map.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It always does.

Mr. THOMAS. The story is told that in 1894 an old farmer concluded to sell his 160 acres if he could find anybody who was fool enough to buy it, so one day he met a tenderfoot with a pony, and he asked this fellow who had the pony if he would trade his pony for some real estate. He said he would. So the farmer offered him 80 acres for his pony, and when the deed was drawn he found the fellow could not read, so he just rung in the whole 160 acres on him, and thus got rid of his encumbrance entirely.

Now we are face to face with an identical situation, and we are confronted by a resolution designed to overcome it containing a preamble reciting that this is "unprecedented and unparalleled." There are plenty of precedents and plenty of parallels, and there always will be so long as man is foolish enough to pay no heed to the signposts of history and the teachings of economic law, which we can no more violate with impunity than we can the laws of gravitation, or the laws of the tides, or any other of those great and immutable rules by which nature and economics are governed.

I think, Mr. President, that one result of this measure, which is bound to pass, will be to penalize the thrift we have been preaching, by taking away what we have been able to save during this period of high prices, and turning it over to those who have been unmindful of conditions, not alone the agriculturists, but others who are just as much entitled to the guardianship and protection of the United States as any others of its citizens, if that be one of its functions.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Steel Trust, for instance.

Mr. THOMAS. No, not the Steel Trust; yet I may say that if we are going into the business of indemnifying losses, we can not particularize between citizens, no matter how far apart they may be in the matter of earthly possessions.

But I call to mind the fact, Mr. President, that there are in this country a vast number of manufacturers with immense quantities of goods on their hands that cost infinitely more than the price of production, who are to-day facing bankruptcy, which is bound to overtake a great many of them; and I contend that those people are just as much entitled to the overlordship of the Government as are the farmers and the raisers of other products, because their work, although not as essential, of course, to our physical existence, is as essential to our modern civilization as any other pursuits. What are you to do with these 2,000,000 men who are out of employment because of the shutting down of these places, due to the lack of orders? Do you tell me that a man who has a family and who depends upon his everyday work for their support, and who is thrown out of employment is not also entitled to Government protection, if we are to extend it as is proposed here? Where will you dare to draw the line?

Mr. President, if I had time I might run the whole gamut of society, and I think demonstrate that when the Government goes into the business of paternalism it can play no favorites. If it does, it is bound to have trouble, and ought to have trouble, upon its hands.

What do we propose to do here? First, to revive the activities of the War Finance Corporation, "and that said corporation be at once rehabilitated with the view of assisting in the financing of the exportation of agricultural products to foreign markets."

I think I would support that, not because I believe it will prove to be the remedy desired, but because I have the very highest opinion of the ability and business efficiency of Mr. Eugene Meyer. I have great confidence in his judgment as to what can be accomplished by the revival of this institution. I am sorry that Mr. Meyer in his testimony referred, in a somewhat undignified and unjust way, to the statements of the Secretary of the Treasury, who in my judgment is an honest, conscientious, capable, and patriotic official, a man who has done and who will continue to do his duty as he sees it; who does not pretend to infallibility, but who is entitled to that respect and that consideration to which every honest man is entitled in official life, no matter what his politics may be. But I do not believe, Mr. President, that this experiment will greatly relieve the situation.

In the first place, the United States must borrow $380,000,000 or its equivalent, and that at a time when it is itself faced, according to the statement of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] yesterday, with a deficit of one and three-quarter billions of dollars on the 30th day of next June.

I say it must borrow it, because it appears from the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury that this sum, at the time the activities of the War Finance Corporation were suspended—and that is also sustained by the statement of Mr. Meyer—was transferred to another fund, and I think credited upon the national debt. Now, if a banking institution has a capital of $380,000,000, which capital is hypothecated, we will say, or removed or changed or diverted or converted to some other purpose, it is exhausted, and the only way to restore it is to restore it. I do not know how that can be done except by using the credit of the United States for raising that amount of money on bonds. I do not care what you call it, it must be money or its equivalent, and if this disaster is so enormous, and I have no doubt it is, pray tell me to what extent this borrowed $380,000,000 will go toward the process of resuscitation?

Do not forget now that the agricultural interest is only one of many that are clamoring here for relief. Even the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], usually cool-headed and retaining his presence of mind, is hysterical enough to tell us that the wool industry will perish unless we place an embargo upon the importation of all other wool. That industry is coming here for relief. So is the live-stock industry, and these will be followed in their train by a multitude of others, using this precedent and invoking the agency of the War Finance Corporation for its preservation.

Why, this $380,000,000 will be so relatively insignificant that I venture to predict that before the winter is over we will be called upon to supplement it several times over. It is a pretty big job, even for the United States Government, to take care of the personal fortunes, amend the commercial casualties, repair the business and productive failures of 105,000,000 people, and especially when it is itself so overburdened with debt that it is almost as bad off as those it would seek to relieve.

There is no one here, and by that I mean no one at present appearing in Washington, lobbyist or otherwise, who seems to have much concern about poor old Uncle Sam. I read a statement in the Literary Digest a little while ago that there are 125 lobbies in Washington. President Wilson got after what he called an insidious lobby in 1914 and cleaned it up, as he thought; but that seems to have been merely the prolific parent of a brood of lobbies, representing races, business pursuits, social, philanthropic, economic, and other activities, all of them clamoring for Uncle Sam's money and assistance, and none of them particular about the consequences of their success to the Federal Treasury.

I do not know what the result will be, but if when we add to our deficiency and to the capital of the War Finance Corporation $2,450,000,000 which the House has voted for a bonus and which is to be pressed upon the consideration of the Senate, thus creating, if it passes—and it will pass if a roll call is demanded; I will gamble my soul on that—that much more debt to be added to this poor old gentleman's ever-increasing burdens, where is he to get all the money needed for the War Finance Corporation? The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] says there is more money in the country than ever before, and that is true; but the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] says it is the biggest coward in the world, that there is nothing so timid as capital.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is true.

Mr. THOMAS. It is true sometimes; sometimes there is nothing more reckless. It is either one or the other; it goes from one extreme to the other. But none of it is liable to be invested where a reasonable certainty of a fair profit is not in sight. We can stretch the credit even of the Government of the United States until it snaps, and we are making a good start in that direction.

What the next Congress will do I do not know, and for what it does do I shall not be responsible, thank God, even in part. I have no doubt that it will enact a tariff law that will make poor old Aldrich green with envy, if indeed he does not turn in his grave. I have not a doubt that everything will be protected that is not embargoed, and between the embargo and the prohibitive tariff we will then enter upon a career of international trade and exchange in which we will sell to the rest of the world and let them do the buying among themselves.

That reminds me, Mr. President, just here of the testimony of Mr. Scroyer, a very estimable farmer from Nebraska, who, it seems, has been a Democrat, but now is a Republican, because he wants a tariff on corn and wheat and everything that the farmer produces. Speaking of his surplus, on page 9 he says:

> We want immediate export. If you want to make provisions for a relief, we want the Federal land banks restored. We had that, and that gave some relief.

Then again he demands exports. He wants an export of his surplus and demands it at once. In other words, this gentleman represents a prevailing idea that we can penalize the products of other countries without at all affecting the sale of our products to them. We are going to put an embargo upon wool—there is no doubt about that, I think—and I have received letters, and I have no doubt others have, demanding embargoes upon other things, upon the principle that if it is good to embargo wool it is good to embargo other commodities, and so it is.

How are we to find a market for our surplus with the countries upon which these embargoes are to operate? Human nature—and I think even President Wilson is convinced of it now—is about the same at all times and in all countries. Other nations will inevitably apply laws of retaliation to American commerce, and ought to, in consequence of which, while our wall may be very high for them it will be too high for ourselves, and the exports which this very intelligent and estimable gentleman wants so badly and which I concede that he should have are to be excluded by the remedies that he proposes to extend to others suffering equally from this deflation in prices.

Now, Mr. President, I can understand how, according to Mr. Meyer, it will be possible to encourage the formation of associations and companies who will undertake to finance and to export some of these commodities and create a market for them and who will assume the financial responsibilities, subject to the security that can be offered by these corporations, and which may in some degree alleviate this situation. But what puzzles me is where these goods are going. Yesterday I read in the papers, and I have not seen it contradicted, that Argentina had declined to receive $12,000,000 worth of American merchandise, or rather her merchants had declined to receive it, because the difference in the rate of exchange between Argentine money and the American dollar is so great that they could only take those goods at a heavy loss, and therefore they refused to receive them at all.

If Argentina is in that situation what shall we say of Germany and of Austria, and in fact of all of the countries of Europe, with the possible exception of Great Britain, whose rates of exchange are even worse, as compared with the American dollar, than those of South America, and which therefore can not, without the most ruinous sacrifice, secure exports from the United States?

The fall in exchange operates as a bounty upon exports from the country where the exchange is lowest, and that, I may say to the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], in my judgment fully accounts for the importation into this country of Canadian wheat, because the exchange between Canadian money and American money is in favor of Canada, and consequently it gives her so much of a bounty on her exports that she can afford to undersell the American producer.

I do not think the relief against this is in the tariff at all. I may be mistaken. It must come from a regulation and a steadying of exchange, and that must come very largely by agreement and by support and by credits from nation to nation, followed by the balancing of exports with imports.

One reason why this slump, as it has been called, and properly so, has become acute is due not to the needs of our products in other countries, but to their inability to pay for them. International trade is simply exchange, and only balances are paid for in cash. We can not sell our goods to Germany—and I speak of Germany because it is the principal commercial nation with which we have to deal on the Continent—because Germany's power to purchase has practically disappeared; it is merely negligible; and, inasmuch as the commercial structure of central Europe is based almost entirely upon that of the German Empire, the same condition applies to the newly created nations, and largely to Austria and more largely to Italy.

Mr. President, we have spent several months in this distinguished body since the war in discussing one part of the German treaty, and we have been so intent upon our controversy over that part that we have paid little or no attention to the main body of the treaty itself.

A recent book published by Mr. John F. Bass, and entitled "The Peace Tangle," to my mind the most important contribution thus far made to the literature of the subject, emphasizes the deplorable fact that the peace conference was totally indifferent to the economic situation in Europe and to the economic consequences of the peace it negotiated. They created new sovereignties and tried to fix their boundaries. They penalized Germany and Austria, the latter almost to the point of extermination. But they took no note of that great economic structure, the fruit of the experience of nearly a century, which had been built up in central Europe by nations interdependent upon each other and connected or linked together by a series of natural streams, of canals, and of railroads. The Allies were so intent, in other words, upon indemnities, upon disarmament of the erstwhile foe, and upon the creation of new sovereignties that they lost sight of that more fundamentally important condition, the need of which to the peace and prosperity and happiness of peoples is absolutely indispensable. The consequence is that the economic structure and policy of all of central Europe has collapsed, and each one of the new nations, when not engaged in internecine trouble, is endeavoring to create a sort of commercial system of its own. The result is pandemonium. For example, Czechoslovakia will supply Austria with coal for her foundries only upon condition that Austria shall in return furnish Czechoslovakia the entire product of those foundries.

Trieste is one of the great harbors, if not the greatest harbor, of the Adriatic, to which before the war was tributary nearly all the overseas commerce of Austria, including Czechoslovakia, a part of Poland, Hungary, Jugo-Slavia, or Slavonia—it is about all a man's reputation is worth to try to pronounce some of those names—but now there is a distinct railroad system for each, a distinct set of duties for each, and a distinct determination of each to retain in its own possession all cars that may come within its physical jurisdiction. The result is that Trieste is doing no business; it can not. An equal result is that there is a paralysis of interchange of commodities by these people among themselves. As is inevitably the case, these trade controversies are fruitful parents of war and bloodshed, and the peace of Europe to-day is, in my judgment, threatened more imminently by commercial conditions, or rather the lack of them, than by anything else. They need what we have to sell; their people in the many sections are starving for the lack of the ordinary necessities of life. Certainly we want to export to them, but commerce is a cold-blooded affair, and depends upon exchange. If those people have money with which to buy these products, they can have them; if they have products which they can exchange for them, we can supply their needs; but if they have neither we may stand upon this floor and talk until doomsday, we may pass all the tariffs or abolish all the tariffs that the mind of man can conceive, and yet this stale condition will continue—plenty and plethora in one land, want and starvation in others. Hence, I do not see how it is possible for the War Finance Corporation or for any other organization to create markets when none can exist because of the absence of conditions which are indispensable to them.

Of course it is said that we can supply credit and by supplying credit we can furnish the means with which to pay for our own goods. It was stated yesterday that Germany was our second best customer in Europe before the war, and she was; but so long as Germany rests under the burden of an indefinite indemnity, so long as she is in the hands of a receivership composed of the members of the Reparation Commission, so long as what she produces is to be taken from her and to be given to the Allies as indemnity, with no certitude of its ever ending, and with no assurance as to the final definite amount, so long will her energies be paralyzed, so long will her power to purchase be dormant, and so long will it be impossible for her to recreate that trade which at one time took so much of our products and afforded mutual prosperity to both countries.

It is hardly necessary for me to say that I am no sympathizer with Germany; I fully agree that she brought her punishment upon herself; but if, as Mr. Wilson once said, we must be just to those to whom we wish to be just as well as just to those to whom we do not wish to be just, and if we are to permit 70,000,000 people to regain their feet and become a factor in the productive energies of the world, then the economic features of the treaty should be changed and changed as soon as possible. We are partly responsible for the structure of the treaty, but the Senate has so far, I am pleased to say, withheld its assent from that document; and I believe if the people had understood as much about the treaty as they did about the covenant of the league the vote at the last election would have been practically unanimous, even in the South.

So much, Mr. President, for the possibility of creating markets where markets can not possibly exist in the absence of conditions which are essential to the international exchange of commodities.

Some reflections have been made here, not intentionally, however, upon the attitude and action of the banking interests of the country toward the farmers. So far as I am able to judge, the local banks have gone to the limit in extending credit to producers, and in some instances I am very sure to producers not satisfied with prevailing prices, but who have desired to hold for better ones. I am not complaining of that; that is human nature. In one sense it is profiteering, but it is the natural and therefore the perfectly legitimate action of the owner of those articles the market price of which does not meet with his expectations or desires. But it is unfortunate, nevertheless, in view of the fact that, the market price of commodities having fallen to such a degree, the banker himself is embarrassed. A national bank in the town of Sterling in my State suspended the other day. The Comptroller of the Currency tells me that its assets are perfectly good, and consequently he does not intend to appoint a receiver, but they consist of farm and live-stock paper upon which it can not at present realize. He also informed me that such is the situation very largely throughout that section of the country.

It seems to me that the banks may need the protection of the Government quite as much as those whom they have attempted to protect in turn, and, instead of condemning them for a supposedly niggardly course, we should condemn them for having stretched their credit too far, and by that means brought their depositors in danger and subjected them to unnecessary losses.

I do not understand that so far as the western banks are concerned there has been any sort of evidence of an intention upon their part to take advantage of the situation to refuse to extend credit as far as they dare or to press for payment by the foreclosure of securities. I think, generally speaking, they have acted according to the spirit of the Federal reserve act, feeling that, in the absence of those conditions which made panics inevitable under the old system, they could take more chances, and, therefore, under the circumstances, did take them.

Mr. President, the amendment which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has offered, and which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] opposes, because he thinks that the power to favor other interests now exists, is not only a very natural addition, but an inevitable one. The Senator from Georgia proposes to insert the words "and other" after the word "agricultural" on the seventh line of the second page of the joint resolution, so that the provision will read:

> And the members of the War Finance Corporation are hereby directed to revive the activities of the War Finance Corporation, and that said corporation be at once rehabilitated with the view of assisting in the financing of the exportation of the agricultural and other products to foreign markets.

I think that is a desirable amendment if we are to carry through this legislation at all, because otherwise the legislation is distinctly class legislation, and to that I am opposed. I grant you there are precedents enough, God knows. The Senator from Kansas referred to a precedent for the advance of the amount needed for the capitalization of the War Finance Corporation. I repeat, there are precedents enough. When we took the tariff off sugar back in the eighties, if I remember correctly, we allowed Louisiana to put her hand into the Treasury up to the elbow and take out what was necessary in the shape of a bounty to equalize the difference between the cost of her production of sugar and the cost of production abroad. Since I have been a Member of the Senate there has been about as much class legislation, perhaps, as has been enacted in any similar previous period of time.

I regard every duty placed upon an article for the sole purpose of protection as a bounty of the Government to the favored individual. There is plenty of precedent for it. I regard every pension paid to an able-bodied man who has done his duty to his country by serving it as a bounty, as an appropriation from the Treasury to men representing a particular class. So it is too late, if I were so disposed, to object to that feature of the joint resolution as class legislation; but it is class legislation, pure and simple, if the amendment of the Senator from Georgia is not adopted; and, disguise it as you will, class legislation is socialistic legislation; and it is strange that men will preach against the doctrine of socialism, and sometimes upon this floor cast reflections upon men who do profess to believe in that doctrine, and then deliberately apply it in legislation themselves.

Of course, all other products are just as much entitled to the benefits to flow from special legislation as are the farmers or the wool growers or the live-stock men or those engaged in the production of cotton. If I go into a manufacturing enterprise and invest my money, and on account of the fall in the price of the product, whatever the cause, not only in my institution but in all others similarly situated, I am threatened with ruin, because I must sell, if at all, at a sacrifice below the cost of production, why am I not also entitled to the protection of the Government? Why should not Uncle Sam make me whole?

I was handed this memorandum yesterday:

> I had $1,700 stock in a little corporation which the war busted. It is just wound up, and I charge up a loss of $561. What are you going to do for me?

That is a perfectly fair question—a perfectly fair question. I say, "You went into this enterprise with your eyes open, as a citizen, and took chances." The Government is not organized as a universal hospital to cure the commercial and economic accidents and diseases of all mankind. It was created to protect the citizen, and enable him to function on his own account; and I think, Mr. President, that the most pernicious consequence of this kind of legislation is the fact that it is depriving the people of the country, the good old Anglo-Saxon stock, of that element of self-reliance, personal ambition, and the desire to succeed, which lies at the foundation of all individual and national prosperity.

Why should I exert myself unduly in order to succeed, if, when I fail, the Government is to catch me, and act as a parachute to land me safely on the ground? We are coming to it very rapidly; and why should a man exercise thrift, and accumulate something beyond the cost of living, if when he has a little property it is to be taken from him and given to the man who is thriftless, or unfortunate, however thrifty he may be? That is our modern idea, so far as our practice goes, of government; and, as a consequence, we have these 125 lobbies to which I have referred, all with their hands and their tongues out, and both stretched in the direction of the United States Treasury.

I was called into the lobby a short time ago, just before I began to speak, by some gentlemen who are here who want some money for good roads. They said they certainly expected that I would assist them to the best of my ability. I told them I would. I informed them that up to this time I had unsuccessfully opposed every such measure, and by opposing theirs I would guarantee its passage. I also told them that inasmuch as we only had a little deficiency of a billion and a quarter staring us in the face, and a demand for two and a half billions for bonus, and a bill practically appropriating five hundred millions now before the Senate, if there was anything left I thought they ought to have it for good roads; and consequently I assured them that I would oppose the bill; hence they would receive it unless the bottom of the Treasury should be reached, in which event they ought to apply and perhaps would be treated as preferred creditors.

Mr. President, I have now discussed the first section of the joint resolution, notwithstanding the fact that I announced at the beginning that I should not oppose it by my vote. I do not, however, by keeping silent desire to be reproached hereafter for the ineffectiveness of the remedy when it comes to operate. I know that it is foredoomed to failure, and that we must go through the same course that our fathers have gone through under similar circumstances—a hard, bitter experience, filled with suffering and sorrow and misfortune, either now or at some other time before we get back to normal conditions. I have too high an opinion of the yeomanry of America to think that they are not capable of it. I was a boy in the South during the war and a few years afterwards. That country had been swept by the desolation of war, and everything that was left became the prey of the scalawag and the carpetbagger. To add to our misfortune, there was a hostile Central Government ruling the white people of that country with a rod of iron.

No people ever faced a more dismal and awful prospect, but they did not perish. They rose supreme to the occasion, and, undaunted, grappled with foes, political and economic, overcame both, and made their country one of the most beautiful and prosperous in all the world.

What my people in the South did then they can do now, and they would do it but for the fact that this generation has been educated into the notion that Uncle Sam is a universal dispenser of bounties upon all adverse occasions.

Why, Mr. President, I remember shortly after the declaration of war with Germany that there was a universal dislocation of business everywhere, and cotton conditions in the South were as bad, if not worse, than they are at present, and some of our southern Senators—I am saying it with all due respect—then lost their heads and introduced a joint resolution providing for the issuance of $250,000,000 of bonds, the proceeds whereof were to be invested in cotton, to be held until cotton reached 10 cents a pound. They thought it was absolutely necessary to save the South. They were perfectly honest in it. In fact, I think some of them went so far as even to menace the solidarity of the Democratic majority in this body if we did not pass it; but we rejected it, and I think properly, and the South still lives, still proud, still prosperous, and still defiant, thank God!

When the mints of India closed practically every silver mine in the West closed, and that brought disaster to my section of the country, and a very severe one, followed shortly afterwards by the panic known as the panic of 1893. Senators from my State and from the other silver-producing States iterated and reiterated in this body the certain destruction of the civilization of the great Rocky Mountain region if silver was not restored, and I believe them just as honestly as my friend the Senator from Georgia in 1914 believed that that $250,000,000 bond issue was necessary to save his State.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not believe it necessary to save our State, but I believed that it was wise. I still believe it was wise, and I think it was a horrible blunder that is was not done.

Mr. THOMAS. I am glad the Senator stands by his guns. That is right. I honor him for it; but I did not agree with him then, and I do not agree with him now.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Furthermore, if the Government had pursued the policy suggested, the Government would have made a large sum from its investment, and our exports would have brought a normal price, instead of having brought about one-half of what they should have brought.

Mr. THOMAS. If the function of the Government is to go into business and to make money by taxing the people, why, of course, that may be. I do not know; but I am going to be just as candid as the Senator is. I am going to admit that I was mistaken. What I apprehended never happened. It was found that we could not get silver coinage, and so we went to producing gold and zinc and lead and everything else of a mineral or metallic character that we could dig out of the ground. While I think it was a mistake, and always will to my dying day believe that the demonetization of silver was little short of a crime, I have been cured of the notion that its coinage was absolutely indispensable to the commercial existence of any people or any section of the people. So, I do not want to lose my head again; and the difficulty is that the country has lost its head just now.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado further yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not consider it essential to the prosperity of the South or of the cotton-growing States. I believed at the time that there was a condition which could be justly and properly and wisely relieved, growing out of the war.

Mr. THOMAS. Whatever the Senator's idea was—and of course I take his statement for that—the fact is that the calamity which roused him to such action did not occur. In fact, Mr. President, nine-tenths of our troubles never do occur, except by anticipation.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Perhaps we have not any troubles now.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; you have some now—there is no doubt about that—but they are not half as bad as you think they are, and I am satisfied that the future will demonstrate the truth of my statement. Legislation of so supreme an importance and character ought to be enacted, as I stated before, only after the most profound consideration and by dispassionate and unexcited men, and that we are not.

Now, Mr. President, a few words regarding the second section, and I will relieve the Senate from further torture. The second section provides:

That the Federal Reserve Board is hereby directed to take such action as may be necessary to permit the member banks of the Federal Reserve System, in accordance with law and consistent with sound banking, to grant liberal extensions of credit to the farmers of the country upon the security of the agricultural products now held by them, by permitting the rediscounting of such notes of extension at the lowest possible rate of interest.

My first criticism of the second section is that it conveys to the country the impression that the Federal Reserve Board has not been doing its duty, that it has been derelict in a crisis to the people of the United States. The committee did not mean it so, I concede fully, but that is the impression, in my judgment, which will be conveyed from one end of this country to the other among responsible people. It is a reflection upon the Federal Reserve Board, not an intentional but an inevitable one.

I read the hearings carefully. I have known the workings of the Federal Reserve Board, and I contend that in the discharge of their functions they have sought to do, and I think nearly always have done, their duty well. It takes a brave man, in a crisis, to perform his duty, and the law that is worth anything must be equal to the crisis which confronts it, and which was anticipated at the time of its enactment because of past experiences. I know of nothing more dangerous and damnable to a commercial people than inflation, except deflation, because the last is immediate and much more drastic, and consequently deflation should come gradually, and that has been the case with the Federal Reserve Board, because to-day, so far as our circulation goes, it has not been reduced, but has simply been held stationary and hardly that.

The Senator from North Dakota called attention to the fact that the governor of the Federal Reserve Board said that up to a certain time last spring the increase of our currency had an angle of about 45°, from which time it has assumed one of about 2°. That is the sort of deflation, Mr. President, that ought to be practiced.

But that is not the thing which is responsible for this situation. If this angle of increase had been maintained at 45° or more it would have come just the same. It is absolutely inevitable. The terrible part of it is that it came so suddenly; that is, relatively it was sudden. But it has been coming for months, and it has come as a consequence of the refusal of the people of the United States to be held up any longer with high prices. It seems to me that the consumers of this country have a right to complain that, now they are face to face with a reduction in prices, the Congress of the United States is executing a military maneuver of right-about-face and legislating to keep them up.

Talk about political consistency. As acrobats Congress can give a political convention cards and spades; that is, if this is a sample of the sort of legislation which is going to follow now. We ran like a pack away from high prices. We are now running like a pack away from low prices, and when you consider that the consumer of America constitutes the principal class—the man of salary and the man of fixed income and the wage earner, next to the farmer, constitute the greatest class in the country, and the farmer is also a consumer—I think that, subject to the needs of the producers of the country, we should welcome instead of attempting to repel the inevitable return of a decent standard of livelihood.

I concede, Mr. President, that the prices of necessities to the consumer have not kept ratio to the fall of prices to the producer. That is unfortunate. It costs the farmer to-day and it costs the consumer everywhere who supports the retail business of the country pretty nearly as much to live as ever, and especially if he has to travel and patronize any of the hotels of the country. But that only indicates what is almost always the case, that the prices of the distributor to the actual consumer are the last to come down, due very largely, first, to the fact that the public must continue to purchase what is absolutely necessary and also to the fact that the retailer can not so readily readjust himself to the change—that is, his overhead charges, his credits, and so forth. There may be a consequent disaster; but I venture the prediction that after the holidays are over retail prices will fall very rapidly. They have to. I know of no way of avoiding it, like the general situation, which may be stemmed for a short time, perhaps, but inevitably it must come, and I think the sooner we meet that fact and go through the valley of the shadow and get back to the old conditions the better it is going to be for us.

I agree with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], Mr. President, that the second section is practically meaningless. It directs the Federal Reserve Board "to take such action as may be necessary to permit the member banks of the Federal Reserve System, in accordance with law and consistent with sound banking, to grant liberal extensions."

That power exists under the present law. The Federal Reserve Board does not make any loans. The Federal Reserve Board does not direct the member bank where it shall receive credits or discounts. The Federal Reserve Board can not tell the Riggs National Bank of Washington what loans it must make and what loans it must not make. It can examine its loans, and does do so, in order that rules of sound banking may not be ignored or departed from. The trouble is that they have done all they can do under the law, and unless they do more under this proposed law, then complaint will be made, and it will be made with great insistence, that they have ignored the direction of Congress, by paying no attention to its joint resolution. I do not believe that there is a Senator upon this floor who, as a member of the Federal Reserve Board, would have changed the policy which it has followed, or who would under this direction change its policy. And yet I think there can be no doubt that unless something radical and drastic is done, the members of this board will be denounced, as they have been frequently and unjustly denounced, not always here, but in other places as well.

I recall—I think it was in August, 1919, though perhaps I do not get the date correctly—when this body passed a resolution upon the subject of deflation, the general impression being then that credits were being extended too far, and calling upon the board for information upon that subject, which was duly furnished.

That is all right; we have the right to do that. But in a crisis like this, to pass a law directing this board to do something which in its judgment it ought not to do is to interfere with the principles of sound banking, with the judgment and discretion of men who know their business and who were appointed to perform it. We can not afford, in my judgment, without threatening the integrity of the entire system, to enact resolutions and statutes amendatory of a great banking act for the purpose of meeting an emergency that seems to threaten a part of our people. If you set the precedent there will never be such a thing as contraction of currency in the United States. If you set the precedent the board will function as a body merely designed to extend credits and increase the circulation, and when that is done you will have plenty of money, but it will be rotten, just as the money of nearly all the nations of Europe is to-day. We produce more than we can sell. We produce more than there is a market for, and the problem of the farmer is the problem of distribution and of markets.

I read from a review entitled "Economic Conditions," issued by the National City Bank, this short extract:

> This slump in business conditions has demonstrated again that the great movements in the business world which make good times or bad times are spontaneous and beyond control. They are due to mass action and mass psychology. The business of the country depends upon the purchases and policies of tens of millions of individuals, and when they become generally possessed of a spirit of confidence and go ahead with their planning and spending under its influence we have a period of prosperity. The difference between free spending and careful economy by all the people of this country means a vast difference in the volume of trade and the level of prices.
> A state of full prosperity is seldom long maintained, because it means a balanced state of industry, and the balance may be disturbed by many influences, originating at home or abroad. The war gave an enormous but unhealthful stimulus to the industries and brought on the rise of wages and prices. Following the war there was another abnormal period, due to scarcity resulting from the war and the release of demands that had been in restraint. The actual scarcity was exaggerated in many instances, as in the case of clothing and sugar, by an insistent demand which would be supplied at any price. A market in which demand exceeds supply is commonly called a seller's market, on the theory that the seller names the price, but the prices upon many commodities in the latter part of 1919 and early part of 1920 were made by a scramble of buyers and the bidding of dealers eager to supply them. There was a shortage of cloth and of sugar, but the market was overstimulated by the action of buyers, who in many instances tried to get more than they really wanted in the expectation that the limited supplies would be allotted or to provide for the future. Nobody was more deceived than the dealers and producers.

I do not see, Mr. President, if it be true that the masses buying, or the failing of the masses to buy, is the factor which determines operations, and it is a fact, and particularly where a market is a seller's market, as ours has been so long, that any direction to extend credit to producers upon the security of the agricultural products now held by them, by permitting the rediscount of notes, of extension, or otherwise, can affect this situation. It is largely beyond the power of human control, and there is, as we all at least should know, a limit to human legislation. We can not legislate July weather into January. We can not change the course of the planets around the sun. We can not legislate figs upon thistles, and, with all due respect to the present presiding officer [Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair], I do not believe we can legislate virtue into the average man. These are things which are beyond the realm of human statutes, and, generally speaking, when we try to regulate them the result is either disastrous or ridiculous.

Mr. President, I shall ask for a separate vote upon these two sections, to the end that the Senate may discriminate between them.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I was in hopes that we could dispose of the joint resolution to-day. There never was a time in the history of the Nation when remedial legislation of this sort was as urgent as it is to-day. I am sure that every Senator realizes that.

However, I certainly do not wish to deprive any Senator of the fullest opportunity to speak. I could not do that if I wanted; but I wish to state my position; I do not wish to say to any Senator that he can not have all the time he wants to discuss this joint resolution. I realize that it is an important measure. I also realize that at this time we do not perhaps have a quorum, but we can get a quorum here. I do not know of a time when it was more necessary or more important than the present to get a quorum and to keep Members here until pending legislation is disposed of, when banks all through the country are suspending and closing their doors, when farmers are unable to dispose of their products for the very reason that they can not obtain money, when the money is being locked up.

If we can have an understanding that we shall take a recess until 11 o'clock on Monday, and that those who are here present will give unanimous consent at that time—I am not asking that it be done now—to vote not later than, say, 3 o'clock on Monday, perhaps we could make time by taking such action.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from North Dakota that on Monday a number of very important committees will meet for the first time at this session. Some of those committees are called for 11 o'clock, others for 10 o'clock. I suggest to the Senator to move a recess until 12 o'clock. I am sure that a vote will be had upon Monday on the joint resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Can we have an assurance, as much as we can get under the circumstances, without going through the formality of submitting a unanimous-consent request, that we will vote not later than 3 o'clock on Monday if we take a recess until 12 o'clock on that day?

Mr. KING. So far as I am concerned, I should be very glad to assure the Senator of that and use what little influence I may have to that end.

Mr. THOMAS. I beg to assure the Senator that I am ready to vote now.

Mr. NORRIS. So am I; but there are some Senators who want to be heard upon the joint resolution. I have refrained from talking in order that I might do my part toward getting a vote as soon as possible.

We had an understanding, I thought, as much as we could have an understanding without calling the roll and going through the formality, that we would vote to-day if we would consent to an adjournment yesterday at an hour which was proposed and which was a very early hour for adjournment. We expected in all good faith that there would be a vote to-day.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator that I do not think he will make any progress toward getting a vote by indulging in any criticism. I am sure there is no disposition upon the part of any Senator to delay the vote.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will not dispute that statement? The Senator was here yesterday.

Mr. KING. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator was present.

Mr. KING. I can assure the Senator so far as I am concerned that I know of no one who will vote against the joint resolution. My present intention is, after one or two amendments are agreed to, to vote for it. I am sure there are two Senators who desire to submit some observations upon the measure, and I have no doubt in the world that if we take a recess until 12 o'clock on Monday the measure may be disposed of by 3 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that nearly every hour this afternoon has been taken by Senators in favor of the measure.

Mr. NORRIS. And that includes the senior Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly aware of that. I am not criticizing anyone, if anyone wishes to speak. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] is the last one who has spoken this afternoon, and I am quite sure from what I have heard that there is no more discussion to be had, except by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and possibly one other Senator.

UMI

So far as I am concerned, there can be a vote at 3 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. NORRIS. There was no one who had any doubt yesterday that we would get to a vote to-day, and we adjourned with that understanding. I am perfectly willing to concede to every Senator the right to debate the joint resolution as long as he wants to do so.

Mr. THOMAS. I must confess my ignorance of that understanding. I had no such understanding, although I fully expected that there would be a vote to-day, because from what I heard I supposed that I was the only Senator who wanted to say anything further on the joint resolution. However, I did not understand that there was any assurance that there would be a vote to-day.

Mr. NORRIS. One Senator speaking, as a rule, brings forward other Senators. Senators have spoken to-day who would not have spoken if it had not been for some things that were said by other Senators that they thought ought to be answered. I think the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], a very ardent supporter of the joint resolution, was engaged for a couple of hours in criticism of it, and that brought on some discussion from other Senators who wanted to answer him.

Mr. SMOOT. I resent that, because I was on the floor for an hour and 10 minutes, and I do not think I had more than 15 minutes of the hour and 10 minutes.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the chairman of the committee one question? Is he going to insist seriously on section 2 in its present form?

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to say to the Senator from Ohio in all candor that there are members of the committee who are very strongly in favor of the section.

Mr. POMERENE. I wish to say that the first section of the joint resolution has my sympathy, and so far as I know now I expect to vote for it; but I do not like to move a wrecking train into the Federal Reserve Board at this time, and that will be the effect of section 2 of the joint resolution.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator realizes that there is a great deal that may be said with reference to the action of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. POMERENE. That may be.

Mr. GRONNA. Every Senator here and every man in the country who has had any business to transact knows that farm paper has been ineligible—and we might as well speak plainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I am in sympathy with the Senator again in wanting to help along the cause of rural credits, and I am going to help that along to the best of my ability, but I am not going to help wreck the Federal reserve banks, if I can prevent it.

Mr. GRONNA. May I say to the Senator that we are not charging the Federal Reserve Board with any violation of the law, or even violation of rules. We are simply directing. The Secretary of the Treasury in all kindness, when he was asked by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] what he would do, made the very courteous reply to the committee, "If you will direct me to do so and so," I think he said we would be glad to do it. It is not a criticism of anybody.

Mr. GLASS. The response of the Secretary of the Treasury had reference only to the resumption of the activities of the War Finance Corporation, and not to the implied criticism of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. GRONNA. There is no criticism of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, there is a very direct criticism of it, a very unjust criticism of it, and a criticism that is not based upon the facts.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Virginia has a right to his opinion, and I have a right to mine.

Mr. GLASS. Precisely.

Mr. GRONNA. I shall be glad at some future time to discuss the question with the Senator from Virginia, and would do so now if it were not my desire to have the joint resolution acted upon at this time.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not prepared to say that the Federal Reserve Board has done all that it ought to do. Perhaps it has done some things it ought not to have done; but I am perfectly clear in my own mind that the Federal Reserve Board can handle the business of the Federal reserve banks a vast deal better than the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, no one else has suggested a situation that I have in mind, and I feel that it is important just here to bring it to the attention of the Senate. I shall not now discuss the wisdom or unwisdom of the ruling of the Federal Reserve Board in raising the rate of interest this year above that charged last year. We obtained money last year at 4½ per cent in the cotton-growing States, and the banks that handled the cotton business and other agricultural products made a little money in handling the agricultural business of our section. This year the rate of interest was raised to 7 per cent, and banks in Alabama could only make 1 per cent in handling such matters, our legal rate being 8 per cent. The increased interest rate had a similar effect in other States of the South and West. The effect of that in the South and West was that call money having gone up to 12 per cent and higher in New York, money seeking the place where it could earn the most interest went—a great deal of it—from those sections to the speculative centers, where the higher rate of interest was paid, and the speculating interests of New York have had all the money they desired to use on the exchanges in beating down the prices of agricultural products.

Mr. President, I am not charging that the Federal Reserve Board raised the rate of interest for the purpose of keeping money out or of driving money out of the South and West at the crop-moving time—the time that it was needed most. I am merely relating what really happened to the business of the farmer in the South and West, and I feel that Congress has the right to instruct, and I intend to vote to instruct or direct the Federal Reserve Board to go directly to the rescue of the farmers of the country immediately because they are in dire distress. We are seeking to deliver them from the sharks and speculators who take advantage of their distress and profit by their misfortune. It is no reflection upon the Federal Reserve Board for Congress to specifically direct its attention and activities toward a matter of such grave importance as preventing the useless and criminal loss of billions of dollars to the farmers of the United States. That is what I felt should be said at this time, Mr. President.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, in view of what has been said by many of the distinguished Senators and with the assurance they have given us that they will be willing to let this measure come to a vote on Monday, probably about 3 o'clock, or probably a little later, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock Monday.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, December 13, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 11, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, Father of all souls, draw near to us as we draw near to Thee; inspire us with great thoughts that in all our efforts we may strive to fulfill Thy desires; let Thy kingdom come in all hearts, that wrongs may be righted and brotherly love obtain throughout this perturbed world; that peace may possess our souls and make the world a safer and happier place to dwell in. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on December 23, it adjourn until Monday, December 27.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Thursday, December 23, it adjourn until Monday, December 27. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, this request contemplates an adjournment from Thursday until Monday?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; so as to give Members one day to get home and one day to return after Christmas.

Mr. SNELL. Is that all the vacation that is intended to be taken at the holiday season?

Mr. MONDELL. That is my thought. I have talked with a good many gentlemen on both sides, including the leader on the Democratic side.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the doors were closed and the Sergeant at Arms was directed to notify the absentees.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrews, Md.	Ferris	Kreider	Robinson, N. C.
Anthony	Fish	Lea, Calif.	Romjue
Bacharach	Freeman	Lonergan	Rose
Baer	Fuller, Mass.	Luhring	Rouse

Doremus	Kahn	Reed, N. Y.	Wise
Drane	Kennedy, Iowa	Reed, W. Va.	Young, Tex.
Emerson	King	Riddick
Evans, Nev.	Kitchin	Riordan

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirteen Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Thursday, December 23, it adjourn to meet on the following Monday, December 27. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, what is the proposition as to the session on New Year's day on the succeeding Saturday?

Mr. MONDELL. I want to take that matter up with Members on both sides before making any request, because I am not certain what the view of the House might be.

Mr. GARD. Would it not be well for the gentleman to take it up before making this request, so that the two may be considered together, and that we may know definitely in regard to it?

Mr. MONDELL. I think the only question as to the following week is whether we shall adjourn from Friday until the next Monday or from Thursday until the next Monday, as we propose to do on Christmas.

Mr. GARD. The plan would be to adjourn from Friday or Thursday to the following Monday?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Wyoming also promise that gentlemen may have one day to get home, New Year's at home, and one day to get back?

Mr. MONDELL. I find that some of the Members with whom I have talked are of opinion that we should not have the extra day at New Year's, but I am not going to make a request with regard to that until I have talked with more Members.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, that leads me to this question: There are unfortunate Members who live in parts of the United States where it takes more than one day, two days, or even more than three or four days to get home, and more than three or four days to get back. Has the gentleman from Wyoming anything in his mind with reference to Christmas presents and New Year's presents for those unfortunate gentlemen?

Mr. MONDELL. I belong to the class, so far as my geographical location is concerned, to which the gentleman refers. I never go home at Christmas vacation, because the distance is so great that even with a longer vacation there is no time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the immigration bill, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose yesterday evening there was pending an amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment now pending offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] be read for the information of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY: At the end of line 15, on page 3, insert a new provision as follows:

"5. Bona fide farm laborers who may enter the United States solely for the purpose of engaging in labor on a farm or farms or in a truck garden or truck gardens, and upon the completion or discontinuance of such employment they shall not be entitled to remain in the United States."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is a delightful thing that one can differ with a man's views and ideas and still be the warmest friend of the author of a proposition. That is my attitude in respect to this amendment. The statement by the proponent of the amendment that there should be cheap farm labor to my mind is a statement of something that can not and should not exist. There can not be such a thing in the United States as cheap farm labor if we use that word to mean that we are to obtain labor from foreign countries that will come here and work more cheaply than American citizens who now live upon those farms. Such a thing would be disastrous to the farming interests. It would be disastrous to the city interests, and, far and above all, it would be disastrous to our country. If you permit a class of cheap farm laborers to come in, and that is the purpose of the amendment, you would then make the condition on the farm such that the American citizens there to-day would leave the farm because of the cheaper labor employed upon the farm which would be imported from foreign countries, and the American citizen, the boy and the girl raised on the farm, would go to the city.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Not at present. No such condition as I picture should be permitted in this country. The farmer should be able to receive enough from his produce, no matter what his farm produces, so that he can pay his laborers, his own boys, his own daughters, or the sons and daughters of his neighbors a fair, remunerative wage, so that they may live as American citizens, and the amount of wage should be as high as the wage in any city of the United States.

Mr. LAYTON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Delaware?

Mr. RAKER. I decline to yield at present. My second proposition is that it would produce a congestion in the cities. If there are higher wages in the cities, necessarily it will induce the farm laborers to leave the farm and go to the cities more than is the case at the present time.

The reasons which I have given are incidental, temporary business matters, and, while they are to some extent important, they are not important as compared to the vital question involved in the adoption of such an amendment. To adopt this amendment would engraft upon the laws of this country a slavery, a serfdom, a peonage that does not even exist in the Old World, and clearly we can not establish a policy of that kind here. Let us read the amendment. It provides:

And upon the completion or discontinuance of such employment they shall not be entitled to remain in the United States.

Let us say that a man comes over here to labor on the farms. He is a live, robust man. He may make a good citizen, but he has come for the purpose stated and must after the employment of that season or that year on the farm leave or he will find himself unlawfully in the United States. Second, he might bring with him his wife, and after the termination of that employment the wife and the man would be compelled to leave, while in the meantime there may have been born to that family an American citizen. You are then compelled—and under this law it could not be done—to take from this country by deportation this laborer on the farm with his American-born child. Third, there is no inhibition with respect to his marrying while here. He might marry the daughter of a neighboring farmer, if you please, or he might marry a laboring girl who came here, and from that union there might be born an American citizen. Upon the completion or the termination of that employment this man and woman must leave the country, and this American-born child, who has the same right as any other American citizen born in this country, sees its father and mother deported, it being left here an infant from 3 to 5 years of age.

Can such a piece of legislation be enacted by the American Congress, and can we then say that we stand for equality and right, for the development of humanity? I want to say to you that the farmers of this country are not demanding that kind of legislation. They are not seeking cheap, low labor. They are seeking a high class of labor. They are seeking American citizens who can do their work and who will do their work, and when they have worked sufficiently upon the farm, a sufficient length of time, they go out to school or into some other business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. After their labor has been completed, instead of being deported, they should be permitted to acquire land, to acquire additional farm land, to become a part and parcel of the country, to be naturalized, to be American citizens, to assume all of the rights and responsibilities and duties of an American citizen. I want to say to you that I do not believe this country will ever inaugurate by an act of Congress a system of peonage that does not exist in the most barbarous countries of the world to-day. I submit that this amendment for every reason should be defeated.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington, chairman of the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment be closed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Mr. McARTHUR, and others. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let us see if I can make an agreement. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my request.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I favor this amendment. I do not favor this bill, and yet I accept it as the best that can be done at this time, because I believe immigration ought to be checked. I think and have thought that instead of a wholesale stoppage of immigration we should have a bill imposing a definite system for keeping out the undesirable classes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am unable to yield to the chairman; the chairman has had an abundance of time. If we had such a bill as that I would gladly support it. In default of it I shall take this bill with what amendments we can get. There never has been a time in the history of this country, in late years at least, when there was enough farm labor. It will not be possible to obtain it if this amendment is carried, and yet it is the very class we want most. The evils existing under the present system arise largely from the fact that the immigrant crowds, I might say herds, in the large cities. There he remains in communities by himself, where often he does not even have an opportunity to learn the language of this country, much less its customs and ways, and he never becomes Americanized. The farm laborer goes into a community, where he is surrounded by the American spirit that exists on the part of the American farmer and shortly becomes Americanized and becomes one of the best citizens we have. This is always the result. Gentlemen talk about the evils that might result from this amendment. We have this permission now and none of these evils have existed by reason of farm laborers coming in. On the contrary, we found it necessary in order to get certain kinds of work done that the Secretary of Labor should issue permits to bring in certain kinds of labor in order that that work might be done at all. These laborers have been permitted to remain in this country only so long as they continued at certain kinds of farm labor. Refuse to pass this amendment and that work will not be done. Certain kinds of food that ought to be cheap in this country will be high without any corresponding profit or benefit to the farmer. This amendment, Mr. Chairman, would help this bill greatly. It permits the very class we need most to come into this country and no harm could possibly come from it. All the provisions of the present immigration law as it now stands are reserved in the closing clause of the bill, and the fears of the gentlemen that an undesirable class would come in have no force, because they would be prevented by this provision. As a matter of fact, no such results have obtained in the past, and therefore, Mr. Chairman, I favor the amendment and hope it will be adopted.

Mr. CARAWAY. I want to discuss this amendment. I have no doubt if it should prevail and the bill finally becomes a law and under its provisions immigrants should come to these United States and become farm laborers every man who employs one of them could be convicted of the offense of peonage. If not, I do know this, that a condition of serfdom nearly akin to slavery could be established in this country. I know if that class of foreigners were brought to this country to work on farms with the restriction that they could engage in no other occupation under the penalty of being deported that you could establish peonage in this country that for effectiveness would amount to actual industrial slavery. If a man should come here and be permitted to work on the farm, but denied the opportunity of engaging in any other occupation, under the gentleman's agreement among farmers that one farmer would not employ another farmer's help, they could reduce that man to such a state of peonage that he could actually transfer title to that immigrant with the title to the land on which he labored. [Applause.] Many States have laws against enticing labor. If you go to one man's place of business or to his farm and hire his help away, you have committed a misdemeanor, and upon conviction can be fined and imprisoned. Under the laws of those States, if this bill were to become the law, a laborer who had come here subject to its provisions were to become a farm hand in that State, since no one could entice him away—that is, hire him away—from his employer, and since he could not engage in any other kind of occupation, he would be a mere chattel. The Constitution, however, would annul this law. It provides that no man can be held to involuntary servitude, except upon a conviction by a court of competent jurisdiction for crime, and this would be involuntary servitude, under penalty that every man who did not submit to it would be deported. Under it families could be divided, fathers be taken from their children, husband be taken from his wife and children, and sent into some foreign country. All this could and would befall him unless he submitted to employment upon a farm and some particular farm. Necessarily an agreement would grow up that his employment should be always by the first man with whom he was so employed. I am astonished to find that the advocates of this amendment come from that section of the United States that so bitterly opposed slavery when it was an institution in the South. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. This amendment?

Mr. CARAWAY. This amendment. There is not a man living south of Mason and Dixon's line who is going to vote for this amendment, and no one seems to be opposed to it who lives north of that line. [Laughter and applause.] I am glad you gentlemen applaud it. Let me tell you something else. I believe every one here wants to help the farmer if he can. I think also 90 per cent of the membership of this House were reared on the farm, and it is a great pity most of us got off of it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. McARTHUR. For the farms or the country?

Mr. CARAWAY. For the country. If we really want to legislate for the farmer's benefit, instead of giving him laborers give him markets. There is not a farmer in America who is not crushed by economic conditions. Yet we stand here pretending that we want to legislate for him. If we really want to legislate for him let us bring out some measure to give him markets and protect him from the people who exploit him every year.

Fourteen times before we harvested a grain of wheat this year the speculators had sold the crop, and every man made a profit out of it except the man who grew it. The gamblers have sold the cotton crop over and over again in New York and New Orleans at a profit, but the men who labored through all the heat of summer to produce it have now to give it away in order that these speculators can enjoy the profits of his labor. If we want to legislate for the farmer let us get this bill out of the way and do it, and not merely pretend we are doing something for him. I want to close the gambling exchanges, stop exploiting farmers, stop sitting supinely by while he perishes. Give the farmers markets and a square deal. But returning to this measure, instead of limiting immigration for 2 years, I am willing to make it 20. I do not deny that desirable citizens of America have been born in foreign countries and have come here good men; but I do deny they are any better than the American-born citizens, and we have as many citizens here now as we need. I am not crazy to exploit every resource of this country during our lifetime. I wish to leave some of the resources of this country to our children and our children's children who come after. I have no patience with those who cry out all the time for an increased population, and do so solely that they may grow rich off of the unearned increment of the increase of population. This is an American bill. [Applause.] If the condition of people in the country of their birth is bad, I am sorry, but still I am not willing to destroy our own institutions and to take from our children the opportunities that our fathers through their foresight and their sacrifice created for us. This heritage was handed down to us by our fathers, and I hope we may have the patriotism and the courage to hand it down to our children and our children's children unimpaired. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I think most of us must realize the truth of the statement made by the gentleman from Arkansas, that any provision of the kind that would bring labor into the United States to be bound to a certain task at a specified place would create a peonage system, which we can not afford to even think of adopting.

Dismissing that, I ask the attention of the Members to a statement which I think must be made. Perhaps the statement should come from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but even if it comes from the chairman of the Immigration Committee, it may advise Congress and warn the country that the exodus from central Europe is serious and dangerous. The State Department knows this to a certainty. That department has handed to me enough paragraphs from its consular officers for use in this report on this bill to serve as a warning. Because certain consular officers report an excess of Jews seeking passport visés at certain places this bill has to be assaulted as an anti-Semitic bill. It is not. I care not whether the influx is Jewish, Moslem, Pagan, Buddhist, Christian, or what not. The country does not want it. It brings too many who are anti-Government and anti-God. We do not want Japanese, Chinese, Hindu, Turk, Greek, Italian, or any other nationality until we can clean house. [Applause.] While engaged in that work we do not want any more bread lines than we can help. I warn you that this country can not stand this influx.

The immigration coming now is the most undesirable that ever came to the United States. Look out! How strange it is to hear men on the floor favor this influx, to see them oppose this bill, and then to hear them beg for provisions that would deport them for attending some school like the Rand School!

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for an additional five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not care so much one way or the other about the cutting of the suspension period from 22 to 14 months. This bill is a stopper. It is proposed as a stop-gap proposition. The passport regulations, if you consider we are acting under them, will die with any declaration of peace. The extension of the war-passport business dies with this Congress. You have got nothing then to put up against your influx of immigration except the literacy test and certain health regulations.

I have said that this bill is a stop-gap. It is not an effort to write an entirely new immigration act. But even those who want something done propose amendments as if this were an effort to write the whole law over again. The members of the committee have gone as far as they could to meet objections. Listen to this debate and then you can tell the country why we do not get needed immigration legislation. While considering an immigration bill you can discuss the matter of farm labor for hours and still be not out of order.

Gentlemen, has the United States come to the point that each citizen must have his own serf on his farm, or in his factory, or in his home? Every problem that is proposed has run through the committee. You see the samples of debate on the floor.

The Nation cries out through the press, from the Los Angeles Times, on the Pacific coast, which is not a labor paper, to the Saturday Evening Post, of Philadelphia, on the Atlantic, as well as the papers in between, both great and small, to do something to stop the influx. But when the time comes to do it each one of us has a pet amendment, and although we are friendly to the effort to stop the influx, we weaken the proposal. [Applause.]

Before this measure shall have been many days in the committee of another body this country will have some additional reports from State Department officials. Before this bill can be made into law you will see ships coming into Ellis Island with immigrants hanging over the edges. Some ships have established fourth-class steerage rates. Go to Ellis Island and look at the conditions, visit the immigrant ships and see the conditions that prevail. See how bolsheviki and discontents can be made overnight.

Fail to pass this bill and you will not have even passport restrictions after March 4. Fail to pass this bill and then reach peace and you will add to our immigration all the Germans, Austrians, Hungarians, Bulgarians, and Moslem Turks who can raise the money to buy steamship tickets.

Go to the State Department, Congressmen, and read the reports for yourselves. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] is recognized.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this amendment from the standpoint of its philosophy, with due respect to its author, is the most remarkable proposition, in view of the experience of this country, that I have known in all my time in Congress. We of the South tried the experiment of bringing into this country people to do our physical labor. Through generations to come we shall pay the penalty for violating that great law of life which God Almighty announced to Adam at the gate of the Garden of Eden. [Applause.]

Now, what is proposed here? Is it to bring these people here and give them the boon of American liberty? No; but to make them do our physical labor. That is the proposition; that is the first proposition. It is un-American and unsound, as measured by the experience of the races of men in the realm of government.

Now, another proposition: They propose to put this cheap labor into competition with the man who is trying to build a little home out in the country. There is no getting away from that. We know that the foundation of government is the owned home. No government can be stronger than its foundation. What do we propose to do? We propose to bring these peoned men here from Europe, and if a man has a little 25 or 30 acre farm, place him in competition with a man who with this cheap labor is operating a farm of some hundreds or thousands of acres. These farm homes are the strength of government in the country. The strength of government there is not represented by the big landowner who lives in town and rides around in his automobile. I have no prejudice against those folks. I own a pretty good size farm myself. I am not speaking for or against a class. I speak for my country now. We know that the strength of this country has its fountain head in the rural district. We know that. Now, we propose to-day to let the man with two or three thousand acres of land hire this cheap labor and put it in competition with the man who is raising a family on his own little farm.

There is no getting away from that. Anyone who has any sense knows that. What will be the result?

The result would be to drive from the farm the bright American boy, send him to town, and fill his place with a man who has the badge of peonage on him, who will hate the country because it will not permit him to engage in avocations that are more remunerative than farming. In the name of common sense, gentlemen, what are we driving at here? Pardon a personal reference, but I want you to know that I know what I am talking about. I own, as I said, a farm. It is paid for. I have a neighbor of good old American stock. He was formerly a tenant; by industry and economy he got together enough money to make a payment on a farm. He is trying desperately to pay for it and to give to his children enough education to make them intelligent, useful American citizens. I have three other neighbors, my personal friends, owning large tracts of land, who live in the city of Dallas. Pass this amendment and we can fill our places with this cheap European immigration, hire overseers, and make money selling our produce at a price which would wipe out every hope that this other farmer ever had of paying for his farm. One of us could buy that farm, and probably would buy it, and we could hire some more of these peons to work it. Not only is that true, but it would drive away the tenant of American citizenship. On my farm there is a man of good old American stock, whose ancestors have fought the battles of this country and supported its institutions since the beginning of the Government. He is raising a fine family, who work in the fields; a credit to any community. This family loves the country and is needed there. Pass this amendment and if I should follow the suggestions of my self-interest, I would dispossess this man and send his family away, to what place I can not guess, and put an overseer in his place. Wouldn't that make a fine country! What sort of response do you suppose we would get from such people as that in the hour when it became necessary for the defense of the Nation that it call for the rendition of the supreme service and the supreme sacrifice? I have no prejudice against my neighbors who live in the city where I live. They are my friends, but it is the man, the real farmer, living on his own farm, who constitutes the great national asset and not the absentee landlord, who lives in the city. I am not trying to serve my friends. I am trying to serve myself. I am trying to serve my country and guard the fountain head of its strength against this proposed pollution.

You talk now about not having people enough to produce our food. We have produced this year enough to bankrupt the farmers of this country, and we know it. Are not prices cheap enough now? What peculiar right have these town folks? If they do not want to pay the price now, let them go out and go to work and produce these things for themselves. [Applause.]

That old idea that we have that we must have somebody else to do our work should be dismissed from our thoughts. I want to tell you that the most serious mistake that you can make is to have the positions of manual labor held by those people, whose blood can not be bred into the generations to come, into the entire population. There is no question of doubt about that at all. Yet gentlemen come here and seriously propose that the positions of labor shall be held by people who have the badge of inferiority upon them and a limit set upon their possibilities of service in this country. I say with all due respect to the distinguished gentlemen who are advocating this amendment, it is a most remarkable proposition, in view of the experience of my own people.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Does the gentleman know that last year——

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yielded for just a question.

Mr. SABATH. A large delegation of citizens of the gentleman's State appealed to the committee so that they would oppose legislation to suspend immigration in order that that imported labor could be used on the farms of that State?

Mr. VAILE. I want to say that the gentleman now addressing the House was not one of that delegation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not mean to be discourteous.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Gentlemen, I am not here to-day to represent any large or small delegation of people from anywhere on earth. I stand here with my responsibility as a Representative of the American Congress to the best of my ability representing my Nation. [Applause.] I am representing my Nation to-day.

Now, let us see what is proposed. Let us see the situation. Take this picture: Here is the country out here. Here is a man who has two or three hundred acres and here is another man who has 25 acres, but he has some strong, clear-eyed American boys who hope for that day when they can make enough to buy another 25 acres at their daddy's side, and they hope to do that out of the earnings they will make from the sale of their daddy's products. What do you propose to do? You propose to bring peons here to work on the farm of the fellow who owns the automobile, who will be able to produce commodities at a price that will make impossible the realization of the ambition of those clear-eyed American boys. That is what you propose to do. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Does the gentleman know that the bill makes it possible to bring in that kind of labor that the gentleman objects to, from Mexico and Canada and Newfoundland?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am speaking to the pending amendment.

Mr. VAILE. If the gentleman will pardon me, the bill does not do that.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The vote is going to be on this amendment.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman allow me to answer the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; because I want to beat this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. VAILE. The situation is in good hands. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Now, gentlemen, I speak as a southern man, and I have a right to be heard here, because I know what I am talking about. A few years ago I asked a man who lived in one of the old Southern States how many of the sons of former landowners and slave owners owned land in his county, and he said he did not know of but one plantation that was not owned by the sons of the overseers and the sons of the "poor white trash." That is the sort of penalty a people has to pay when they think that somebody is a little too good to work. It is the greatest curse that ever came to a nation on this earth when it gets into its head that it has to have a "laboring class." I was talking to a man from New England a little while ago, and he said, "Who is going to build our sewers?" Do you think they have sewers only in that part of the world where the people are able to import somebody to dig their sewers?

You will not let these people come into the towns. Why? Because you are afraid of organized labor. [Applause.] That is the plain truth about it. If there is any philosophy resting under this bill, why do you propose to let them come into the country? Because you are not afraid of the farmer. All you expect to have to do at the next election time is to go out there and soft soap him and "honeyfugle" him, and tell him of the things you are going to do for him, and ask him about the turnip patch and the old gray mare and about the boy who had a stone bruise on his heel when you were at his house last year. [Laughter.] That is what you think. But the time has come, gentlemen, when agriculture can no longer be considered as an inexhaustible commissary to feed business, but it must be recognized as a business in itself, and we have got to deal with agriculture upon this proposition, that agriculture must bid for every boy on the farm against every industry in the country. In the name of common sense, how do you expect agriculture to hold enough of our own people in that place which I say, in the light of human history, is the breeding ground of the Nation and the fountainhead of its strength? [Applause.] But you propose to drive them out and to fill their places with folks whom you are not willing to have live in town. That is what you propose by this amendment. Think of it. You propose to drive them out by these imported hordes from Europe, by the people whom you are not willing to have live in town. You propose to destroy every hope of every country boy who has a poor father of living there and making an honest living in the country, and eventually of building there a home for his own wife and his children. There is no other conclusion than that. Why do you want these people? You want them in order to reduce the price of farm commodities. What is the effect? It will reduce the ability of agriculture to bid against industry in order to hold enough of our own people to produce the meat and bread to keep our people alive. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I am in favor of this bill, and I am opposed to this amendment. I am not going to discuss the points that have been so thoroughly covered by a number of gentlemen who have preceded me, but there are one or two features of this amendment that I do want to call to the attention of the House.

In the first place, there is no necessity for an influx of farm labor into the country at this time. In the issue of the morning Oregonian which came to me this morning I read that there are 10,000 idle men in the city of Portland. Those conditions obtain throughout the country. We will have an ample supply of farm labor in this country to take care of our agricultural necessities if some of the men who are bound to live in town will go out in the country and help grow the crops and tend the cattle ranges and the sheep ranges.

Now, there is one other point, and then I am through, and that is this: If we make this exemption and if, for example, 25,000 of these laborers are admitted to go on the farms, we will soon have a demand from the Department of Labor for about a thousand or more deputies, Government agents, and spies to keep watch on these fellows. Let us not set up a class of labor in this country that has to be watched by Government officials, so that when it is out of a job it has to be deported. We have enough people on the Government pay roll at this time. Let us not bring about a condition that makes it necessary for us to hire hundreds and perhaps thousands more Government employees and add to the expense of the taxpayers.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McARTHUR. I will.

Mr. LAZARO. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules [Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas] the other day in presenting the rule called attention to the fact that later on a tariff bill would be brought in to exclude foreign products from competition with American products. Now, if that is true, can a Republican Member of the House from an agricultural section consistently vote for the Rainey amendment to permit foreigners to come here to this country and produce products made in competition with American farmers?

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, that involves a very wide range of discussion which is not germane to this amendment. I see the smiling countenance of my friend from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], who is undoubtedly capable of answering the question himself. I hope the amendment will be voted down. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I do not intend to cover the ground that some of the others have covered, but I want to call attention to this effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. The amendment would allow any and all immigrants from European countries, without limit, and makes no provisions for keeping them on the farms. In order to afford any appreciable relief to farming conditions in this country it would be necessary to have thousands or hundreds of thousands of laborers, and it would be as impossible to keep those people on the farm as anything that you might conceive. If you permitted hundreds of thousands of people to come into this country under the guise of laboring on the farms, you would be forced to increase the number of Government officials a hundred thousand in order to keep watch on those people and keep them on the farms, because our experience with immigration has taught us that there are men who make it their business to get people into this country who have no funds with which to meet conditions that they find when they arrive here, and, of course, they drift right into the cities. The moment you turn a lot of people loose on the farms you would have them leaving the farm and going to the city at once, and you might just as well strike out the enacting clause of this law as to pass this amendment. This amendment would simply operate as a subterfuge to get unrestricted immigration. I see no reason for making any exception of this character, for, as my colleague so well pointed out, if you made the exception and put them on the farms, and even though you could keep them there, you would simply enable temporarily a few men to go on the farms, and you would soon have a worse condition than ever. There are some people who want the price of farm products gauged down to the basis of cheap labor, and that is what those who are opposing this bill want.

I am in favor of a law which will keep out the flood tide of bolshevists, anarchists, and bomb throwers, who are anxious to spread their poisonous doctrines throughout this country. If a bill is not passed, millions of immigrants will sweep over this land and our institutions as well as form of government will be in danger.

Much has been said on this floor about making farm life attractive. Now, to my way of thinking, the way to relieve the condition on the farms of this country is not by trying to make farm life more attractive, as some people say, by giving them some of the modern conveniences, but the way to relieve the condition on the farm is to make farm life profitable, to furnish the farmer a market, credits, a chance to dispose of his products, and then the conveniences will come in the ordinary course of events.

The thing I want to call your attention to before I sit down is this, that I can see no reason for cutting the period of the operation of this law from two years to 14 months, as is provided by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. [Applause.] My friend from Washington said that it was in the nature of a fill in, while other legislation might be prepared. Now, we do not want to be put in the position at the end of this year in which we will have to consider other rush legislation to fill in again.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield; will the gentleman accept the reason now?

Mr. JONES of Texas. In just a moment. Here is what I want to say, why not make this law operative for a longer period and if a new bill is ready in the meantime we can pass it, and that will, by implication, repeal the law we are now making? Sometime ago we passed a law, and now we are passing a filling-in law. What is the use of cutting it down to 14 months and limiting its operation while we are preparing a new law? Why not let it run two or three years, at least, and if we get a bill ready sooner we can enact it, and either by express provision or by implication repeal the present law? [Applause.] For that reason I hope some member of this committee will call for a record vote, and a separate vote, on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, and I hope that amendment will be defeated and the bill be permitted to remain as it was originally when brought before the House. [Applause.]

In view of the fact that the farmer and his problem have been brought into this debate frequently, I desire to have read from the Clerk's desk the following resolutions, which were passed at a mass meeting of farmers:

PAMPA, TEX., December 5, 1920.

Hon. MARVIN JONES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: A mass meeting of farmers held in this city in connection with the meeting of the National Wheat Growers' Association December 4, 1920, passed the following resolutions by unanimous vote and ask that the same be read and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that the policy now being followed of withdrawing money from circulation is too radical and is of doubtful benefit;

"Resolved, That whereas the price of wheat and other grains have reached a price far below the cost of production, thus bringing loss and demoralization to all farm industries, the price now obtainable we fully believe to be fictitious, brought about by cunningly devised exploitation through the Grain Exchange of Chicago, we therefore ask that you use your best efforts to obtain absolute facts as to the good or evil of gambling in grain futures. If, as we fully believe, the effect is harmful to the public, then we respectfully ask that you seek a remedy; be it further

"Resolved, That you use your influence and vote for all measures that will legitimately benefit farm industry in this country. We do not hesitate to say that it is our opinion that the agricultural interests of this country should be afforded the same consideration that is extended to other industries of much less importance."

Praying your assistance in our behalf, we most respectfully submit the resolution as adopted for your consideration.

NELS WALBERG, President.
C. C. DODD, Secretary.

I also desire to insert here a discussion of this problem from the pen of Mrs. Warner:

BACK TO THE FARM.

[By Mrs. Phebe K. Warner.]

"Good-by, ma. Good-by, pa.
"Good-by, mule, with your old hee-haa."

This is the song our farm boys sang just four short years ago. Then turning their backs on the barn door and the kitchen door they faced their doom with the other millions to make the world safe for democracy. The mothers and sisters on the farm dried their tears with their aprons till their soldier sons disappeared beyond the horizon—to join the nearest training camp. Then with a courage never known before they turned their faces toward the fields. Food, food, food, was the cry that rang across the waters and around the world. The world must be fed. The world must have bread.

And the Government said, give us your boys and your bread and the Government will give you $2 per bushel for your wheat. And with plenty of boys and plenty to eat we can conquer all the foes of the whole world. And the fathers and the mothers on the farm gave their boys, and they went forth into the fields to sow and to reap that they might help save the people and the Government. And they accepted $2 per bushel for their wheat. After they had paid $5 per day for every day of help they had had. And they hauled it to town and poured it willingly and gladly into the granaries of the Government.

And, behold, what did they do next? Across the Continent and out into every home in our Nation came the first, second, third, fourth, and then the victory call for Liberty bonds. And the farmers and their wives loved their sons and their neighbors' sons and their Nation's sons. And straightway they extended the mortgages on their farms and they paid the extra interest and the extra income tax and used the $2 per bushel received for their wheat to buy Liberty bonds. Those who did not have wheat used their corn and cotton and cattle money to buy bonds. And they not only bought bonds, but in answer to every call for Red Cross and community service they went over the top and the World War was won by American men, American money, and American food.

And our Government at Washington arose and said, "See what we have done." What power, what loyalty, what obedience, what sacrifice! Truly, no other nation hath ever seen such unity of spirits as this." And the nations of the whole world, with one accord, turned their hopes for protection and care and food and clothing toward the farms of America. And the call went forth to the farmers, "Plant more, plant more. Turn up your clocks an hour. Get up earlier, work harder, and work longer, for the world is starving and the farmers of America must save the world else it perish." And the men and women on the farms heard the cry and they straightway went into the fields another year and planted more abundantly, and they labored longer and harder, because the harvest was so great and the laborers so few and high priced and inefficient. But they labored with a song of peace and joy in their hearts, because the war was over and they now hoped to not only help feed a starving world, but they hoped to sell the surplus crops for enough to pay the debts and mortgages that had been neglected to support the Government. And they hoped to send the boys and girls away to school, who had been held at home to take the place of the soldiers.

But, alas! In a moment, a most treacherous moment in the business life of the farmer, his hope was gone. His high-produced products took a fall. Cotton, corn, cattle, wheat, pork, and all, dropped below the cost price and left the loyal, overworked patriots of the farm with less than nothing to pay their neglected and accumulated obligations.

And to-day millions of farmers are wondering what has become of the Government they fought for, the Government they toiled for, the Government they sacrificed the very blood of their own sons to save? It saved others. We helped it to save other nations. Why has it forsaken its own? The faith of the present fathers in a government of the people, by the people, and for the people was never before so near the breaking point. What will it mean to this Nation to lose the confidence of its food and clothing producers?

Is it true that a government strong enough to conquer the world can not protect its own people from a few gambling rascals? The words "back to the farm" never meant less to our people than at this very hour.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present only a brief statement of my views on the measure now pending before the House.

I shall vote for this bill with all that pleasure which comes from a conviction conceived by indisputable facts and nourished by calm reason. One of my chief gratifications arising from the presentation of this measure to the House is due to the fact that in effect it is a national declaration that this domain of ours is for our own use, and that in the future we propose to so regard it, and to jealously safeguard it. It is a declaration that all its beneficent opportunities and inviting conditions will be given or withheld at our own pleasure, subject to our duty to ourselves and that we safely owe to other people.

Ours is the only national domain in the world that seems to be regarded as belonging to everyone who desires to enter into it. This situation is due to the fact that in the past we have given an almost universal welcome to the people of every race and clime. This policy grew out of the unparalleled opportunities presented by a vast and rich domain singularly inviting to the adventurous and liberty-loving peoples of all nationalities, and so gave birth to the desire to develop this domain and to exploit its vast resources as rapidly as possible. This purpose has been wonderfully accomplished. While this policy, however, has given us a marvelously rapid development, the fact remains that we have become the most polyglot nation in existence and possess in our citizenship great numerical elements so diverse in social, religious, and political conceptions as to furnish a source of imminent danger to the country. The time has come, and is now at hand, when we should change our former policy of immigration. Owing to the chaotic conditions prevailing in humanity throughout the whole world, brought about by the war, with its resulting poverty, destruction of property, loss of opportunity, and the destruction of family ties, millions of people on the other side of the Atlantic and Pacific are clamoring for the opportunity to emigrate to this country. We are threatened by a veritable tidal wave of the discontented, the impoverished, and the unsettled populations of Europe and even of parts of Asia. This condition furnishes an immediate menace to our own welfare. Unless provided against, it will disturb labor and the housing conditions in our populated centers, now already overtaxed. It will increase to an alarming extent discontent through want and need and suffering, which, if not alleviated by national or community effort, will inevitably lead to disorder, crime, and hunger riots.

If we are to extend our present open-door policy into the future, there is a practical certainty that our Government will fall or, at least, become so tainted and contaminated by foreign ideas and purposes as to lose all of its original character and beneficence. The time has come for the country to proclaim in no unmistakable terms its intention in the future to safeguard its own citizenship with a more meticulous care than it has ever exercised in the past, and that its settled determination will be to admit into our citizenship no one who is not adaptable, who is not assimilable, and who does not furnish ample reasons for believing that this citizenship is eagerly sought after by reason of a real love for our Government and its institutions. Certainly the time has come to exclude all those whom we know by former experience have shown that they are not assimilable, and that they, while living under our flag, secretly cherish the flag of another nationality. Especially should that class be excluded who admittedly come to our country for the purpose alone of obtaining a higher wage, living, however, in the meantime at a lower level, with the fixed intention of saving all they can in order to return in a short time to their own country.

I take it for granted that there is no dispute as to the right of any country to say who shall and who shall not enter as an immigrant. This right is not only a matter of adjudicated international law, but if there had been no adjudication of such a principle, in the very nature of things it would stand out clearly as an axiom, inasmuch, by necessity, such a principle lies at the bottom of national sovereignty, and is a fundamental principle as well of national preservation. It is as distinctly true of a nation as of the individual home. The home is precious to the individual exactly in proportion as it is his, and his alone. If every passer-by can enter therein and claim the same privileges and rights as the owner of the home enjoys it would lose at once its crowning glory of peace and rest and security. For a long time to come we have enough foreign elements fusing in our national crucible to command our utmost attention. It is a question, a very grave question, whether we have not already too many.

Let us pass this measure at once. Let us shut out the horde that threatens to overwhelm us and earnestly bend all our efforts to amalgamating the foreign elements we already have in order to make out of them homogeneous American citizens. There is no question that to accomplish this it will require all the energies we possess—national, State, and community. In conclusion, let me emphasize the fact that our first duty is to our own country. That is what we are sent to this House for. We are the Representatives of the American people, elected to safeguard their interests. We are not the Representatives of Poland, of the Balkan nations, or of Italy, or of Ireland, or of Japan. The war in Europe has undoubtedly produced a condition equivalent to a vast seismic disturbance involving social, economic, political, and even religious foundations. There either is or is not a menace to the United States from this source. If there is such a menace, we should stand together for the enactment of law that will safeguard our own country. I do not admire the attitude of those who are hostile to this bill and eventually will not vote for it, but who seek to limit its operations. Logically, it would be just as easy for Congress to repeal an exclusion act covering a period of 10 years as it would be to reenact the measure, if necessary, every 12 months. The debate so far reveals very clearly a greater devotion to constituencies than to the general welfare of the country, which of itself justifies a change in our national policy, at least until we have digested and assimilated not the average immigrant but those who sit in professional chairs and even occupy seats in this House. The man is blind who does not see that the Nation is suffering from acute indigestion, a national dyspepsia, induced by overloading the stomach of the body politic with a mass of indigestible stuff. We should exercise the greatest care in the future over this matter of immigration. The time has come to stop the silly prattling that this country of ours is an asylum for every man on earth, regardless of the effect upon the integrity of our institutions and the happiness and welfare of the people.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I did not expect to say anything on this bill, but when such an amendment is offered as is proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, to admit the whole scum of creation into the United States under the false pretense of lowering the price of farm products and benefiting the American Nation and American people, I can not sit silent.

To begin with, this ought to be a permanent law. Congress should go further and prevent all foreigners from coming into the United States to live. Our institutions must be safeguarded. I shall vote against the amendment reducing the time from 24 months to 14 months. This amendment now under consideration proposes to allow foreigners to come into the country on the pretense that they will be farmers. To my mind, that is almost an insult to the people of this country who realize the real situation.

All of the undesirable, congested city populations of Europe that would be obnoxious to the people of the United States and to the institutions of this country would pretend that they were farmers in order to come to the United States. All of them would certainly pretend to become farmers. Let us see; if they were legitimately allowed in the United States and to go on the farm to produce food and raiment, what would be the ultimate result? Every man who has this year raised wheat, corn, meat, cattle, and other food crops for sale has lost money, and every one knows that the farmers who have produced wool and the cotton and the sugar and the rice for people to consume, at this very hour can not get the cost of production. Some of these commodities will not bring enough to pay for the fertilizer and the cost of labor, not counting the interest on the investment in the farm lands and the equipment—the mules and the stock and the improvements necessary to produce such crops. Every one knows that the warehouses are full of grain, stockades filled with cattle, and the prices that are offered are less than it cost to produce them. Wool in the West will not bring the actual cost of production. Cotton in the South to-day can not be sold at the price that is offered for it, or only about one-half of what it cost to produce that commodity, not only for the United States but for the entire civilized world.

Now, sugar in the South—I do not know what it costs in the West—is to-day selling at a price less than it costs to make it. There is no market for rice. I do not know, my friends, if this amendment were adopted and all of these hundreds of thousands were allowed annually to come into the country and went on the farms of the country whether there would be such an overproduction as to actually drive out of business men who have their money invested in farms or not. As it is, I know that the farmers can not make money, and to have such an amendment as this injected into the bill would be an injustice to our country and an irreparable wrong to the farmers of this country. The small farmers working their lands with their children can hardly live at the present low prices of farm products.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is plain to be seen that the gentleman has given very careful attention to this question. Does the gentleman think that the amendment was offered in good faith?

Mr. QUIN. Oh, I can not impugn the motives of the gentleman who offered the amendment. The only fear I have is that it might pass, because I know what influences in this country have done this, and that they want to continue to import this foreign element here. There are some selfish interests in the United States that want all of this type of immigration to come in for the purpose of lowering the cost of labor. I shall vote against this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. FOCHT rose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make an effort to close debate upon this amendment. I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the amendment close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Reserving the right to object, who is to get the five minutes?

Mr. FOCHT. I would like to have five minutes myself.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, 40 minutes have been taken on the part of those against the amendment and only 10 minutes in favor of it. I desire to have at least 5 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOCHT. I had hoped that there might be given in the discussion of this amendment every opportunity to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY], because I am anxious to hear what reason he can give for undertaking to impose upon the American people through the adoption of this amendment as a part of this bill such an iniquity, such a menace as it would be bound to bring about. I understand now that he is going to enlighten us, and I hope he may have every opportunity to emphasize the subject.

Yesterday a statement was made here—in a sense of humor, I suppose—to the effect that the proponents of this bill all seem to come from the agricultural country, from the wide, bounding, expanding plains of the West. Humorous remarks were directed to Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas.

Mr. Chairman, I do not happen to come from the plains of the West, but, on the contrary, I come from the great industrial State of Pennsylvania. Unfortunately for that great Commonwealth, probably the greatest single division of government on earth, for long years we have been harrassed and menaced by probably more of this product from the slums of Europe than all of the other Commonwealths of the United States together. Therefore, I speak with definite knowledge of what a calamity it would be if we do not pass this bill and permit further the influx of these people from Europe, and truly those now coming constitute a most undesirable element of humanity.

If this is a matter of humanity, if it is a matter of pity and compassion on behalf of the poor, downtrodden people of Europe, then, rather than have them come here with the doubtful productive capacity on the part of the head of the family, with the burden of keeping probably a family of five or six members, it would be far better for us to load our ships with the products of this country and feed them over there and let them stay there, where we are supposed to have saved the world for democracy for them. The idea which has been expressed here in respect to bringing these people from Europe to work is a mistaken idea and an erroneous notion, for they work only when they please. In my district, where many of these foreigners live, they work only when it suits them; they have no moral sense of obligation to an employer at all. A man with capital may undertake to open up a coal mine. He will set up his breakers or open a drift and cut the vein, making his calculations on a certain production of tonnage. Instead of bringing out that tonnage these people will work often only three days a week and then go rabbit hunting the rest of the time.

I want to say to you gentlemen from the South, with whom I very seldom agree on matters with respect to public economy—and certainly we differ widely upon the question of the tariff—that I am proud of the position you take on this measure and I offer you the hand of fellowship in our efforts to protect American citizens who are already here, the descendants of men who made this country, who made the sacrifices, and their families and interests, and I applaud with you the idea that we are not going to divide any more with the rest of the world until we have settled many now present and all-consuming questions at home. I hope in compensation for what you are doing here to-day to help protect the northern cities and the northern sections from any further importation of this class of people that we can in some way just help you solve the race question in the South. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that some of these gentlemen who are opposed to this amendment are not familiar with the bill now pending. If their contention is correct, surely the committee has erred in embodying section 5 and section 7 into the bill——

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Is it not true that under this bill as it stands now farm labor can be brought in from Mexico, Cuba, Newfoundland, and Canada?

Mr. SABATH. Yes. It can for six months. In the first place, in section 5 we exempt from the operation the importation of persons to be employed as domestic servants, so that all those who need domestic servants will have the privilege, not of engaging them here but of importing them. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] is very familiar with that provision. Surely, if his contention is correct as to the general position, he must vote against this section 5.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. For a question.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that section 7 was put into the bill and discussed by the committee and the distinguished gentleman now speaking for the sole purpose of aiding interchange between business men in Mexico and the United States and Canada and the United States, and that it had no relation to farm labor?

Mr. SABATH. I have now spoken relative to section 5. I shall come to section 7, but it seems to me that the gentleman from California is afraid of what I am going to say about section 7 and for that reason he propounds the query to me before I have a chance to say anything about it. I will tell you why that section was put in it. It is because the New England and the southern Representatives in 1919, in 1918, and even this year appealed to the committee for relief, to enable them to import Mexican and Canadian farm labor, because they could not find the labor they needed so much upon their farms, the cotton and the sugar-beet plantations.

Mr. VAILE rose.

Mr. SABATH. In a moment. I admit that it will relieve the condition on the Canadian border, and I am not opposed to it. Inasmuch as we produce about eight billions' worth more annually than we can consume, I believe that we should place ourselves on the friendliest possible terms with other nations, so that the farmers, the manufacturers, and the laborers can find an outlet for this great surplus that is being produced by this great and glorious country—and that with the assistance of the "undesirable" men in the district of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield first to my colleague on the committee and then I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. VAILE. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that section 7 provides for admission during the period of suspension of "otherwise admissible aliens" and that that means those who can pass the literacy test, which means further that Mexican laborers certainly can not be admitted under that section.

Mr. SIEGEL. Will the gentleman yield a moment; there is nothing in this bill to prevent the Secretary of Labor from doing what he did in 1918, to allow all the wet backs and dry backs to come in from Mexico for farm labor.

Mr. SABATH. Of course not. In 1919, as the report shows, there were 40,000 Mexicans and others admitted upon the special appeals of the farmers of the South and the farmers of the West, to relieve a condition that then existed. I will now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman spoke of the surplussage of production here. Will the gentleman be willing in order to equalize that, vote for a tariff against the wheat from Canada and corn from the Argentine Republic? Answer that, I have asked the gentleman a question.

Mr. SABATH. I will answer it. If it would be for the best interest of the people of America; yes.

Mr. FOCHT. I will remember that.

Mr. SABATH. But how can a tariff aid or benefit the American farmer? Does not the gentleman know that we import wheat and corn only in negligible quantities, and that only for seeding purposes? The facts are that we export 50 bushels of wheat and corn for every bushel we import. The facts are we raise millions and millions of bushels of wheat and corn above what we can consume.

Mr. FOCHT. Why is it coming from Canada now?

Mr. SABATH. Because, I am informed, that our farmers are holding it for a higher price and refuse to ship or sell. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] and other gentlemen from neighboring States are greatly alarmed about the future of our country and about the deplorable conditions that now exist. They are all pleading to close our doors to the world and, at the same time, appeal that the avenues of trade to America's products be found and established. Others, again, like the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], deplore an increase in the imports and demand high tariffs. Both groups fail to realize that if we start a policy of discrimination, as is contemplated by these gentlemen, the other countries may retaliate, and, instead of taking our tremendous surpluses, will secure their needs and deal with other countries.

What, then, will become with the nearly $8,000,000,000 worth of surplus wheat, corn, cotton, and manufacturing products which we exported in 1919 and which may increase by $500,000,000 this fiscal year? At the same time I wish to ask the gentleman if it does not require some labor to make possible the harvesting of the tremendous crops and to produce these extraordinary quantities of merchandise that we have and hope to continue to supply the world with. We have been in position to produce these enormous quantities of everything because we have had the labor. Every enlightened and far-seeing country that has been increasing its production and its exports and thereby its wealth has not only permitted foreign labor to come in but has offered special inducements to it. This, however, the gentlemen, due to the veil of prejudice, can not see. They utilize, without examination or investigation, every unfavorable utterance and article, it matters not from whom it emanates. It matters not how irresponsible the person that utters it, they use it on the floor to prejudice the minds of the American people in favor of this and similar bills, little realizing that in years to come they will be obliged, in justice to themselves, to retract and apologize for it and for enacting the legislation that is sought to be enacted in this bill, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding that I pointed out that a century ago the same attacks were made against the then incoming immigration as has been made on this floor during the last few days on the present immigration.

Mr. Chairman, if the gentlemen who have been making these unwarranted and unfair attacks upon the present immigration would only examine the statements that have been made here and elsewhere about those that came only two or three generations ago, I feel that if they are not altogether selfish and have any feeling whatever they would hesitate before making these assertions. I have the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] to thank for this observation, because of his remark that if this law should have been enacted 500 years ago his people would still be the possessors of this great and wonderful hemisphere. He inquired how many would be here to-day, and I inquire if such a law had been enacted only 200 years ago—yes, 100 years ago—how many of you gentlemen would be here to-day, and I can go further and say, if such a law had been enacted 60 or 80 years ago, I am sure many of you gentlemen who are so strenuously advocating the passage of this bill would not be here to do so.

I am satisfied that the American people are not in favor of this legislation, and I am positive that they will resent it. In fact, I know it will not become the law, because I doubt very much whether the Senate will ever be carried away as you seem to be, but if it should I have the utmost confidence that this great man, yes, the greatest man that ever occupied the White House, will ever approve of it, and you will not be able to pass it over his veto.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, in five minutes it will be impossible for me to answer the absurd objections urged to this amendment. In the first place, it is seriously argued on this floor by a gentleman, for whose legal acumen I have always had the greatest respect, that if this amendment were adopted it would impose a system of involuntary servitude in this country and that the farmer who employed labor under those circumstances will be guilty of peonage. Why, nothing can be further from the fact. The laborer who comes in under this amendment comes to this country because he wants to come here; he comes here because he agrees to work on the farm; he comes here because he agrees to work nowhere else; and he comes here because he voluntarily agrees to leave this country when his work on the farm is over. Is there any system of involuntary servitude in that proposition by which the farmer can be held liable? Why the contract of the laborer is with the Government of the United States. He comes here for this purpose and for no other purpose and that disposes of the argument, of course, of involuntary servitude.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion in that connection?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is well aware and all the members of the committee are well aware that this same thing has been going on here, as we have had agricultural laborers introduced here and that nobody has ever raised the constitutional question.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes; I am coming to that question. And it is very seriously argued that this would be an iniquity. I will undertake to say without fear of any successful contradiction that since the morning stars sang together no commercial nation, no nation that has ever had any standing in the world, excluded from its boundaries common labor of any description for any period of time, and no country has excluded skilled labor for any period of time from its boundaries except Germany. This country never did and no nation in the world ever did. Exclude from this country the labor of men who are willing to perform the drudgery on farms? Why the proposition is absurd. And on the theory that it will keep wages up on the farm if we keep them out? Why wages are so high now farmers can not pay them. Farm labor in this country has disappeared and disappeared entirely. In the wheat sections and corn sections and dairy sections of the United States there are no more farm laborers. Farmers exchange labor between themselves in order to get their crops harvested and on the market. If this amendment does not prevail now, I promise those gentlemen that when we reach section 7 I propose to try to offer another amendment. You can not stand for the things in section 7 and be against this amendment. It is argued that the farm laborer coming here might marry and have children, and that it will disrupt family ties and compel him to go away when they quit their employment. The same thing might be said to apply to the Mexican laborer who continues to come here under the bill as drafted. The same thing might be said to apply to students coming here who are compelled to leave when their work in the colleges is over. The same thing might be said as to the excepted class of pleasure seekers who come here and are compelled to go away when the purpose for which they come is ended; and to all these excepted classes who come in under the bill and go away when the thing for which they came is ended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, may I have three minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the time for debate has been fixed.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes; but I am asking unanimous consent to speak for three minutes more.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I hope unanimous consent will be granted.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will give the gentleman ample time. I would like to have his views.

Mr. SABATH. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have an additional three minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. As the gentleman says the proposition will be up on another section I shall be compelled to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday I called the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the fact that certain students of a certain university just before our recent election had indorsed a convicted traitor of this country who is serving a term in the penitentiary. He seemed very much surprised. I now want to cite him to the particular university. I quote from this excerpt placed in my scrapbook out of one of the Ohio papers just before the election. I will read the following excerpt from it:

In a straw vote on the presidential election taken by the University News, official newspaper of the student body of the University of Cincinnati * * * Eugene Debs, Socialist, ran third with 42 votes. * * * The greatest surprise of the straw voting was the strength shown by Debs at the medical college. He ran first with 33 votes to Harding's 32 and Cox's 15. This represents the vote of a majority of the seniors and freshmen of the medical college.

I call attention to this because it is a serious matter. We are admitting students from abroad, men who claim to be students, and yet who enter the universities of our land for no other purpose than poisoning the minds of the American youth whom we send to the various institutions of this land, and are away from their home, away from the influence of the fireside, and they meet with this kind of instruction. I am sorry to say it is permeating a good many institutions of learning in this land. Only a week ago it was reported here in the Capitol that in the great university of Princeton, our great Princeton University president, Dr. Hibben, even, was harboring socialism. I knew that was not correct. I knew that was false on its face, because I knew Dr. Hibben, and I took occasion to write him and ask him about the circumstance. And I want to read his letter, because the fathers and mothers of this land who have boys in the great Princeton University have a right to know that it is sound American doctrine only that is permitted to be fostered there. I read his letter:

PRINCETON UNIVERSITY, PRESIDENT'S ROOM,
Princeton, N. J., December 6, 1920.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: I am very glad that you have given me the opportunity through your letter, of denying the statement which appeared in one of the Washington publications that I have indorsed socialism. I have been and am thoroughly opposed to socialistic doctrines of every degree and kind.

Some time ago our undergraduates wished to organize a society for the study of socialism. Nearly all of the young men in it, with the exception of a very few, have strong convictions of antisocialism. It seemed to me wise to allow these men to pursue an intelligent, though by no means a prejudiced, study of socialism, rather than create a reaction in favor of socialism by forbidding their meetings.

My only direct relation to the society is the request which came through its president to suggest the names of two speakers whom they might invite to Princeton to present the arguments against socialism. This gives me an opportunity which I am very glad to seize. I am now in consultation with Prof. Fetter, the head of the department of economics and social institutions, as to the men whom I shall suggest to the society. We wish to get the strongest men in the country to present their views. In our department of economics and social institutions we have no one in the teaching staff who has any tendency toward socialism of any kind.

I hope, wherever you hear me quoted as being an advocate of socialism you will give it a very emphatic denial.

With warm regards,
Faithfully yours,
JOHN GRIER HIBBEN.

Mr. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Representative from Texas.
House of Representatives United States,
Washington, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. SABATH. Was this letter from the president of the Cincinnati University?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no. Before reading this letter I had just called attention to the fact that it was even reported that socialism was harbored in so great an institution as Princeton University. It is a great satisfaction to me that Dr. Hibben reports it is not harbored there. But I want to say this: It does permeate a good many of the great institutions of this land. Education, proper, wholesome, the right kind, is the salvation of this Republic, but when you get education that teaches the undermining of the fundamental principles of our Constitution, when you get education that seeks to undermine law and order and our Government, then you get an education that is most dangerous in the extreme.

I want to say in regard to this particular clause in the bill which permits so-called students to come, that those students may be 50 years of age. One of them might be Alexander Berkman if he were not so well known. He is a student, a student of socialism. Lenin and Trotski are both students. If they were not known, if we were not onto their modus operandi for undermining good government, they could come here and enter the institutions of learning in this land and scatter their seeds of poison for months and years even before we would find it out. I want to say that this is a dangerous clause. I want to say that it should come out of here. The boys of the United States who are in the universities of our land, the boys of this country, are more important to me than would-be students from abroad.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose that amendment. By virtue of certain treaties existing between the United States and various nations, certain students are permitted to come to this country to enter West Point, Annapolis, and other universities. None of these students can come into America unless they obtain a passport from their own country. It must be viséed by the United States consul at the very place from which they start, and again it must be viséed by the United States consul at the port of embarkation. They must be physically and mentally and morally fit in order to enter the United States. They are subject to all of the restrictive provisions which are found in the immigration law.

Now, my friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] all the time walks over to this side of the House appealing to us over here, perhaps because he has more faith in this side than he has in his own. I appeal to the entire House when I am speaking, asking the entire House to carefully consider what we are trying to do. A student coming to the United States, if he does anything wrong, can be immediately deported. He is not an exception. Do not let us because of aroused hysteria or because some university medical college takes a vote—and some of these young men voted for Debs, with HARDING next, and probably a week or two later they might have been all for HARDING—do not let us consider it any reason why we should shut our doors to students who come here to attend our colleges and universities. The great trouble is that many people have an idea that with constantly tinkering with treaties and immigration laws we are going to change the condition of the mind of the American people. It is the enforcement of the law, as you will find, which is at fault, if you will take the time to examine this entire subject carefully. I say the attempt to tinker with this provision, which is in every treaty, is the most ridiculous thing we can try to do, and makes us the laughing stock of the world. A student who enters the United States under those conditions can be sent out in 24 hours if he violates our laws, if the administrative authorities will only act. For that reason I am opposed to this amendment.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, under the present law it is permissible for students to enter the United States, and, as has been stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL], we have treaties with nations which permit them to send their students to our colleges and universities. For a long time there has been complaint that the treaty and the agreement have been abused. The committee, in their desire to eliminate any possible abuses that might have existed, felt that they should insert this paragraph, and if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] will read paragraph 3 he will see that that provision is a safeguard. It provides that bona fide students who may enter the United States for the purpose solely of study at educational institutions particularly designated by them, and that upon graduation or completion or discontinuance of studies they shall not be entitled to remain in the United States. It has been charged that continuously students from certain countries would come in and within a short space of time would abandon their studies and, in violation of agreement, take positions in various industries. It is to prevent this abuse that this paragraph has been inserted, and the gentleman from Texas should favor this provision, because it is an additional restriction and burden placed upon them, that they must give not only the place to which they go, but also the university which they desire to attend. So I say if the gentleman from Texas would study this provision with his usual care he will come to the conclusion that it is a safeguard against an improper entry on the part of those students who came, as is claimed, as students, but accepted other employment in violation of the privileges granted them.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, I would like very much to see this amendment prevail. The whole bill is intended for the protection of Americanism. That is the most important part; that is the very heart of it. I earnestly hope that this amendment will prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ROGERS offers the following amendment: Page 6, line 23, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"(g) The visé of a passport of an alien may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of State, be refused if the applicant would be dangerous to the public safety or obviously be liable to exclusion if allowed to present himself at a port of the United States for admission: Provided, That such applicant, if rejected by the officer of the United States to whom application was originally made, may appeal to the Secretary of State: And provided further, That the issuance of a visé to an alien by a person duly authorized to issue such visé on behalf of the United States shall not relieve said alien or the steamship company transporting him from the operation of any provision of the laws of the United States."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, under this bill we continue for the period to come the present practice of requiring a consular visé from our consular representatives abroad before an alien shall be allowed to start for the United States. That consul to-day and under this bill would have no discretion whatever in turning back even an obviously unfit alien. That is to say, a man who was a leper, who was a degenerate, who was clearly unfit to be admitted to the United States upon any conceivable theory under the provisions of the immigration laws themselves, might come before him seeking a visé. Yet the consul would have no option, provided the man's papers were regular, and although he could see at a glance the unfitness of the man for admission, that consul would have no right to refuse a visé.

My contention is that if we are going to continue this elaborate system of consular visés that has grown up during the war, we ought to make it of some value. Of course, we all agree that the consuls of the United States abroad must be consuls primarily, and can not impose the elaborate tests which are necessary for the adequate enforcement in detail of the immigration laws. But I submit that for the welfare of the country and for the welfare of the individual immigrant also the consul ought to have some discretion to refuse the visé in cases where, as I say in the amendment, the applicant would be obviously subject to exclusion if he presented himself at a port of the United States. I assert that this is necessary for the protection of the country, because it imposes an additional test upon the immigrant. It puts him through a double sieve.

The immigration-enforcement officers are frequently liable to error. The consular administration of the law, even if my amendment were adopted, would still be liable to error. But if you impose the two exactions, if you put the immigrant through the double sieve, you run just so much the less chance of having him creeping into the country when he should not be allowed to do so.

Take it also from the standpoint of the immigrant. I can not conceive of a more horrible experience than for an immigrant to leave for a port of the United States with his passport from the consul duly visèed—which he thinks, ninety-nine times out of one hundred, is all that he needs, and means that he has full authority to enter this country—and then, when he gets to a port of the United States he finds that he has not passed the barrier at all and that he must comply with the provisions of the immigration laws. Then that man is sent back in his steerage hole in which he came to this country. There can not be a more hopeless feeling than that immigrant has when the news comes to him that he must return to the country whence he came and he realizes that his savings of a lifetime have been sacrificed in order to make this useless journey.

If the consul had the right to refuse in obvious cases, it is true that you will not correct the difficulty invariably, but you will correct the difficulty in a very large percentage of cases.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, both from the standpoint of the country and from the standpoint of the individual immigrant, I believe that to give the consular representatives of the United States at the various ports of the world some discretion in the granting or withholding of visés will be extremely salutary. What is the use of having this elaborate system of visés if a consul can not in some degree, at least, say yes or no to the man who asks for the visé?

Mr. MANN of Illinois rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] may have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Suppose a consul now refuses to visé the passport. What happens?

Mr. ROGERS. So far as I know, no process of appeal is permitted. This amendment would erect the machinery of appeal.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman said practically that the consul was required to grant his visé. What is there that requires the consul to visé a passport?

Mr. ROGERS. Because he has no discretion to refuse it under the instructions that go to him from the Department of State.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is an instruction. That is not the law.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not think there is any law that requires the State Department to give an American citizen a passport or to give a foreigner seeking to come to this country a visé of his passport.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman knows very well that when it comes to an American citizen going abroad, when he seeks the visé of his passport from the representative of a foreign country, it is not obligatory on the representative of the foreign Government to visé his passport, and that the visé is frequently and constantly refused. Now, why should we make a regulation which in effect does away with the visé, because the gentleman says the consul must visé a passport when requested? Why do not the consuls have the authority to refuse the visé now? Who can compel them to visé a passport?

Mr. ROGERS. Of course, the consuls are controlled by the regulation of the Department of State.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is the regulation of the Department of State.

Mr. ROGERS. That is a regulation with the force of law, and the Department of State has always gone upon the theory that it had no discretion to refuse to visé on the ground that the applicant would probably be inadmissible under the immigration laws.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is not this viséing business something that the Department of State itself inaugurated under the war power, without any direct legislation on the subject?

Mr. ROGERS. There has been a good deal of legislation by Congress on the subject. The most recent provision that I think of was in the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill that became effective July 1.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does that require a consul to visé a passport upon request?

Mr. ROGERS. Oh, no. I specifically stated that there was no requirement of law.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then, if the consul refuses to visé a passport the only way the matter can be reached is by the Department of State removing the consul?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is a matter of regulation.

Mr. ROGERS. Or direction.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The Department of State is asked right along to direct consuls to visé passports. Letters are written to the Department of State by Congressmen, Senators, and others. A consul refuses to visé the passports of some foreigner. The person in the old country writes to his friends in this country and they go to their Congressmen or Senators and ask them to write the Department of State to have the Department of State request the consul to visé the passport.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. So the authority exists for the State Department at least to permit consuls to refuse to visé a passport or to visé it, as they see fit.

Mr. ROGERS. I think that is true.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But the gentleman's amendment practically requires the consuls to visé all passports unless obviously the applicant could not come in under the immigration law.

Mr. ROGERS. The State Department—I am frank to say that I can not tell for what reason—has always taken the view that there was no right to use the passport law as an adjunct to the enforcement of the immigration law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The reason being that Secretary Lansing, when the Department of State asked for an extension of the passport law, gave his word to the committee of which the gentleman [Mr. ROGERS] is a member, that the State Department would not attempt to override the Department of Labor, and the State Department to this day is run on the word given by Secretary Lansing to the House Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. ROGERS. If the bill went through without the proposed amendment, does the gentleman conceive that under any circumstances a consul would have the right to refuse a visé for the reason that the applicant was inadmissible under the immigration laws?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No.

Mr. ROGERS. That is precisely what I am trying to reach in this bill, to provide that the consul shall have the right to refuse.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He can refuse to visé a passport for any reason or for no reason. He is not required to give a reason for refusing to visé the passport of an applicant. He can do as he pleases about it.

Mr. ROGERS. The State Department holds that it has no right to enforce the immigration laws under existing law, and that a visé can not be refused an applicant on that ground. I propose to give the State Department the power to do that thing.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact that a great many visés are refused?

Mr. ROGERS. Visés are sometimes refused, I understand——

Mr. SABATH. Upon what authority——

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman will let me answer his first question, I shall be glad to do so. I understand that visés are refused on the ground that the applicant if admitted to the United States would be a dangerous element to our political institutions. I think that is the only ground upon which visés are now refused.

Mr. SABATH. But they have the discretion to refuse.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment. I have nothing to complain of in the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts; it may be all right, but to adopt that we may run into the very danger that we incurred in the last Congress by amending in one paragraph all the immigration laws we have. It might be a good thing. When the time comes, in the next House I hope we may have a select committee to try and write some immigration and passport laws which will be in harmony. That committee should be composed of members of the Immigration Committee and the Committee on Foreign Relations, and perhaps some others. I am of the opinion that we would not help the passport law by any such a blanket paragraph as that offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. Therefore I oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of paragraph 2, and I do so in order to make an inquiry of the chairman pertaining to the visé provision. Paragraph 2 exempts from the operation of this bill travelers or temporary sojourners for pleasure or business, and they are subject to the regulations in the passport provision. Now, we will say that a man who is in sympathy with the soviet government of Russia, a substantial business man, desires to come to the United States for the purpose of business, to purchase large quantities of foodstuffs and other merchandise. As I understand it, unless he can secure a passport from his own government he could not enter the United States. Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; that is correct. But being a citizen of Russia, he would probably do what other Russians have done, go to some other country and secure the passport of some one else. But he can not start on a passport from a government that our Government knows nothing about.

Mr. SABATH. It would apply to any Irishman that would desire to come here on business if Great Britain should refuse to give him a passport?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; that condition will not arise. The provision of the present law is that Austrians, Bulgarians, and Turks who served as noncommissioned officers in the army during the World War can not be admitted. That is the present passport provision.

Mr. SABATH. That was a war measure, but this is not intended as a war measure.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman certainly does not want us in this bill to recognize any country that this Government has not yet recognized?

Mr. SABATH. No; I wanted to know the effect it would have on the commercial relations with other nations.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman knows as much about that as any of us in the House.

Mr. SABATH. Well, I did not have a chance to make the inquiry when the bill was before the committee, because the bill was only before the committee for about an hour, and during that time there was no opportunity offered to make any inquiry, as the gentleman well knows.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman could have made such an inquiry at the hearings.

Mr. SABATH. Yes; if he had the time.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 1, after the word "years," strike out the semicolon and insert the words "and what has been his occupation during that period."

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I think there will be no objection to that amendment. The declarant is called upon to make a full statement as to his antecedents except he is not required to say anything about his occupation so far as I have been able to discover. He ought to be required to say what his occupation has been.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I see no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment on page 5, beginning at line 7. After the word "of," insert the word "five."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 7, after the word "of" and before the word "persons," insert the word "five."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for the purpose of placing some limit on the number of names which one may put in his application. The language has no limit. It says:

Names and addresses of persons acquainted with the applicant in the country from which he starts and in the United States, if any.

It seems to me that in the interest of proper application there should be some number of names required; otherwise it is up to the discretion of the different applicants. I have no definite idea whether it should be 5 or 10, but I have placed it at 5.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. These questions are all on blanks furnished by the State Department at the Government expense. It requires the names of those in the country from which the immigrant comes and also in the United States, if any. He might not be acquainted with five people in the United States, perhaps only one.

Mr. GARD. That refers to the country from which he starts.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I thing that is an administrative matter and not necessary to be put in here.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment—I have not had time to call it to the attention of the committee, but I think it will be agreed to—as a new subdivision at the end of subdivision 9:

(10) A police certificate from his native country; and (11) a certificate of health.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RAKER: Page 5, after the word "law," in line 24, insert "(10) a police certificate from his native country; and (11) a certificate of health."

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that he proposes to add this as one of the things which are to be set forth in the written declaration. How is an alien going to set forth in his declaration a police certificate, unless he quotes it, and then it will not be the document which the gentleman desires.

Mr. SABATH. Perhaps the gentleman means his police record.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Where is he going to get his health certificate?

Mr. RAKER. This is a statement for him to present at the time he presents his declaration. He presents the original certificate from the police which every alien must have and carry.

Mr. VAILE. Not every alien. Some countries do not have that practice.

Mr. RAKER. I am talking now of their own home country.

Mr. VAILE. Not all of them.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; the records show that.

Mr. VAILE. How about England?

Mr. RAKER. The record shows that he carries a certificate, and he puts that in his boot, or in his sock. I want to read what was said by the Commissioner of Immigration at Ellis Island upon this subject. It is important and vital. He says that if we have that in the law it will do more to prevent undesirables coming to this country than any other thing that we can enact. Before I read that I yield first to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. VAILE. Would a person coming from England have his police record in his sock?

Mr. RAKER. If he has one there, yes.

Mr. VAILE. But the gentleman does not say "if he has one." He says he must set forth in his declaration his police record.

Mr. RAKER. If he has one it goes in, just as you provide here for his stating the names of his relatives. If he has not any he can not name them, and therefore he would not be able to come here.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. You say "from his native country." Suppose a person born in Austria or Italy in his infancy has gone to Great Britain and has become a naturalized citizen of that country. How is he going to get his police record in his native country? A baby 6 weeks old has no police record.

Mr. RAKER. Then he would not comply with this provision. If a baby 6 weeks old can not produce his record, he can not produce what this bill provides for.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Then, I say, suppose a native-born Austrian, German, or Italian in his infancy is taken by his parents to Great Britain and becomes a naturalized subject of Great Britain. How is he going to produce a police certificate from his native country? A man's native country is where he is born, not the country of which he happens to be a subject.

Mr. RAKER. He will get one. I want to read now what the commissioner says.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Not until I have concluded the reading.

"The first essential in the immigrants who are coming to this country," said Commissioner Wallis, "is for this Government to see that we are getting the right kind of people. I am no believer in the illiteracy test. A man may not know one letter from another and still make an honest and useful citizen. Since the war we have been getting the bulk of our immigrants from a few countries, but I believe that in the future we shall receive people from nearly all the countries of Europe. I have been given to understand on good authority that we shall soon have considerable immigration from Scandinavia, and I learn from an equally good source that many Dutchmen are preparing to come to America. These Dutchmen are well to do, and many of them are men of considerable means. The reasons for their leaving their country is that so many foreigners from the war-stricken countries of central Europe have been settling in Holland that the conditions there have become disagreeable. And then I learn that there are fully 8,000,000 people in Germany who are anxious to come to the United States and are only waiting until we sign the peace treaty with Germany. Now, if the class of immigrants of whom I have just spoken come to this country, it will add greatly to the desirability of our new population."

"What is the greatest menace in immigration against which this Government has to guard?" I asked.

"Bolshevism and I. W. W.ism," he said. "Just to-day I obtained information that the I. W. W. was planning for an extended propaganda to be spread among the immigrants as soon as they landed in this country. That is the greatest evil which we have to meet. We are trying to offset this propaganda by the propaganda of the Y. M. C. A. and other organizations that preach the doctrine of Americanism. But where there is the least suspicion that false doctrines of radicalism prevail in the would-be immigrant we keep him out. I am now planning to organize a system that will greatly facilitate us in determining whether or not the immigrant is desirable. What I want to bring about is to have the immigrant obtain in his native country a police certificate before he applies for admission to this country. This police certificate will give his entire record and tell us if he is an honest man or a criminal, a good citizen or a plotter. In addition to a character certificate I want every immigrant to have a certificate of health. We must guard against contagious diseases in this country. And when we obtain these certificates of character and health we must still continue with our examination on this side of the ocean. We must be as vigilant here is we are now."

"So the two most vital points to be considered in the admission of the alien to this country are:

"1. His character.

"2. His health?"

"Yes," said the commissioner.

Put these things in and we meet the condition and the experience of these men who are admitting thousands a week—20,000, according to his report, come in there in a week. He says that this will do more to relieve the situation, to make a showing of the man's character and a showing of the condition of his health than anything else, and why not put it in this bill? It will aid to protect our immigrants from the Bolshevists, from the I. W. W., from the criminal, the plotter, and at the same time protect the health of our country.

Mr. SABATH. Does not the gentleman know that he is speaking now of an immigration bill and of immigrants that he believes should be permitted to come in here?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, I yield for a question.

Mr. SABATH. I mean the gentleman who is writing this article.

Mr. RAKER. This article will apply to any alien that lands on the shores of America who desires to enter the United States, whether temporarily or permanently. He should not be a criminal; he should not be a plotter, an anarchist, a Bolshevist, and his health should be good. He should not be permitted to bring into this country contagious disease which in the Old World, because of starvation, is now sweeping away tens of thousands, sending them to their graves. We should not permit them to enter who are diseased, and if you want to make the immigration bill effective, then put the safeguards around the health of your people, put safeguards round the ideals that they seek, and only a few words added to this bill will bring about what one of the best immigration officials says will assist him in doing effective work at Ellis Island.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The amendment proposed has a great deal of merit in the idea, but it is an idea which is applicable to immigrants who come here for permanent residence. It is an idea, in other words, applicable to an immigration bill rather than to a bill for the suspension of immigration. It would apply to only a small class of people in this bill, such as travelers or temporary sojourners here for business or pleasure, students, and employees of Government officials. It would apply mostly to people from our border countries who are otherwise admissible—that is, mostly merchants and business men of Canada and Mexico. It might be a very proper thing to insert it in an immigration bill when the subject is revised to let in larger classes. As applied to this bill, I hope the amendment will not be adopted, and I ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] has read an article which purports to be written by the deputy commissioner of immigration at Ellis Island. He points out what he believes should be the law relative to immigration. Now, I fully concur with the recommendation that the commissioner makes, but I doubt very much whether the gentleman from California will agree with me, because the commissioner recommends the elimination of the literacy test, and I desire to ask the gentleman from California whether he believes that we should now repeal the literacy test and in lieu thereof adopt the provisions which the immigration commissioner recommends? If he does, I am fully in accord. I am ready and willing now to vote for any bill that the commissioner has reported, with all the safeguards and with all the provisions to which the gentleman from California has now called our attention.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Just at this time it is not necessary to modify or change the provisions of the literacy test——

Mr. SABATH. Well.

Mr. RAKER. I have not answered the gentleman yet.

Mr. SABATH. I yielded to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. RAKER. If an alien coming to this country is a bolshevik——

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield for a speech. I yielded only for a question.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. SABATH. I have not yielded to the gentleman from California to answer more than one question, because I did not propound more than one question, and he has not answered it, and I do not desire any other information, because I do not ask it. Now, the amendment which he offers, as has been stated by the gentleman from Colorado, really is impossible of enforcement. The gentleman from California is endeavoring to amend a provision which it is absolutely impossible to amend in the way in which he desires.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to amend my amendment by adding the following. After the word "country" add "if any is required by his native country."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to modify the amendment as stated. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the amendment read as modified.

The CHAIRMAN. For information, the Clerk will report the amendment as proposed to be modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 24, after the word "law," insert "10, a police certificate from his native country, if any is required by his native country, and 11, a certificate of health."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposed modification?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. (a) A citizen of the United States 21 years of age or over, who is a resident of the United States, may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor, apply to him for permission to bring into the United States or send for an otherwise admissible parent, grandparent, unmarried son under 21 years of age, unmarried or widowed daughter, grandson under 16 years of age whose father is dead, or unmarried or widowed granddaughter whose father is dead; and any alien who has declared, in the manner provided by law, his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and who is a resident of the United States, may make like application in reference to an otherwise admissible husband or wife, unmarried son under 21 years of age, or unmarried or widowed daughter.

(b) If the Secretary of Labor is satisfied that the entry into the United States of such relative would not be in violation of the immigration laws, and that such relative is likely to prove a desirable resident of the United States, he may issue a permit to the applicant, under such regulations as he may prescribe, which shall authorize the immigration officers at the port of entry to examine such relative upon arrival at such port. Thereafter the right of such relative to admission shall be as provided by the immigration laws, except that it shall not be subject to the act entitled "An act to prevent in time of war departure from and entry into the United States, contrary to the public safety, approved May 22, 1918," or to the provisions of any proclamation, order, rule, or regulation made thereunder, and except that the literacy test may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, be waived in the case of such relative.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, this is a committee amendment in order to clear up the question of whether a citizen of the United States who became a citizen during the time his wife was abroad might have the right to send for her. In view of the fact that it is a committee amendment, and in view of the fact it is evident to everybody that a man who becomes a citizen should have the right to send for his wife, I ask for a vote.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from New York by including the words "or husband."

Mr. SIEGEL. I will accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD to the amendment offered by Mr. SIEGEL: After the word "wife" insert the words "or husband."

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. GARD. If I have the floor, I yield.

Mr. SIEGEL. I will yield to the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I desire merely to call the attention of the committee to the different legal status under the present law between the wife and husband. The wife, of course, takes the nationality of her husband, but her husband, at the present time, does not take the nationality of the wife if she becomes an American citizen, so the gentleman is stating a somewhat different idea and a very extensive additional idea by the proposed amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GARD. I believe I do not fully gather the objection made by the gentleman. It seems to me if a woman is a citizen of the United States at this time she should have the same right to send for her husband as a male citizen would have to send for his wife.

Mr. VAILE. She should have that right possibly, but at the present time a wife is not an American citizen when her husband is a foreigner; in that case she takes the nationality of her husband.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. May I make an inquiry of some gentleman?

Suppose one of the American nurses went to France during the war and had been lucky or unlucky enough to fall in love with a Frenchman and wanted to marry him and have him come to the United States to live. He could not come under this law. Suppose she goes over and gets married to him, does she lose her citizenship?

Mr. SIEGEL. She does at the present time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And she could not bring her husband back?

Mr. SIEGEL. No.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That shows how unfair it is.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out the entire section.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California offer a substitute for the amendment now pending?

Mr. RAKER. Of course, the amendment is a perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order at this time. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARD. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 35.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York, with the amendment in the law as has been mentioned here, what effect would that have upon the situation that was set forth here by the gentleman from California two or three days ago, where a Japanese in this country marries through proxy over in Japan. Now, would that permit the wife married by proxy to come into this country?

Mr. SIEGEL. Under the gentlemen's agreement at this time Japan is not permitting any such brides to come over here and such marriages are not permitted. And none has arrived.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. That condition is passed?

Mr. SIEGEL. That condition is passed.

Mr. VAILE. It is because of Japan's voluntary attitude in construing the law.

Mr. SIEGEL. We are still running along under the gentlemen's agreement with Japan. There is nothing here to prevent those who went from California, 50,000 of them, to come back with their wives. It is a different construction altogether.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to strike out the entire section.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered was to perfect the text, and therefore would have precedence over the gentleman's amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment of Mr. SIEGEL: Page 7, line 3, after the word "parents," insert the words "brother or sister under 21 years of age."

Mr. SIEGEL. Under the exception of this section 4, no man in the United States can send for his younger brother or sister under any condition. This amendment of mine would give him permission to send for a younger brother or sister under the age of 21 years. The reason why I urge it very strenuously is this: There are a number of young men in this country who served in the Army and otherwise, and if this bill goes into effect as proposed under section 4, under no conditions can they send for the younger brother or sister, regardless of whatever the age might be. I think a brother or sister under that age is just as dear to a citizen of the United States as a grandson, for instance, or some of the other exceptions that have been made. I therefore urge its adoption.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question, in order that I may understand his proposition?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Under the provisions of the bill as it now exists, a boy who served in the war can send for his parents?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And if the parents have been fortunate enough to have a baby, brother or sister, they can not bring that child with them?

Mr. SIEGEL. That child must stay in Europe.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman's amendment is designed to permit them to bring their infant along with them?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. But a party who desires to bring his sister or brother over, has he not had since November 11, 1918, to do that very thing?

Mr. SIEGEL. I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that there are any number of cases where men have tried for a year and even over two years to locate those near and dear to them and to learn what has happened over there. In many instances no letters have been received for three or four years, and now at last word is coming through from various parts of Europe showing some of them to be alive, where parents have been killed. This reaches those only under the age of 21 years.

Mr. BLANTON. That would embrace innumerable persons.

Mr. SIEGEL. No; it would not, because a person must be a citizen of the United States. It does not reach an innumerable lot, but a small number in comparison to those who would ordinarily come in. I appeal to the gentleman along those lines.

Mr. BLANTON. The bill has been cut down to recognition for only one year.

Mr. SIEGEL. I want to say a man here in this country loves his brother and his sister as much as a grandfather loves his grandchild.

Mr. BLANTON. He has not thought of sending for them.

UMI

Mr. SIEGEL. Oh, yes. He has tried in every possible way to do it, and in numerous cases I can point out to the gentleman he has tried very hard to do it. Our State Department and Red Cross have tried to help, but unsuccessfully.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure everyone in the gentleman's district who has appealed to him since the armistice was signed has had his brother or sister brought over.

Mr. SIEGEL. I want to say to the gentleman that that is not so.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the gentleman has not done his duty.

Mr. SIEGEL. The gentleman does not mean that, and he is talking without being familiar with conditions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman from New York accept a modification of his amendment, so it would read on page 7, line 4, "grandparent, unmarried son or brother under 21 years of age," and in line 5, "unmarried or widowed daughter or sister"?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes; I have no objection to that. I will modify it accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman understand that that would take in not only a natural brother or a natural sister, but that it would permit an adopted brother or sister to come in?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do not believe that is my construction of it.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Would the gentleman object to the qualification of "natural brother" or "natural sister"?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will accept that.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. That would avoid the difficulty.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That might be construed as an illegitimate brother or sister.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request for unanimous consent to modify. Will the Clerk kindly report my amendment again?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as proposed by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIEGEL: On page 7, line 4, after the word "son," insert the words "or brother," and on page 7, line 5, after the word "daughter," insert the words "or sister."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Reserving the right to object, would the gentleman object to putting in the words "blood brother" or "blood sister"? There is objection to putting in the word "natural" in there.

Mr. SIEGEL. I want to say to the gentleman from Minnesota that some of our friends here who are authorities on the question think it might lead to lots of confusion.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. What I want to do is to avoid the possibility of letting in any wholesale number of adopted brothers and sisters.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It will be only for a year anyhow.

Mr. SIEGEL. There is an investigation after it is done, anyway, by the Secretary of Labor over here.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee [Mr. JOHNSON of Washington] or the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] whether or not they can give the committee any approximate estimate as to the number of citizens of the United States who might bring in their brothers and sisters under the age of 21 under this provision? I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that there are a good many of us on this side of the aisle who have undertaken to follow the gentleman on his immigration bill, and we are somewhat distressed over here to note his gradually growing practice of accepting amendments to his bill absolutely weaknening and destroying the purpose for which the bill was contemplated.

Now, here is the gentleman from Washington, the chairman of the committee, proposing to accept without protest amendments without offering to the House any explanation or information as to what number of these undesirable immigrants would come into the country, and I ask the chairman of the committee if he has any information on that subject, because if he has I think we are entitled to the benefit of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would be glad to answer frankly. This paragraph is designed to liberalize the paragraph for citizens of the United States, presumably here, who are naturalized, to bring in members of their family. We do not draw distinctions—they are citizens. We give them the right to send for their blood line. The number can not be large. It has been the custom to allow it heretofore. The most upright people who have come to the United States and pursued our customs and taken out first papers and finally their final citizenship papers and who have been of us and with us have been allowed to send for their relatives. I can not estimate the exact number that would be involved. It has been done in many cases, and always the good blood that has come to us has been from those who have come here and taken out citizenship papers. If we go too far, the whole paragraph will be made so liberal that it will probably be lost. But I can not see any objection to the amendment. If we are letting sons in, we might also let in brothers under 21, unmarried, or sisters under 21.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I fear that the result of the enlargement of the exemptions to the restrictions is going to be that you are going to embrace enough of these immigrants to fill up all of these ships that you talk about that ought to be taken out of the service. The gentleman knows that hundreds and thousands of people in the United States have taken out their citizenship papers who still have in these prolific countries of Central Europe hundreds of thousands of brothers and sisters whom they seek to bring in here.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Here is the last report of the Commissioner of Immigration at Ellis Island, in which he says:

Of these 430,001, 247,625 were men and boys and 182,376 were women and children. Many of the women were old women—feeble and dependent. Nearly all of them were going to sons or other relatives, but in many instances those sons or other relatives had all they could do to provide for their own immediate families. A case in point was brought to my attention the other day. A feeble woman of 70 years had come here to her son. Her son had a wife and five children to support. He was earning the wages of a day laborer. In the event of his death or of accident to him there would be five children and the old mother dependent upon charity.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Exactly. I just wanted to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the danger he is assuming here in allowing such liberality of amendment to this bill which he has brought in and stood sponsor for.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the amendment goes in at all it should be in its place and voted either up or down.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. BOX. I want to know whether consideration has been given to the fact that there is a great number of native-born Japanese on the Pacific coast, who can bring in their brothers and sisters under that clause?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The statistics show that they would not be native-born citizens of 21 years of age within the time in which this act would be effective, in 14 months. Out of the 150,000 Japanese or orientals out there on the Pacific coast there is not one in 5,000 or in 10,000 who has reached that age.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

The question was taken; and the chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 24.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama demands tellers.

Tellers were refused, 18 members, not a sufficient number, seconding the demand.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VAILE: Page 7, line 13, after the word "daughter," strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and add: "but no application may be made under this paragraph in case of any relative by adoption."

Mr. VAILE. This amendment is offered to answer the criticism made with regard to adopted relatives.

Mr. GARD. I desire to call attention to the fact that in the proposed bill, in line 11, page 7, it permits one who is an alien, but a resident of the United States, to make application in reference to an otherwise admissible husband or wife; so that we have the remarkable situation under this bill of the House a minute ago preventing a citizen of the United States sending for her husband, while you permit one who is an alien to send for her husband. I submit that there should be some correction in the interest of harmony in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. When a man is a citizen his wife is presumed to be a citizen also, so you propose to add something to what is already a citizen's right.

Mr. GARD. No. It would seem to me that if you grant the right to an alien to send for her husband, you should certainly have that same privilege accorded to a citizen of the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. That is a right a citizen already has. A man who is a citizen of the United States has a right to send for his wife, because she is a citizen.

Mr. GARD. But that does not give the wife who is a citizen the right to send for her husband.

Mr. BLANTON. If the wife is a citizen, she would have the same right.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio. If the wife has a foreign husband, she is not a citizen of the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. No; she would not be a citizen of this country.

Mr. GARD. The bill gives the right to an alien who has declared her intention to become a citizen of the United States to send for her alien husband.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio. She is an alien, and under this she can send for her husband.

Mr. GARD. I understand that; but what I have been contending for is that a woman who is an American citizen should have the same right to send for her husband.

Mr. VAILE. There can not be any such thing as a woman citizen with an alien husband. If the husband is an alien, that makes his wife an alien.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Perhaps the gentleman can explain how, while a woman with a foreign husband can not be a citizen of the United States, she can still declare her intention to become a citizen of the United States while she has a foreign husband. Supposing she is the wife of a foreigner, can she become a citizen of the United States without her husband becoming a citizen?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Gentlemen have assured us that she could not.

Mr. SIEGEL. Some of the courts are admitting them and some of the courts are not admitting them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That shows that the law on the subject is not settled.

Mr. SIEGEL. No; it is not settled. The naturalization bill which we have on the calendar here——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is not the law.

Mr. SIEGEL. No; that is not the law; but that tries to cover the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE] has expired.

Mr. SABATH. I do not know whether this matter is clear to the chairman of the committee or not. Of course, I know it is clear to the other gentlemen, because they know all about it; but the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] propounded a question the contention of which is correct, namely, he maintains that it is possible for an American woman who has acquired citizenship or who was born here as an American citizen, but who might have visited Europe and married over there, to come back to the United States. Is it contended that she has lost her citizenship because she has married a foreigner who has never been in the United States?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes. The law is that the moment she marries a foreigner she has lost her American citizenship. The gentleman is probably familiar with the fact. He has reported out several bills to repatriate a number of these women. In the event that her foreign husband dies, ipso facto she gets her citizenship back.

Mr. VAILE. That is one of the planks on which the next Republican Congress was elected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVEY: Page 7, line 7, after the word "dead" insert a period. Strike out the words "and any alien who has," and all of lines 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, and the word "daughter," on line 13.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the purpose of inserting this provision—that is to say, the purpose of the committee—was undoubtedly to liberalize the bill. It also seems to me that they have gone too far in their efforts to liberalize it, and I fear that their generous impulses may leave so many loopholes that the very purpose sought to be accomplished by this bill will be largely lost. Gentlemen, I believe it is safe to say that there are hundreds of thousands of foreign born in this country who have declared their intention to become citizens but who have never availed themselves of the right and have let the time limit expire. It means nothing for an alien to declare his intention unless he actually completes the operation and assumes the full rights and responsibilities of citizenship. I believe that we owe nothing to the man who has merely declared his intention to become an American citizen and that we owe nothing to any man until he becomes a full-fledged citizen.

If I am not mistaken, it is admissible for an alien to declare his intention within two years. We have a flood of aliens in this country now—all too many, I think, for the possibility of proper assimilation—and it seems to me that if we permit this provision to remain in the bill it liberalizes it to the point of danger and will permit of great abuse. I can imagine under this provision a rush of newer aliens to make declaration of intention merely to provide themselves with technical grounds to evade the terms and purpose of this bill.

If this is to accomplish the purpose which the proponents claim, it must to a very large degree close the doors and allow this country time to adjust itself to the aliens within our borders, to show them the heart and spirit and purpose of America, to make Americans of them as far as their temperament and character make possible. I have nothing against aliens as such. My own father was an immigrant, who came to this great land of freedom and opportunity nearly 50 years ago, not so much to escape something on the other side, but chiefly because America called to him with an irresistible call, as it has to so many other millions of Europe's best blood.

But, gentlemen, America needs to be protected now against too great an influx of those who do not and can not appreciate our country and her institutions and whom we can not assimilate by any process. We have got a job on our hands to take care of those who are here, some of whom are decidedly of the wrong kind. I would do no injustice to the American citizen, but I believe we owe nothing to those who have merely declared their intention until the time when they become possessed of full citizenship. And especially do we owe nothing to those aliens the hundreds of thousands of whom have declared their intention and have made no honest effort to complete the undertaking in good faith, who have never taken advantage of the sacred opportunity of American citizenship.

This matter of citizenship in America is a great unmatched privilege. To us it is a priceless heritage, to be guarded with jealous care. To the newcomer it must be equally significant and precious if America is to remain secure. We have handed it out too carelessly and too generally. We need to tighten up. It is right that this bill should be reasonably liberal toward full citizens of foreign birth, but it ought never to leave the bars down for the benefit of aliens in America of whatever status.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I regret exceedingly that the gentleman has been misinformed as to this provision when he states that all of these declarants have refused or neglected to become citizens, or have failed to comply with the laws.

Mr. DAVEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I want to correct the gentleman. I made no such statement. I said there were hundreds of thousands who had not completed their naturalization.

Mr. SABATH. I do not know whether the gentleman is aware of the fact that it is necessary for a declarant to wait three years after filing his declaration of intention before he can be finally naturalized. Unfortunately during the last few years, due to the conditions of the war, many applicants only too anxious to be naturalized have been prevented from becoming citizens through no fault of theirs. In many cases they appeared two, three, and five times to be examined, but due to the lack of force which we have failed to provide the Naturalization Bureau they were unable to be examined in due time, and consequently the delay. I know that in many instances some applicants or declarants have been waiting for years to be naturalized, have made application several times, and have pleaded that their applications be considered, but have not succeeded.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Is there any provision now requiring them to complete their naturalization papers in any given time?

Mr. SABATH. There is.

Mr. McKEOWN. What is the time?

Mr. SABATH. Seven years. If they file a declaration of intention, they must complete it within seven years, otherwise the statute of limitation runs against them and it becomes necessary to file a new declaration.

Mr. BOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. BOX. Is it not true that under this bill, after the bill goes into effect, an alien can file his intention one day and the next day make application to get his parents or relatives from Europe?

Mr. SABATH. That might be true, after the bill passes.

Mr. BOX. Is not that what this language means?

Mr. SABATH. That is what the bill provides. It is not yet a law, and I know it will not be a law, because I have confidence that even if the House passes the bill and if the Senate passes the bill the President will be compelled to veto such a piece of legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, a division was ordered, and there were 14 ayes and 29 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, may I have the attention of the chairman of the committee? If this subsection "a" should be passed just as written, then, so far as concerns the alien who declares his intention subsequent to the passage of the act, would he be within the provision of the subsection, or is it intended to limit the right to one who declares his intention to become a citizen prior to the passage of the act? I simply want to ascertain how wide is the field of admission.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I did not quite catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Assuming that the act becomes effective on the 4th of March, and that on the 4th of July an alien declares his intention to become a citizen, would he be included in this particular subdivision?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; I think so, provided he goes to the Secretary and gets his permit, remembering all of the time that this has been reduced to 14 months.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. You do not intend to limit the provision to those who declare their purpose prior to the enactment of the law?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The last few lines of that liberalizing clause is that if men send for their wives after taking out their first papers, which they may do on arriving in the United States, they are better off than if they do not.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I do not think the gentleman understands the question that I am trying to propound.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think the law indicates that those who declare their intention after this becomes a law will be included.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. According to the best information that I can get, there are something like two or three million aliens here, probably nearer three million than two million, who have not yet taken out their naturalization papers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, more than that.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And a very large percentage of them have not even declared their intention.

Mr. BLACK. But they will all declare now.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Of course.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. Nothing in this act shall be held to repeal the provisions of the joint resolution approved October 19, 1918, entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the readmission to the United States of certain aliens who have been conscripted or who have volunteered for service with the military forces of the United States or cobelligerent forces," or any amendment thereto.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 8, lines 9 and 10, strike out the words "Nothing in this act shall be held to repeal the provisions of the" and insert in lieu thereof the word "The," and on page 8, lines 14 and 15, strike out the comma and the words "or any amendment thereto" and insert in lieu thereof the words "it is hereby amended by adding thereto a proviso reading as follows:

"Provided, That if any such alien shall on arrival at a port of the United States be found to be afflicted with a loathsome or contagious disease, such alien shall not be readmitted until he shall have been treated in hospital and the disease reduced to a noncontagious disease."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the necessity for that amendment is apparent on its face. Since the signing of the armistice two years have elapsed and still we permit certain men who went out to come in under the joint resolution of October, 1918, and if they are afflicted with disease we want them to be taken care of in hospitals.

Mr. WALSH. Where are they to be treated—in hospitals in this country?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. They will have to be treated exactly the same as we undertake to treat other diseased aliens who are found on arrival here, and also sailors and seamen.

Mr. WALSH. Is there any considerable number of this class?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think not. This is a protective clause, necessary on account of the lapse of time.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, what is the purpose of this amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Where soldiers were permitted to come back under joint resolution of October, 1918, two years or more having elapsed, they must be in good health when they come into the United States.

Mr. RAKER. Is not that resolution in force to-day?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; it is in force as a resolution; but we have to carry it in the form in which we carry it in this bill.

Mr. RAKER. It prohibits the entrance of people afflicted with loathsome or contagious diseases.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We have to carry it, because it admits a diseased class. The amendment is brought to me by the Department of Labor, and I think it is proper.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman a word or two about section 5. I notice that it refers to the fourth provision of section 3 of the immigration act. Is it the intention of section 5 to make another class in addition to what is already enumerated in proviso 3?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will explain that this measure is not intended to supersede the immigration act. It provides certain suspensions, and among the provisions referred to is one to the effect that if certain skilled labor of any particular kind can not be found in the United States it can be brought in. For instance, take the maker of eyeglasses or diamond cutters.

Mr. McKEOWN. Is it to include an additional class to those already enumerated?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This undertakes to carry a provision in the present immigration law to the effect that if you can not find certain skilled labor in the United States you can let them come in from the outside.

Mr. McKEOWN. The language of section 3 in the immigration act, to which I suppose reference is made, is that the provisions of the law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude professional actors, artists, and so forth.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, that is not the provision. It is the fourth provision of section 3. The gentleman is on the wrong page.

Mr. VAILE. This refers to skilled labor, if otherwise admissible, which may be imported, if labor of a like kind can not be found in this country.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. During the period of suspension provided for in section 2 otherwise admissible aliens who have resided continuously in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, or the Republic of Mexico for at least one year, and who are not persons of the classes hereinbefore exempted, may be temporarily admitted, for a period not exceeding six months, from such countries, under such rules governing entry, inspection, temporary stay, and departure as may be prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 8, line 20, strike out all after the word "year" down to and including the word "exempted" in line 21.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the text has words which are unnecessary in the paragraph and the amendment takes out the words in line 21, "and who are not persons of the classes hereinbefore exempted," which are unnecessary. I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I simply take advantage of the right to oppose the amendment so as to discuss another matter in the same paragraph. In the first line of section 7 I find the word "suspension." In a hurried examination of the bill I believe this is the only place where the word "suspension" is used. I ask the chairman of the committee if I am correct, if it is the only thing outside of section 14 that indicates that the present existing laws are simply suspended during the life of this act. Is there any other place which covers the question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman means a suspension of the law?

Mr. WINGO. The present existing laws.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Immigration is suspended for the life of the bill now as amended for 14 months.

Mr. WINGO. That is the point. Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who have always believed we were too lax in admitting the foreign born to the United States. I will not go into the distinctions I have always made in the classes I was willing to bring in, but we have reached that point that a great many men predicted during the last 20 years where everybody admits that there should be what the chairman this morning called at least a "stop gap" for a while, so we can take stock and clean house and find out where we are. I really hailed with delight the press reports on this bill, because I thought really we were going to restrict immigration for two years. As one who carefully examines the provisions of every act he has to vote upon and as a lawyer trying to understand that upon which I am called to vote, I have found my enthusiasm for this measure waning. I have found that I am forced with deep regret to the conviction that this bill at best is but a "French gesture." My candid opinion as a lawyer is that this bill will not exclude one single immigrant that the present existing law does not exclude. If I vote for it it will be because of the supposed sentiment that it does restrict immigration at least for a while. I shall have to be satisfied, though, that the word "suspension" used here in section 7 does not leave us at the end of the 14 months' period worse off than we are now. Why? Let me submit this proposition to the lawyers of this House: Section 2 makes the sweeping provision that it is an absolute bar to immigration with certain exceptions. Reading those exceptions and reading the provisions of the bill you will find that the text of this law covers the whole question of immigration and the admission of immigrants to this country, and how any judge undertaking to interpret the intention of Congress can escape the conclusion that Congress took up the whole subject matter and legislated on it, and thereby by implication repealed all other laws in reference to it is something I can not understand. I am met with the suggestion that section 14 says that—

> The provisions of this act are in addition to and not in substitution for the provisions of the immigration laws.

Now what does that mean? That is just about as clear so far as the legal proposition I suggest as one would be providing that white shall not be interpreted as black, nor shall black be interpreted as white. It is in addition to but not in substitution for. If any provision of this act contravenes any part of the existing statute the court will say by necessary implication the conflicting statute is repealed. Of course without saying this in section 14 if there is any new provision not covered by existing law it is in addition to the present existing law. Does section 14 say that the provisions of this act are in addition to and not in substitution for the provisions of existing laws, and that such laws shall continue in full force and effect at the expiration of the suspension period provided by this act?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. May I have three minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINGO. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the lawyers on the committee in a friendly way that section 2 makes a broad general bar of immigration, subject to certain exceptions. Then you state those exceptions that cover nearly every class the present laws do. If you consider it as a lawyer, how can you escape the conclusion that Congress had taken up the whole subject matter and rewritten the law and stated that at the expiration of one year or two years there shall be no law? That is my humble interpretation as a lawyer, and I suggest to the lawyers on the committee that when you get to section 14 you make your expressed intent clear, and that is for two years your present immigration laws shall not control so far as the provisions set out in this particular act are concerned and at the end of the two years or 14 months that your present laws go into operation again. If that is the meaning, why not make that declaration by a clear specific provision of the statute? If you do not do it, gentlemen, you will be charged with having deliberately placed upon the statute books a sham and a hypocrisy—and they will use stronger language than the language I have used—that the bill at best is but a "French gesture," and in voting for it I shall vote for it on the theory that its expressed intent meets with my general convictions upon the subject.

Mr. SEARS and Mr. BOX rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box] is recognized.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, we have an amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment is already pending, offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON]. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

> Amendment offered by Mr. BOX: Page 8, after line 16, strike out lines 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25, inclusive.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to argue the amendment.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer a perfecting amendment. That strikes out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has that right.

Mr. SEARS. On page 8, line 18, after the word "Canada," insert a comma, and insert "Bermuda and Bahama Islands."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Texas will strike out the entire section.

The CHAIRMAN. There is another amendment now pending. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas will come later.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I trust the chairman of the committee will not oppose the amendment I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. SEARS: Page 8, line 18, after the word "Canada," insert "Bermuda and Bahama Islands."

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, during the period of the war under certain legislation the Secretary of Labor was directed to permit Bahama negroes to come into Florida for the purpose of growing our vegetable crop. This class of labor only stays about three months and then goes home. There can certainly be no objection to that amendment. I see that under this section citizens of Mexico are permitted to come to this country, and unless this amendment is granted it will do a material injury to the growers, many of them being northern people. You can not get labor in this section, because it is only for a few weeks. They take the boats and go and bring the laborers over under certain restrictions, and after they are through with them they go back.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Florida the amendment which is in the Clerk's hands.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves a substitute to the amendment of the gentleman from Florida, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment of Mr. MOORES of Indiana as a substitute to the amendment offered by Mr. SEARS:
> "Page 8, line 18, after the word 'Newfoundland,' insert 'Bermudas, the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, the British, Dutch, and French possessions in the West Indies and Central and South America, and the Republic of Panama.'"

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I make the point of order that is not proper as offered to the amendment of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS].

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Is it not an amendment in the sense that it enlarges his amendment? It adds the adjacent islands.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will please submit just what his point of order is.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In the first place the amendment is not offered in the same place in the bill. I suppose the chairman will discover that by looking at it. It could be offered at the same place in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is right. It is not offered at the same place.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to offer it after the word "Canada" then, and I would like to be heard on it for a few minutes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, let us have a vote on the Sears amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES] is recognized to speak in support of his amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, when the Diplomatic appropriation bill was presented to the House last summer it was presented originally in the form in which this bill is. For reasons of expediency it was so amended to follow substantially the form which I have stated in this amendment. The reason for that is this: We have with England, with France, and with the Netherlands treaties which contain the "favored-nations" clause, and they are entitled to similar treatment. There is no reason for including the Dominion of Canada which does not include the Dominion of Newfoundland. There is no reason for including Newfoundland which does not apply to those almost microscopic islands, the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, which belong to France, adjoining Newfoundland, which is a small distance away. The Bahamas are a separate possession of Great Britain and the Barbados are a separate possession and Jamaica is a separate possession. But the British possessions in the West Indies, which are practically only a short distance from the coast of the United States, would entitle all the British possessions adjacent to the United States, although not touching it, to like treatment. There is no reason why we should not treat Panama, which is under substantially the same form of government, as Cuba. It is under almost an American protectorate. There is no reason why we should not treat Panama or the people of Panama as we treat the people of Cuba and Mexico. It seems to me we are in constant communication with the Bahamas, and those people come and go. There is no reason why they should be excluded. We are in constant touch with Barbados, and their people ought to be included. And the amendment is reasonable because it includes the small countries in like situation belonging to England and France. And the island of Curacao, for instance, belongs to Holland, and Martinique belongs to France, and we are in constant touch with them. We grant permits of six months to the Mexicans and the Canadians, and why should we not grant permits to citizens of Great Britain, citizens of France, and of the Netherlands, who have to come and go?

Mr. McKEOWN. Does the gentleman's amendment include Santo Domingo and Haiti?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. It does not.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does it include Nassau?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. It does.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. When the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES] offered his amendment, a point of order, as I understood, was made against it by the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdrew it.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DEWALT. I suppose the gentleman is advocating his amendment under the favored-nation clause?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. The most-favored-nation clause.

Mr. DEWALT. Under the favored-nation clause, as no doubt the gentleman understands it and as I understand it, the British possessions would give the same right to our citizens as we are now attempting to grant to the citizens in a portion of their territory?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. That is true.

Mr. DEWALT. What you are attempting to do, then, is to include some other possessions of England and Holland under the favored-nation clause, and therefore you say it is just that they should be included?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Yes; I think so.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. Not long ago I presented an amendment which the committee did not accept, an amendment which would provide for the admission of farm laborers during the period of exclusion provided for in this bill, provided they came here as farm laborers, to go back when the work was over.

Section 7, the section we are considering now, provides that farm laborers can come here from Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, and the Republic of Mexico under such limitations as the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, may impose for a period not to exceed six months. In other words, under the bill as drawn, laborers for the fruit orchards of the Northwest and for the lumber mills of the Northwest can come over here, but farm laborers who want to work in Illinois and Iowa can not come. Under the bill as drawn now, Mexicans can come to this country and can work in the sugar-beet fields of the sugar-beet sections of the West, but they do not work in wheat fields nor corn fields.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Those in Mexico and Canada can come when otherwise admissible under the literacy test and on the payment of the head tax.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes. Under the bill as now drawn, the railroads can continue to do as they do now and bring them in from Mexico if otherwise admissible. I want to know what is the objection to admitting farm labor from any country in the world, if otherwise admissible, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Immigration and the Secretary of Labor may prescribe, and I want to offer a substitute for pending amendments which would have the effect of admitting laborers under this section for six months, if otherwise admissible under the law, except from oriental countries. I will ask the Clerk to report my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that one substitute for the amendment is already pending. Until that is disposed of another will not be in order.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Very well. I will offer it later on.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALSH. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 34.

So the substitute amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers a substitute amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY: In lines 18 and 19 of page 8, strike out the words "in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, or the Republic of Mexico," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in the country from which they come, except oriental countries."

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered not in the interest of favored nations, but in the interest of all the people of this country, so that no one section of this country can be favored by this section of the bill to the exclusion of other sections.

The bill as drawn now permits laborers to come here for the lumber camps in Maine and in the Northwest. They can get labor in New England from Canada for a great many purposes under this bill. Labor can come here from Cuba under the bill as drawn for the purpose of working in the vegetable-producing sections of Florida. Labor does come here from that section.

This amendment simply excludes those countries in the world, oriental countries, from which what we usually consider undesirable labor comes, and extends the benefits of section 7 and its exemptions to the entire country and to all the industries of this country, including wheat farmers and corn farmers and all those who produce food animals or are engaged on dairy farms.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by the chairman) there were—ayes 22, noes 38.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUDSPETH: Page 8, after the word "aliens," in line 17, insert a comma and add the following: "including those applying for admission temporarily, pursuant to the last proviso in section 3 of the immigration act."

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HUDSPETH) there were 22 ayes and 39 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LUCE. Yesterday the committee demurred at a provision which would permit the entry into the United States of an alien who in some period of the past had lived here. In view of that, will the chairman of the committee explain whether the first clause of section 7, in line 17, means that an alien is to have resided continuously in the country concerned for one year before the time of the passage of the act or means that he must have there resided at any time for one year continuously?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. At the time he applies for admission.

Mr. LUCE. In the case of a Canadian who has been working in Buffalo in the course of the last 12 months and has been residing there, but has returned to Canada, can he secure entry under the provisions of this section, not having resided continuously for the preceding year in the Dominion of Canada?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washigton. My impression would be that not having resided in the country in which he claims he lived or belonged, if he goes out of the country where he is now domiciled, namely, the United States, he has to come back under this passport provision.

Mr. LUCE. If he has not resided continuously in Canada one year, but has been working some part of the year in Detroit or Buffalo, he is precluded from returning?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; under section 7.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment and offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUCE: Strike out all of section 7 and insert in place thereof a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 7. During the period of suspension provided for in section 2, otherwise admissible aliens who have been citizens of the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, or the Republic of Mexico, for at least one year prior to the passage of this act, may be admitted from such countries under such rules governing entry and inspection as may be prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor."

Mr. LUCE. This amendment is not alone of importance to the people of Buffalo, Detroit, Toledo, Sandusky, Lockport, Ogdensburg, and all other places along the border, but also it is of importance to the manufacturing interests of New England. Lest somebody may not have heard my statement yesterday, permit me to repeat that in my own district dwell about 50,000 persons who were born in Canada or who had one parent born in Canada. There are several thousand of them undoubtedly who are still citizens of Canada. They are frequently journeying to and fro, coming to us when work is plenty, returning when work is slack. From my city of Waltham, for example, it may prove that many watch-factory operatives will have returned to Canada within the last 12 months prior to the passage of this act. Such operatives will be absolutely forbidden from returning to their positions in the factory during the period of this suspension. This thing would bear with extreme hardship on the State of Maine, where many hundreds of Canadians come in to work in the factories and also to work in the logging and river driving operations. It would be an extreme hardship to many who have been working in Vermont and northern New York. I can not believe that the committee ever contemplated any such situation as would be produced by putting a barrier in the way of persons who have been working in this country, while leaving no barrier of consequence in the path of persons who have not been working in this country.

The committee surely can not intend to make it impossible for an operative whom we have trained in the delicate art of making watches to return while permitting the untrained persons who have never been engaged in the manufacture of watches to enter. The same thing is true of the operatives of our textile mills and the workers in the automobile factories in Detroit and Cleveland and other places which perhaps next summer will resume activities as before.

The bill in effect says that no such person at home when the law takes effect shall come here if he has been here within a year. He may come only if he has not been within a year.

To meet this absurd situation I have rewritten the section so that it will take down all unusual barriers in the way of travel back and forth between the United States and these adjacent countries by persons who have been citizens of these adjacent countries for a year. There will be little chance of fraud under this provision. It will be impossible for aliens from across the sea, whom we so much fear, to secure citizenship temporarily in Mexico or elsewhere and forthwith come here. They must have been citizens for a full year. From those who have been such in adjacent countries for a year I would remove the barriers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am in hearty accord with my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] in his effort to care for working people who have been in this country or who may at the present time be in this country, who have had occasion to return to Canada or other adjacent countries. I have had before the Department of Labor within the past few months a very marked instance of the kind of hardship to which he refers. A skilled employee in a paper mill in my district was sent by his employers to Canada. It was actually a part of his service to go over to Canada to train men in a factory belonging to that company in Canada. When it came time for them to order him to return to this country, the barrier is put in his way and he is prevented from returning, except that the company by whom he is employed shall give a bond, and then he can stay only six months. The section which my colleague criticizes will continue that condition or make it worse, and I think that the committee having this very important matter in charge ought to be agreeable to the acceptance of either the amendment of my colleague or some similar amendment which will not deprive a man of the opportunity of remaining in this country and securing citizenship. The man to whom I refer had applied for his first papers, but this fact gave him no advantage. By temporarily visiting Canada, due to the order of his employers, he is now prevented from returning here, a condition which I am sure is not only a hardship to the man, but a distinct disadvantage to the employers themselves, who have frequent occasion to send men back and forth across the Canadian border. I can see no merit in a law which prevents a skilled workman from returning here after once having been in this country and temporarily going back to Canada.

I have had a long correspondence with the Department of Labor in connection with this particular case, and have been positively refused any relief under the statute as applied by Assistant Secretary Post. If the amendment offered by my colleague will correct this situation in the future, I certainly hope that for the benefit of the employer as well as the employee in many cases in my State and elsewhere it will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAKER) there were—ayes 36, noes 37.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. LUCE and Mr. JOHNSON of Washington were appointed to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 62.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BOX].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BOX: Page 8, after line 16, strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am very much afraid that the presence of this paragraph will weaken the law. We have witnessed here to-day a great many demands for exception in favor of this class or that class, and I doubt the wisdom of retaining this paragraph. It provides for the temporary admission of people from the countries named, though they will, of course, have to pass the literacy test and pay the head tax and can not be brought in as contract laborers. I think that the bill could be made applicable to border travel without weakening it in this manner. I shall have to submit this, however, to the judgment of my colleagues.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, in opposition to the amendment permit me to say that I think that we will find that this provision as written in the bill is necessary under treaties which we have. It is similar, with the exception of the six months' restriction, to that which is in the present law, and the only way that can be provided for the exchange as between contiguous countries with the people of the United States. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand the chairman of the committee to say that there are treaties with any nation which require us to admit nationals of any nation temporarily under some such arrangement as is contemplated in this section?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Not exactly; but of course, as the gentleman understands, most treaties guarantee the right of nationals to come and go, but with regard to Canada and the United States we have a particular reciprocity with regard to the coming and going of citizens.

Mr. WALSH. What I would like to know is why it is provided that nobody shall come in here except students and one or two other classes and then in section 7 it is provided that the commissioner general may admit anybody he wants to temporarily, provided they are otherwise admissible—that is, if they can pass the literacy test and conform with the other provisions of the law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. For a period of six months: Let me explain how the thing works. People come from Canada now freely. They are asked to show their business cards either on trains or boats. They satisfy the inspector very quickly that they are here on a temporary business visit. However, if a man comes along who is likely to stay here, they take his head tax, and it is held for six months. If the man never calls for the head tax, it is assumed that he has remained in the United States. If he returns to Canada within the six months and asks for the head tax back, he gets it. That is the arrangement between Canada and the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Will not the effect of this section be that instead of permitting aliens to come in here and reside temporarily from these countries, it will permit them to come in here for a vacation of six months. It does not provide that they have got to work.

Mr. SIEGEL. They can come in for business.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Under regulations that can be made.

Mr. WALSH. Can a regulation provide that the man must work on a farm or in a factory, must pick cotton, for instance? Can the Secretary impose any such restriction, provided he can pass the literacy test and pay the head tax? The Secretary of Labor can provide that he must work picking cotton?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No. He will not provide anything of the kind. As a matter of fact, the gentleman from Texas asked me about this a minute ago and got a statement out of me the other day at the conclusion of a 20-minute speech, when I was foolish enough to yield to him when he would not yield to me to correct a statement. As a matter of fact the Secretary of Labor in the past couple of years probably made a mistake in permitting Mexicans to come in here to do certain work on certain farms.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question with reference to section 7. I am very much interested in the proposition of endeavoring to preclude entrance into this country of a class of workers that has been heretofore admitted to take care of a certain class of labor which can not and has not been able to be handled by our American laborers. I refer to the sugar-beet culture in Colorado. In my district there are 11 sugar-beet factories.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let me ask the gentleman a question. That can be cultivated by Japanese or Chinese labor?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. It might if obtainable. But we found the best labor for that is the Mexican laborer, and we have heretofore been able to get a permit from the Secretary of Labor for this labor to come into the United States for the season of the crop work and then return. The question I desire to ask the chairman is whether under section 7 that would be permitted by this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; if they can read and pay the head tax and want to pick the beets, they can come in.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. With this modification, if the gentleman will permit, that if they were here this summer they can not come next summer. They can come the summer after that.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. We can not do without that labor for the beet crop of next season.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If this becomes a law, those who work here this summer can not come in next summer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They would not come. They earn so much money they will not come in. They will stay down in Mexico and spend their money in singing and dancing.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Permit me to say, and to correct the chairman, that this same character of labor has come into Colorado for the last four seasons under permit by the Secretary of Labor. If this provision will prohibit that, I am opposed to it.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What is the gentleman's position, that these laborers should be permitted to come into Colorado and work in the beet fields and when they get through they must go back to Mexico, but other aliens who might make desirable citizens shall not be permitted to come in at all from any other country?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I do not believe that unobjectionable aliens should be excluded entirely from coming.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, within the last half hour or so we have heard from nearly every section of the country. The gentlemen from the New England States, from the Western States, and from the Southern States have fairly explained the need of common labor in America, and notwithstanding when it comes to a vote they will vote to preclude the securing of that much-needed labor. They are pleading for their own sections, and are willing that they should have the benefit, but they are not willing that other sections that are in need of labor should have it. I fully appreciate that if the committee had taken a little more time and given more attention and consideration to this legislation the chances are that a bill could have been prepared and submitted to the House that would have eliminated these objectionable features. What amuses me the most is this: For years we have heard gentlemen on the floor of this House complain against these "birds of passage," those people who come here, earn money, and then leave and go home. Mr. Chairman, for years this was the strongest objection raised against immigration, namely, that they come only for the purpose of making some money, and after a few years leave and take it with them. This entire afternoon we have heard pleas on behalf of these very people, that we should permit them to come and after they have earned their money we should tell them to take that money and go back from whence they came. And these appeals in behalf of such aliens come from gentlemen who at all times favored and advocated stringent, yes, complete restriction, and the same gentlemen, notwithstanding their appeals for relief for their sections of the country, will, nevertheless, I am sure, vote for this bill. Mr. Chairman, what these gentlemen advocate is special class and sectional legislation which I can not help designating as special-favor legislation. I believe that we should have legislation that is fair, that is just to all, so that there should be no discrimination as is contemplated by this bill. I hope in view of the fact that the chairman has stated that we can not finish the bill to-day that he and the other gentlemen responsible for bringing in this bill may meet this afternoon or Monday and during that time amend it so that they may come in with at least some sections that will meet with the approval of gentlemen who desire to legislate intelligently and justly to all sections of the country.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas to strike out the section.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. Any alien who at any time after entering the United States is found to have been at the time of entry not entitled under this act to enter the United States, or to have remained therein for a longer time than permitted under section 3 or section 7, shall be taken into custody and deported in the manner provided for in sections 19 and 20 of the immigration act.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if there is any provision in our present naturalization laws rather going to the point as to where an alien after having been admitted and naturalized and proves himself to be a disloyal citizen such naturalization papers can be set aside?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think probably in cases of fraud it can be done. However, this is an immigration bill and not a naturalization bill.

Mr. McKEOWN. I understand. I want to say this section deals with the deportation of the aliens who have secured entrance into this country and who are not entitled to be here.

I wanted to take this opportunity to say that the question that is giving this committee so much trouble is the same cause of all trouble on the question of immigration, and that is the commercial side of immigration. Various contractors, various persons, interested financially, without regard to the consequences upon the country, are responsible for the trouble Congress is having to-day in trying to stop the great flood of immigration to this country. It is because the people have been admitted to this country for gain, for money, for profit. This country has always been a haven of refuge for those who have been persecuted religiously or politically. It has always been a refuge for a man who wanted to come to a country where he could have freedom and enjoy it, but because certain financial interests found it more profitable to bring cheap labor into the United States, men who had no regard to the results and consequences to this country, brought in thousands of undesirables and caused the necessity for the Congress to act now. I believe that every man admitted to this country and to whom naturalization papers have been granted, and who has been guilty of disloyal conduct, ought to have his papers revoked. There ought to be an amendment to the naturalization act, making provision that any man naturalized who afterwards becomes disloyal or utters words that tend to destroy our form of government, should have his papers revoked, and be deported from the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: After the word "act," on line 7, page 9, add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 9. That any alien who, in pursuance of the fourth section of chapter 12 of the act of Congress approved July 9, 1918, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919,' has withdrawn his declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States with the object of escaping military service, shall, on the warrant of the Secretary of Labor, be taken into custody and deported in the manner provided in sections 19 and 20 of the immigration act; and any such alien who shall have left or who shall hereafter leave the United States, or who shall have been deported under any provision hereof, shall be excluded from the United States."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I will have to make a point of order against that.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman withhold it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will withhold it for a few minutes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I sincerely hope that the chairman will not make the point of order against this amendment. In his own original draft of this immigration bill he had the exact wording of this section as I have offered it. While it may be subject to a point of order on a technicality, I am convinced that it should be made a part of this measure.

Mr. Chairman, this measure has been termed a "stop-gap," an emergency law, in order to give us time to work out permanent policies. For what policies? Not alone for a fixed immigration policy but for an Americanization policy which will deal with the vexing problems occasioned by the presence of a great number of aliens now within the borders of this Nation.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does not the gentleman think that a provision should be made that unless aliens learn the English language and read and write it in five years they should be deported?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I certainly do. But I believe that in order to encourage these strangers to learn the language of America it is necessary to show that it is worth while. The value must be put into this knowledge, and that can best be done by showing that those who scorn American citizenship shall not be favored above those who do become citizens and learn the language of America. It is for that reason I have introduced this amendment providing for the deportation of all those who escaped military service by the cancellation of their first papers of American citizenship.

Of our 105,000,000 souls, 15,000,000 are of foreign birth and 20,000,000 more are of foreign or mixed parentage. Ten per cent of our population can not read the laws which they are presumed to know. Out of the first 2,000,000 men drafted in the Great War to "make democracy safe around the world" an amazing percentage could not read their orders nor understand them when they were delivered.

It was in the light from the fires of war that the Nation came to see the importance of Americanization. In facing the challenge of autocracy, with all American resources pledged to its overthrow, it was suddenly discovered that the United States was almost in the position in which the dual monarchy had found itself, with unassimilated populations and separate nationalities.

The melting pot had failed in its function, if in fact it had ever existed. There had been no fusing of the various elements in the body politic into one ingot of purpose. Instead there were dross and stones, the scum of the melting pot. There were millions of people in America still thinking as Germans, or Italians, or Croatians, or Poles—not Americans.

In many communities there were colonies of folks from foreign lands who retained their national language, customs, and habits and deliberately excluded everything American while they cherished everything foreign.

In one Pittsburgh suburb an investigation disclosed that in a single district, comprising six city blocks, there were 2,600 residents, of whom only 12 were American citizens. Many of these persons had been in this country more than 20 years, but they frankly stated that they had no intention of becoming American citizens.

In marshaling America's resources for war it was found that the message had to be carried in a score of languages to these peoples who were in America but not of America. The plans of the draft law, Liberty loans, food and fuel regulations, Red Cross, and other activities had to be conveyed in other tongues than the language of America.

It was discovered also, when Uncle Sam called for soldiers to wage the battles of the Nation, hardly 10 per cent of the immigrants arriving here in the past 10 years had declared their intention of becoming citizens. As aliens these residents in many instances gave no answering response to the call for military service. In some 2,200 instances, those who had taken out first papers of citizenship canceled them, so that they might revert to the status of aliens and escape military duty.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the complete Americanization of America is not a political question nor is it a debatable issue. If America is to endure, it must be made a Nation and not permitted to remain a "polyglot boarding house."

That can only be accomplished by proving that American citizenship is a valuable thing, that it means privileges and rights as well as obligations. If we are to persuade these newcomers to become real members of America, they must be shown that there is a real advantage in knowing how to speak and read and write the language of America and a real advantage in knowing the meaning of the laws and institutions of this country.

If we permit these 2,000 or more declarants to cancel their first papers of citizenship to avoid the obligations which should be theirs, we say, in effect, that it is safer and wiser to remain aliens and avoid American citizenship.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Did not many of these men enlist in foreign service?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No; I am informed that these declarants who have been recorded in Government departments, as I have given them, are those who withdrew their first papers in order to escape military service, and who did escape military service, both in this country and in their homelands.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know a great many who did that because they wanted to go into foreign service.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The section as I have offered it expressly states that only those who canceled their first papers in order to escape military service shall be deported.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I insist that any real Americanization policy must be based upon the idea that American citizenship is a possession of value and that the blessings of life in America shall go to her sons and daughters, native and naturalized, rather than to those who deliberately evade all obligations and remain aliens and who withdraw their declarations in an hour of peril.

Mr. WALSH. I want to ask if the gentleman knows that many of those who withdrew their first papers subsequently accepted positions in industries that had formerly been filled by Americans who went to the front with the colors?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is precisely the fact. A number of these declarants in my district and in other large industrial districts canceled their declarations, claimed the benefit of alienage, and then took the jobs in mills and factories which had been left vacant when American lads went out to war, and they drew down inflated war-time wages at the same time.

For my part I am in favor of taking these men at their word. They said they were outsiders. I am in favor of making them outsiders by putting them on shipboard and seeing that they never return again to the soil they have dishonored. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the problem of Americanization can not be solved by piecemeal and in fractions. It is a task big enough for the whole American people. It must be accomplished at last in the local communities in the public-school houses, where the children may learn Americanism in our educational system, and where the adults also, in the public-school headquarters of the community, may become members of the community together. And one way to assist that is to give an object lesson as to the value of American citizenship by deporting those who had declared their intention to become citizens and to renounce all allegiance to foreign prince, State, or potentate, and then, when the test of service came, hastened to forswear that declaration and proclaimed themselves aliens.

I hope that no point of order will be made against this amendment, and that it will be written into the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am compelled, Mr. Chairman, to make the point of order on the ground that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the ground of the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That it is not germane to the bill, and it is not germane to the section.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. It is a new section.

Mr. SABATH. This is presented in a new section.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This relates to the enforcement of another act which is entirely apart from this act.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 9 of this bill refers to sections 18 and 20 of the immigration act. This amendment also refers to sections 19 and 20 of the immigration act. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] offers his amendment at the head of section 9 rather than before, and it seems to the Chair that if germane at all, it is germane to section 9, rather than before it. That refers to the amendment of sections 18 and 20 of the immigration act.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The section applies to sections 18 and 19 of the immigration act. My amendment refers to exactly the same sections of the immigration act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, these proposed deportations are of people guilty of violations of a certain war act. It is not germane to this matter. For the information of the chairman and the gentleman I may say that outside of the point of order, as chairman of the committee, at any time I am prepared to report that bill adversely. You can not discuss the facts here in a few moments.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I want to call attention to the fact that deportation is provided for in section 8. Here is deportation provided for in section 9, a little different in its bearing, but having the same purpose as section 8. I submit it is perfectly germane in this bill to provide for the deportation of those people, as well as those who are provided for in the bill that we are now considering.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Section 8 provides for the deportation of aliens who violate this act. Section 9 only provides that that deportation shall be in accordance with the provisions of sections 18 and 20 of the immigration act. It does not provide for any deportation for violation of the immigration act, but only for deportation for violation of this act. Here is a proposition to put in a provision for deportation for some offense that is not referred to in this act at all. It has no relationship with anything in this act. It is entirely foreign to the provisions of this act. It certainly is not germane to the provisions of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois say that section 8 or section 9 of the bill does not amend the immigration act?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think it does not at all. It provides for certain deportations in section 8 for violations of the law on the part of those who entered the United States in violation of this act. They are not entitled to enter the United States under this act. Section 9 of the bill provides only for methods, as I understand it, and not for any additional deportation. The only deportations authorized in this act are for violations of this act. Now, of course, if this act had provided that people who violated the immigration act should be deported, then it would be quite permissible to put a further provision in it in reference to the immigration act. But this bill does not cover that at all, as I understand it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, it seems very clear that this is not an amendment to sections 19 and 20 of the immigration act. It is simply defining the procedure that shall be followed in enforcing this act. Instead of writing in sections 19 and 20, the committee could have employed the same language as is used in the immigration act without referring to those sections, and thereby it would not have been an amendment at all; but this, as the gentleman from Illinois points out, is simply providing for cases under this act; and in deporting under this act for violation of this act they say the procedure shall be the same as that employed in some other act; but that does not thereby amend that other act. It seems to me that the language confines it to violations of this act.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not this provide deportations in addition to those provided by sections 19 and 20?

Mr. WALSH. It does not. It provides for deportation for violations of this act, and it uses the same procedure that is employed in sections 19 and 20.

Mr. BLANTON. But they are deportations in addition to those provided for in sections 19 and 20.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, if they are in addition, why are they not amendments to the deportation act?

Mr. WALSH. Because they are not deportations for violation of that act.

Mr. BLANTON. But they are deportations?

Mr. WALSH. Of course, they are deportations.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The only question in the mind of the Chair was as to whether either section 8 or 9 of the bill amends sections 18, 19, or 20 of the immigration act. Upon such examination of that act and of the bill under consideration as the Chair has been able to make, he is unable to see that the bill under discussion amends the immigration act in any respect. It does provide for the use of some of the machinery provided in the immigration act, but as stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] it might have provided for this machinery in language of its own and thereby accomplished the same purpose. At any rate it does not appear in any respect to amend the immigration act.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] clearly proposes to amend the immigration act, and therefore the Chair thinks it is not germane to this bill. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. Any person who substitutes any name for the name written in any document herein required, or any photograph for the photograph attached to any such document, or forges or in any manner alters any such document, or falsely personates any person named in any such document, or issues or utters any forged or fraudulent document, or presents to an immigrant inspector or other Government official any forged or fraudulent document, and any person other than the one to whom there has been duly issued any document prescribed by this act who presents to an immigrant inspector or other Government official any such document, shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000 or be imprisoned for a term of not more than five years, or both.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What documents are included in this section other than passports?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Declarations.

Mr. WALSH. Applications for passports?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not know what they call them, but I understand that in getting a passport a man pays $1 for the declaration and $9 for the visé, and then there is his other passport from his country. I imagine those to be the documents.

Mr. WALSH. How does this penalty compare with that provided in the title of the espionage law, which provides a penalty for tampering with or forging passports? Do I understand that there is no penalty? Does the gentleman contend that there is no penalty for doing these things now, and that therefore the committee reports this section to cover it?

Mr. SIEGEL. If the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, I will answer his question. This declaration, made to the Secretary of Labor in order to bring some one over to this country from Europe, is a new proposition entirely. It has never existed before. Therefore that provision is required. In other words, an alien in this country or a citizen desiring to bring some one from Europe will have to make application to the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. WALSH. Well, this would include the passport.

Mr. SIEGEL. This will include the passport, but there is some doubt, of course, as to whether you can punish some of the people on the question of passports.

For instance, I notice that in New York yesterday they arrested two agents of the Department of Justice for violation of the visé law. They were to receive $300 for allowing a visé to go through, but they were arrested on the ground of conspiracy.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. On page 5, where it refers to documents, that would include all documents.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think it would meet any that could be reached on this side.

Mr. SIEGEL. I have my doubts as to whether in this country you could punish anybody on the other side for a violation of law on that side.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This does not refer to persons over there.

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes, it does. This statement which is mentioned on page 5, the applicant is supposed to fill out. He is supposed to give the information where he is going, where he has come from, what people he knows over there, and so forth.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from New York does not understand me. Suppose he brings over a forged document and certificate purporting to be signed by somebody over there when the whole thing is a forgery. Would not this section apply to that?

Mr. SIEGEL. It would. I will say that I do not know of any other case where we have tried to punish anyone in this country for any false certificate made on the other side.

Mr. WALSH. You are imposing a severe penalty which apparently the committee is not certain to what it applies. Why do you want another penalty for forging passports when we already have a severe law?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. SIEGEL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee why he has written a new penalty which by the language will include passports when there is already a severe penalty for that offense now?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We want men punished for forging passports as far as we can reach them.

Mr. WALSH. But there is a law covering that, why have two?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If you do not want it you can turn it down, but I think you need it.

Mr. WALSH. I do not see why you need a law covering the forging of passports when you already have it in the espionage law. I would like to know what documents this law applies to other than passports and photographs.

Mr. VAILE. There is the declaration sworn to before the consular officers.

Mr. WALSH. In title 9 of the espionage law you will find the declaration is covered. To make any false statement of application for passports the fine is $2,000 and not more than five years. And it applies to whoever forges or counterfeits or mutilates. That is the passport provision in the espionage act. If there are other documents than the included, there can be no objection to penalizing their alteration or forgery.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In the gentleman's opinion, would it improve it to have a clause "unless otherwise provided by law"?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think that would correct it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. It seems to me that this provision is necessary. The declaration provided by this statute and contained on pages 4 and 5 provide among other things that it must state the expected duration and the object of the immigrant's visit to this country. In addition he must present documentary or other proof of the object, showing the places where he expects to visit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We are now attempting to reach other forgeries besides those of the passport. A suggestion has been made that if an amendment is offered on line 19 "in other cases not provided by law" that that might cure the defect.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Probably there is duplication as stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 10, line 19, after the word "shall" insert "in cases where no other penalty is required by law."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee whether he intends to pass this bill to-night. It is quite late and this is Saturday.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think we have now passed the contentious portion of the bill. We have yet to strike out the enforcement of this act in the Philippines and to insert two parentheses. It has been suggested that we should go as far as having the previous question ordered to-night so that we can have a vote on Monday morning.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman think that he will get through in a short time?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think in five minutes, unless something develops which I can not see now.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. The Commissioner General of Immigration shall, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, issue such regulations, not inconsistent with law, as may be deemed necessary and appropriate to place this act in full force and operation, except that regulations for the viséing of passports under section 3 shall be made by the Secretary of State. Such regulations shall include special rules for the application of this act to the cases of aliens coming to the United States from or through contiguous foreign territory, and to the cases of aliens entering across the land boundaries for temporary stay or at frequent intervals; also special rules to insure that the provisions of this act, of the immigration act, or of any law, convention, or treaty relating to immigration shall not be violated by aliens arriving at ports of the United States employed on vessels as seamen, and that, at the same time, the enforcement of such laws shall not interfere with the operation of the act approved March 4, 1915, entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States, to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion, and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto, and to promote safety at sea."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 10, line 25, before the word "except" strike out the comma and insert a parenthesis, and on page 11, line 2, after the word "State" and before the period insert a parenthesis.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORES of Indiana: Page 10, line 21, strike out "The Commissioner General of Immigration shall, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor."

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the Department of Agriculture, the Department of State, and the Department of Commerce are certainly as much interested in the proper enforcement of this act as is the Department of Labor. I believe that the act will be more fearlessly and justly enforced if the rules and regulations under it are prepared by the President, with the cooperation of the three departments named, than if the rules and regulations are prepared simply by the Department of Labor. For that reason I have offered this amendment. I want a reasonable enforcement of this act, if we must have it, and I believe we will get a more reasonable and a fairer enforcement of the act if the rules and regulations are made by the President than if they are made by the Department of Labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I feel like apologizing at this hour of the afternoon for trespassing upon the patience of the committee, but I feel very sincerely that the committee, probably without mature consideration, has made a great mistake in adopting the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] limiting the operation of this suspension to 14 months after the passage of the act, which, in effect, limits this operation only to a period of 12 months. If we are confronted in this immigration question with a serious peril and a menace to the country—and I feel sure that we are—then I think we should not attempt to limit the period of suspension to 14 months. I feel sure the committee has not overdrawn the picture in stating in its report as follows:

The flow of immigration to the United States is now on in full flood. The need for restrictive legislation is apparent. The accommodations at Ellis Island are not sufficient for the avalanche of new arrivals; larger cities have not houses for them; work can not be found for them; and, further, the bulk of the newer arrivals are of the dependent rather than the working class.

I submit this question to your intelligent judgment. If we have a situation which we are seeking to correct, is it reasonably probable or apparent that within one year, in this period of economic reconstruction and adjustment, we will have advanced so far in this country that all of these objectionable features will have been eliminated, or is it not more humanly probable that instead of the conditions at the expiration of a year being as they are now pictured by this committee they will be infinitely more aggravating? The latter is my deliberate judgment, and if you are to enact a suspension of immigration for the protection of the interests of the American people, it seems to me that it should not be met by us purely on the principle of a temporary stop-gap, but that in view of the facts with which we are confronted the time has come when the American Congress should have the courage to enter upon a permanent policy of preventing the indiscriminate admission of aliens into this country.

You pass this bill and put it into effect only for 12 months—12 months passes very rapidly in the legislative annals of the country and the economic progress of the country—and before the expiration of next summer the Committee on Immigration are going to have this very same identical problem to solve. The House of Representatives and the Congress of the United States and the Executive are going to be confronted with even more aggravated conditions than those with which we are confronted in reference to this grave, acute question to-day, and it seems to me, gentlemen, to be the part of wisdom, of prudence, of reasonable foresight, to follow the firm conviction and judgment of the majority of the committee who reported this bill, and when a separate vote is demanded upon the Mann amendment to vote that amendment down and let this bill stay in its effect as was provided by the committee.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I voted for the amendment in the belief that at the end of the year if the needful continuation was apparent it would take a very short time to extend it another year.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But the gentleman well knows the psychology of legislation and the practical difficulties of securing legislation. It is infinitely easier to repeal an existing measure than it is to pass constructive legislation and especially when there are so many conflicting opinions as there are upon this question of immigration, and I submit to the judgment of the gentleman from Ohio if it would not be easier at the expiration of one year, supposing we put in the two-year period of suspension, if the condition justified, to pass a bill repealing it or allowing the suspension to cease, than it would to get the legislative machinery started and pass a new bill extending for a further period the restrictions of this legislation?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will permit, I would suggest that the bill was not originally permanent, and if we are to act permanently, would we not be better informed a year from now as to what we ought to do?

Mr. BANKHEAD. But we can be well informed and act if the conditions justify it—and I do not think they will, although we have received promises of great remedial legislation by our friends who will soon come into full control in the country, for I believe the economic conditions of this country are now such it would take a longer period than one year for them to be restored, and I hope that this House, upon reconsideration, will put in the two-year period of suspension. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. This act shall be enforced in the Philippine Islands by officers of the general government thereof, unless and until it is superseded by an act passed by the Philippine Legislature and approved by the President of the United States to regulate in the Philippine Islands the subjects covered hereby, as authorized in the act entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands," approved August 29, 1916.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 15.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is necessarry because we struck out the application to the Philippine Islands earlier.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. The provisions of this act are in addition to and not in substitution for the provisions of the immigration laws.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I move to renumber section 14 number 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 5, strike out the figures "14" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "13."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER: Page 12, strike out section 13, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 13. This act shall not be construed to repeal, alter, or amend existing laws relating to the immigration or exclusion of Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent. Nor shall this act be construed to repeal the immigration act, nor to alter or amend such act except as provided herein; but such act as herein modified shall be and remain in full force and effect. Nor shall this act be construed to repeal, alter, or amend the act approved October 16, 1918, entitled 'An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes,' as amended."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Washington to the fact that section 13 has been stricken out of the bill and section 14 has been renumbered section 13.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MILLER. The Clerk properly read section 13, and I ask unanimous consent that the substitute be numbered section 13.

Mr. WINGO. The Clerk read it as number 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk read it correctly, but the Chair called the attention of the gentleman to the fact that what is now in the bill as section 14 has been renumbered section 13. Now the gentleman's amendment calls for the striking out of section 13.

Mr. MILLER. That is right.

Mr. WINGO. It strikes out the text, which has been amended and numbered 13. I think he has the amendment correctly written. It is a substitute for section 14, which is now section 13.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, the phraseology——

Mr. WALSH. I reserve a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MILLER. The substitute, section 13, which I have submitted to the chairman of the committee, is a confidential print of the original bill providing that the Chinese exclusion act shall not be amended or altered by this legislation. We have a Chinese exclusion act, my colleagues, which is now effective upon the Pacific coast and with which we are all satisfied. There are 400,000,000 Chinamen across the Pacific that are trying by some subterfuge or another to break into the United States. Under the existing law they understand the matter exactly as it is. Now, if we leave the Chinese exclusion act just as it is and affirmatively say in this legislation that the Chinese exclusion act shall continue, we will have no trouble upon the Pacific coast.

And besides that, under the present law the Chinese merchants can come to the United States, and a very promising trade is now coming on the Pacific through the Chinese merchants of China and of this country. Now, it is my judgment that the original print of this bill covers all of these points that I have undertaken to suggest to my colleagues, and it will make it much more effective and be much better for us on the Pacific coast.

Now, under section 13 as it is now written, the provisions of this bill are in addition to the existing law. So no Chinese merchant out of China can come to the United States and trade with the American merchant or merchants of his own country in the United States. It safeguards everything and makes the relations much plainer, and out of all the interpretations by the department of the various phases of the Chinese exclusion act it will remain just where it is, and no Chinaman can come to the United States.

Mr. RAKER. The amendment the gentleman offers is in identical language with the immigration act itself in relation to the Chinese exclusion. I will read:

That this act shall not be construed to repeal, alter, or amend existing laws relating to the immigration or exclusion of Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent, except as provided in section 19 hereof, nor to repeal, alter, or amend section 6, chapter 453, third session Fifty-eighth Congress, approved February 6, 1905, nor to repeal, alter, or amend the act approved August 2, 1882—

And so forth.

That was put into that act for the purpose of the very thing the gentleman is now discussing. The Chinese exclusion act has been settled by both countries and by the highest courts of the land. Now, by putting it in this act it puts it at rest and leaves the people in China and the people of this country absolutely satisfied, and avoids any possible complication.

Mr. MILLER. That is my view, and I hope the committee can see its way clear to accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]?

Mr. WALSH. That there is nothing in this act that is germane to reenacting, or reestablishing, or reaffirming the provisions of the Chinese exclusion act.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. This bill does undertake to absolutely bar all immigration, subject to certain exceptions. Now, the substantive part of the act bars all kinds, including Chinese, out absolutely. It says "all immigration." Then it undertakes to make the exception. Now, the gentleman's contention might be, and it is, that this act does not alter or, as he has it, does not affect the Chinese exclusion act at all. Then it would certainly contravene the rule to affirmatively declare that fact in the closing provision of the bill, which is the customary way.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman think of this provision where it says:

This act shall be and remain in full force and effect?

Does that add anything to that law?

Mr. WINGO. What is the Chairman reading from?

The CHAIRMAN. From the amendment.

Mr. WINGO. The act says:

That this act shall not be construed to repeal, alter, or amend existing laws relating to the immigration or exclusion of Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent.

Nor shall it change the immigration act or amend such act as provided herein shall be in full force and effect. I think that relates back to the amendment as made herein. The point is, what is the object of the amendment the gentleman has offered? It is to make clear and specific what the committee seeks to do by shorter language in the text reported. Now, what is the object of section 14 as reported by the committee? It is to be sure that the provisions of this act shall not be construed as repealing, what? The general immigration laws or special immigration laws, nor shall it repeal any of these deportation statutes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment by way of a substitute. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNALLY as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. MILLER: Page 12, line 4, strike out the section and insert "SEC. 13. The provisions of this act are cumulative of existing laws, and shall not be construed as repealing existing laws."

Mr. MILLER. It prohibits Chinese merchants from coming to this country and dealing with Chinese merchants here.

Mr. CONNALLY. As I understood the gentleman from Washington, his object was simply to preserve existing laws as relating to the Chinese question.

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. This amendment does that exactly.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Under this bill the Chinese merchant could not come to this country, because you exclude him under the earlier sections of the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why do you want him here?

Mr. MILLER. That is where our trading comes from. He comes here and trades with Chinese merchants here.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have been consistent and have voted against amendments offered for my section to bring in laborers; it seems to me all we ought to do in this section is to say that this legislation is cumulative of existing laws and in nowise repeals existing laws.

Then when the limitation of the life of this bill expires the present immigration laws will again operate, unless your Immigration Committee, with rather unusual speed, brings in a comprehensive piece of immigration legislation to cover the whole field of the subject; and if the gentleman's amendment undertakes to do what he says it does, then I think the Chair was wrong when he overruled the point of order, because it is legislation on a subject not covered by this bill and is not germane to this section. It seems to me the object of this committee is simply to make it clear that section 13 provides that this act is simply cumulative of existing laws and does not in any wise repeal existing laws, and that upon its expiration existing laws will continue to be in force and effect.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I want to ask the gentleman if this language does not express the gentleman's view and express what is intended?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. "The provisions of the immigration laws shall remain in full force and effect except as modified by this act."

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the gentleman that that language would meet my views with this exception: In preference to picking out any particular law and saying it is in full force and effect, I would say, "all laws are in full force and effect," because this bill covers passport legislation and other things in addition to immigration legislation.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. But the earlier part of the bill has taken all those laws in. My suggestion is that if we say "all laws relating to immigration shall remain in effect except as modified by this act," we will have exactly the status the gentleman contemplates.

Mr. CONNALLY. We not only want all the immigration laws now in force and effect to continue, but we want all other existing laws that are touched by this bill to continue in force and effect except as this bill is cumulative thereof. We do not want to modify the passport laws except as modified for the time being by this act; and whenever you undertake to pick out one act and specify it, you thereby exclude from your saving clause other acts now in existence. You accomplish your whole purpose by saying "existing laws." That covers the whole earth. That covers all laws.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. On page 2, in the definition clause, it is stated that "the term 'immigration laws' includes such act"—that is, the immigration act—"and all laws, conventions, and treaties of the United States relating to the immigration, exclusion, or expulsion of aliens." Now, if we say in the final provision that all immigration laws shall remain in full force and effect except as modified herein, will not the whole object the gentleman has in mind be attained?

Mr. CONNALLY. I would simply say "existing law." The gentleman says "immigration laws." My term is more comprehensive than his. The gentleman uses the language "as modified by this act." We do not modify any existing acts. If we "modify" existing laws, we should to that extent repeal them. Our intent is not to repeal them but to continue them in effect. We leave them in full force and effect, except by this act we say that in addition to the provisions and barriers set up by other legislation, we set up for a stated period additional prohibitions and restrictions on immigration. I think there is, however, very little difference between our views.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. As a substitute for the Miller amendment?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers a substitute for the Miller amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. So that the provision shall read as follows:

The provisions of the immigration laws shall remain in full force and effect except as modified by this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Virginia: Page 12, line 4—"SEC. 31. The provisions of the immigration laws shall remain in full force and effect except as modified by this act."

Mr. WINGO. I offer an amendment to the substitute to add the words "or suspended" after the word "modified."

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I accept that suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the substitute will be modified as suggested. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on agreeing to the substitute as modified.

The question being taken, the substitute as modified was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question being taken, the Chair announced that he was in doubt.

On a division there were—ayes 18, noes 24.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. By direction of the rule, the committee rises automatically.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. By the rule, the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I demand a separate vote on the Mann amendment.

Mr. WINGO. My understanding was that the House would not vote on this bill to-day. Under the rule, the previous question having been ordered—I ask so that Members may understand it—will the bill be taken up for disposition the first thing Monday morning?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And the question will be on my demand for a separate vote.

Mr. WINGO. Some gentlemen understood that when the bill was taken up they would have the right to demand separate votes on various amendments. With the understanding that the Chair will submit that request——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will do so.

Mr. WINGO. That will be entirely satisfactory. Otherwise I should demand a separate vote on each amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question whether a separate vote is demanded on any amendment when the bill is taken up for consideration.

DECEMBER SALARIES OF CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers a joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 407) authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1920, on the 20th day of said month.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are hereby authorized and directed to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1920, on the 20th day of said month.

Mr. GOOD. This is the customary Christmas salary resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered by our colleague, Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, before the National Association of Life Insurance Presidents, at New York, December 9, on public expenditures and taxation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an address on taxation delivered in New York by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. Is that the interview or address in which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] stated that he spoke as the mouthpiece for the Ways and Means Committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know.

Mr. DONOVAN. And making reference to Mr. FORDNEY'S age?

Mr. FESS. That is not in the address.

Mr. DONOVAN. Then I make no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman say I made any such statement as that?

Mr. DONOVAN. I understood it was stated in one of the Philadelphia papers that you made the statement that you spoke for the Ways and Means Committee, that as Mr. FORDNEY was aged that responsibility rested upon you. I was so informed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Let me say that the gentleman from Ohio is very certain that he never made any remark that possibly could be construed in that way.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, on page 145 of the RECORD of yesterday leave of absence was granted me for 10 days. I am happy to state that the circumstances under which that leave was granted no longer apply, and I ask unanimous consent that that be rescinded.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, leave to extend remarks on the bill was granted to Mr. MILLER, Mr. JONES of Texas, Mr. KNUTSON, Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota, and Mr. SIEGEL.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HAYS, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Jessie Smith, pension bill H. R. 7171, Sixty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FIELDS, for 1 week, on account of sickness.

To Mr. KING, for 10 days, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adojurn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, December 13, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

193. A letter from the chairman of the United States Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board, transmitting annual report on activities in the protection of soldiers, sailors, and civilians from venereal diseases and in the development of improved medical and educational measures for the control of such diseases; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

194. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting detailed statement of the agreements paid and adjusted under section 1 of "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," supplementing report submitted November 29, 1919; to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

195. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report covering publications issued by the War Department during the fiscal year 1920; to the Committee on Printing.

4421. Also, petition of the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs, favoring an amendment to the water power bill that will protect the national parks and monuments; to the Committee on Water Powers.

SENATE.

(Continuation of legislative day of Saturday, December 11, 1920.)

The Senate assembled at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Smith, Ga.
Ball	Glass	McCumber	Smith, Md.
Borah	Gronna	McKellar	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Harris	McLean	Smoot
Calder	Harrison	McNary	Spencer
Capper	Heflin	Nelson	Sterling
Chamberlain	Henderson	New	Swanson
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Thomas
Culberson	Kellogg	Nugent	Townsend
Curtis	Kendrick	Overman	Trammell
Dial	Kenyon	Page	Underwood
Dillingham	Keyes	Phipps	Wadsworth
Edge	King	Poindexter	Warren
Fall	Kirby	Ransdell	Watson
Fernald	Knox	Sheppard	Wolcott
Fletcher	La Follette	Shields
France	Lenroot	Simmons

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH KOREA.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments only to call attention to a grave error in relation to our diplomatic history that I observed this morning in an editorial in the New York Herald. The New York Herald says:

> The withdrawal in 1912 of the legation of the United States from Korea, after we had in 1902 a compact with the Korean Government, was one of the most serious mistakes in American diplomacy.

There are Senators here who, I am sure, will recall the following: The last minister to Korea was Mr. Edwin V. Morgan, who was withdrawn in 1905. Since that time there has not been an American legation in Korea. Indeed, as early as 1906 Korea had yielded such control over her foreign affairs that American consuls in Korea were accredited to Japan.

Another outstanding fact is that in 1910, which was two years prior to this serious blunder in American diplomacy in withdrawing a legation which did not exist, Korea was annexed to Japan by solemn treaty between the two Governments, in which all of the sovereignty over Korea was ceded to Japan, and since that time has been governed as a part of the Japanese Empire.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of the Connecticut State League of Building and Loan Associations, of New Haven, Conn., favoring the promotion of systematic thrift and ownership of individual homes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Radio Club of Hartford and Bridgeport, Conn., remonstrating against legislation proposing to regulate amateur wireless, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented petitions of the Board of Aldermen of Bridgeport; the Lincoln School, of Bridgeport; and the Council Cartier, 290, of l'Union St. Jean Baptiste d'Amerique, of Bridgeport, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the salaries of post-office employees, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented memorials of the Stamford Teachers' Association and the Women's Club of Seymour, Conn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation commercializing the national parks, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Hartford Theological Seminary, of Hartford, Conn., favoring a mandate for Armenia, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Berkeley Divinity School, of Middletown, Conn., favoring the assistance by Congress of the starving people of the Near East, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of sundry Lithuanian citizens of Waterbury, New Haven, and Thompsonville, Conn., favoring the independence of Lithuania, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

UMI

He also presented memorials of the Canadian Athletic Club; Council No. 47, l'Union St. Jean Baptiste d'Amerique, and Council No. 114, l'Union St. Jean Baptiste d'Amerique, of Putnam, Conn., remonstrating against the enactment of the Smith-Towner bill, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented petitions of sundry women citizens of Hartford, Conn., and the Bridgeport Section, Council of Jewish Women, of Bridgeport, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation for the protection of maternity and infancy, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of Ben Miller Council, American Mechanics, of Danbury, Conn., remonstrating against the immigration of undesirable aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

AMENDMENT TO RULES.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution to amend the rules, of which I gave notice on the 8th instant, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 400) was referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

That clause 1 of Rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate be amended so as to read as follows, to wit:

1. All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Gaston, widow of Alanson D. Gaston, late a messenger in the Capitol, under the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

SUPERINTENDENT OF SENATE DOCUMENT ROOM.

Mr. NEW submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 405), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint William Grant Lieuallen superintendent of the Senate document room at the rate provided by the legislative, executive, and judicial act approved May 29, 1920, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

FINANCING OF AGRICULTURAL OPERATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 212) directing the War Finance Corporation and the Federal Reserve Board to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I was necessarily absent during several days of last week when the resolution to revive the War Finance Corporation and some other suggestions in the interest of meeting the present agricultural situation were before the Senate. I wish to say just a brief word on the proposed action, having been very deeply interested in endeavoring to help solve problems that are closely allied to the problem which I think we are now facing in connection with the prices of food products.

I think it is unnecessary for anyone to state that if any practical method can be devised that will not generally disrupt economic conditions there could not possibly be a Member of this body who would not cheerfully and quickly vote to help any class of citizens. At the same time I think it is our duty to approach the problem from the standpoint of all classes of citizens. I am finding it very difficult, frankly, to bring myself to feel that reviving the War Finance Corporation would be the wisest course or would to any considerable extent solve the present difficulty. I frankly admit that perhaps reestablishing the functions of the War Finance Corporation would be the least objectionable of many suggestions that I have read about as being possible to help meet the situation.

But after all is said and done we must, in my judgment, frankly face and realize this condition: It would be erecting simply a temporary structure. It would be artificial. It is for the admitted purpose of keeping up prices for foodstuffs. We have gone through a period ever since the armistice of general complaint because of the high cost of living, and yet in this particular case we will be directly, as I understand the matter, providing governmental aid, and that aid financially can only be secured in one way, by taxing the people or issuing bonds, which is one and the same thing in the final analysis, using a governmental agency to deliberately keep up prices.

I think we must realize that the only safe barometer of trade, the only enduring control of trade, is the natural law of supply and demand; but when we artificially erect a structure to keep up prices to a particular class because losses are impending—and they undoubtedly are—do we not simply put off the evil day and in the final analysis will not that and all other classes necessarily be compelled to accept their inevitable losses with interest added? I think it is very much better, with the world all upset, as it necessarily must have been following the Great War and following the necessarily unusual measures which we adopted during that time, for us to recognize that all classes, whether they be the farmers, the small manufacturers, or the cotton growers, or whatever their vocation or activity may be, must accept the inevitable loss or deficit in this necessary readjustment.

I had the pleasure of being in Chicago for a few hours last week at a conference of bankers, farmers, and range cattlemen, the conference consisting, I should say, of approximately 400 people, representing every corner of the country, called for the purpose of organizing a corporation to try to solve this very difficulty by having those interested help themselves, rather than to have the Government suddenly erect, as I have said, an artificial structure for temporary expedience. The response was immediate; the farmers present, together with all the representatives of other activities, voted unanimously that this was a practical method to pursue, and in a very few moments the necessary amount for flotation purposes was underwritten by those assembled. The idea was, as Senators well know, under the amendment which we passed at the last session to the Federal reserve act, to provide for furnishing credit in order to assist our exports.

It is said—and I think entirely correctly—that some of the wheat and cotton can be exported at fair prices if temporary help shall be given. The organization proposed to be formed in Chicago, without calling upon the Government to take part in financing any particular industry, is designed for that purpose. In my judgment I think the sentiment is universal to-day, generally speaking, amongst the public that they would like to see the Government out of business.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I wish the Senator from New Jersey would state a little more in detail what it was that this body of men in Chicago did in the way of contributing to underwriting the present situation. I did not catch the details.

Mr. EDGE. I shall be very glad to do that. I passed over the matter hurriedly, because it is always my policy not to trespass upon the time of the Senate any more than is necessary, and I thought, perhaps, that what really happened in Chicago was generally understood. The corporation which was in process of formation there is to be organized under the amendment to the Federal reserve act providing for export financing. The underwriting, as I understand, it simply covering the amount of money which will be necessary to be assured in order to enable them actually to commence business, and not for the entire $100,000,000 of capital that is provided for, or at least that it is the intention finally to provide. But from all the indications of the various groups represented—and, as I recall, there were three distinct farmer groups represented there—all joined in recommending organization and realized that this was the only permanent solution. When there is a surplus or excess of products and it is not against the interests of our own country that it be exported, then Great Britain or France or whatever country may want to import go to this corporation. If the man in France can not pay the cash, he usually has some securities—the securities are taken over by this corporation. Upon those securities the corporation issues bonds or debentures to the American public, to farmers' organizations, who are going to sell their wheat, and so forth. The result is that the transaction is financed in the same way in which we would finance a domestic proposition through our national banks, only on a larger scale for international trade. And the Government guarantees nothing.

Mr. BORAH. Did this organization take any steps toward opening up some of the closed markets of the world in order that our products might get into them?

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, this organization, of course, had only one general object, to attempt to furnish capital in order to give credit to those purchasers abroad who want to buy American goods. The question of diplomatic relations and the question of dealing with those countries with which I hope we soon will have intercourse are questions, of course, to be wrestled with alone by those men who are trusted with public responsibilities.

Mr. BORAH. My information has been—I do not know whether or not it had reference to the bankers who met at Chicago—that some of them have been very active in keeping those markets closed.

Mr. EDGE. I can not answer as to that, Mr. President. However, the atmosphere of the meeting in Chicago, the sentiment that was plainly evident in every corner of that chamber, and the determination and desire to help American producers could not, in my judgment, have been mistaken by anyone who happened to have had the opportunity to have been present. Its success will contribute greatly to the solution of some of the very problems we are facing.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. EDGE. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator inform the Senate when the hundred-million-dollar corporation, of which he speaks, was organized?

Mr. EDGE. The corporation is just in the process of organization. The meeting held in Chicago was for the purpose of interesting men engaged in and having to do with the export trade so that the corporation could be organized. It has not as yet, however, been organized.

Mr. SIMMONS. Its organization has not been completed?

Mr. EDGE. No; that was the first meeting, so far as I am informed.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EDGE. Yes.

Mr. CALDER. I wish to ask the Senator from New Jersey if the meeting held at Chicago took any action indicating their attitude toward the revival of the War Finance Corporation?

Mr. EDGE. Not while I was present. I left some time before they concluded their deliberations; but there was no discussion of that question while I was in the chamber.

Mr. CALDER. I should like to ask the Senator how long will it take before the corporation contemplated at the Chicago meeting can function if the organization is formed?

Mr. EDGE. The view was confidently expressed by men who are very much interested in the corporation that, in view of the present necessities and in view of the apparently universal desire to cooperate on the part of those who really want to sell their goods, they will actually be ready to do business before the 1st day of February, 1921; and I think there is every indication from their enthusiasm and determination that they will do so.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is true, then, that the sentiment there was almost unanimous that something must be done to aid in furnishing credits to broaden our foreign markets for the sale of our goods?

Mr. EDGE. Absolutely.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the War Finance Corporation resumes its functions, we will add just that much more strength toward accomplishing the very object which that meeting desired?

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, that is quite correct; but, despite frequent interruptions—and I am entirely ready to answer, so far as I can—what I am endeavoring to do is to impress upon the Senate, so far as I can, the difference between a governmental agency and private business initiative and enterprise. That is all. There is not any question in my mind that the War Finance Corporation would do some temporary good, but I do not think the Government should be called upon at this time to exercise that particular function, and erect artificial agencies to keep up prices.

There is another point, and a very important point, which, perhaps, has not been brought out in this debate. If we keep prices up through some artificial agency of the character proposed, by issuing bonds, for instance—and when we issue bonds the public or somebody must absorb them—it means, of course, more or less financial interference. The same thing is true if we levy some other form of taxation. We can not spend money without getting money; and when we try to make money, as has been well evidenced by the experience of the past, we usually lose money. The only method by which we can get the money, of course, is through the issuing of bonds or by taking it from some Government appropriation which is based on a levy of taxes.

The business men of the country apparently are ready to finance themselves. They have been somewhat tardy, perhaps, in view of their opportunities, in forming the necessary financial institutions to carry on the work in a businesslike way, but they are now acting. I do not believe the people represented in Chicago, I will say to the Senator from Georgia, generally speaking, think it necessary for the Government actually to finance or to advance means in order to help relieve the present situation.

I started to make the point that if we put prices up of stocks in storage in this sudden artificial way we are going to be faced with just that much additional difficulty in trying to sell and export such goods. We read in the papers—and I assume that it is true—that importations are coming in every day, and that we must consider the question of embargoes. I do not doubt that there is something in that, but foreign prices are usually under ours, and now, if we attempt to raise our prices to our own people by using governmental means, at the same time we will make it all the more difficult for the farmers themselves to find a market to which to export their goods because of our higher prices.

Prices are going down all over the world as well as in America, and I think a large proportion of the people of this country are very glad that they are going down. I do not think that it is incumbent upon the Senate or upon Congress or that it is the duty of Congress to erect a temporary structure in this way in order to create a false market and to put ourselves to a greater or less extent in a position where we will not have the market long because of our prices.

Let us take our medicine and get through with this condition. We altered many policies during the war, and I think now we should get down to normal conditions and take our medicine and build on a great solid foundation rather than to rely upon governmental interference and governmental help. There are plenty of things for us to do; there are many things which it is necessary should be done in connection with taxation and transportation. We can, for instance, deal with the numerous profiteers between the coal mine and the retail dealer. All these things are proper governmental functions. There are many activities in which we can help to cooperate and assist, but merely to revive semiwar institutions or to issue bonds or to get money in some way or other temporarily to put up prices, in my judgment, is based upon a false principle. We must realize and recognize that in order to bring about permanent relief we must get down to the common sense basis of supply and demand and not artificial expedients.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I wish to ask him to yield to me for a moment to ask a question.

Mr. EDGE. I am through, unless the Senator desires to ask a question.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to make a little statement and ask the Senator's opinion upon it.

Mr. EDGE. I will be very glad to listen to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. Of course, the Senator realizes that the War Finance Corporation has not any power to loan money to anybody to carry products. It has power simply to loan money to aid in foreign commerce and in selling products abroad.

Mr. EDGE. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. Now, I wish to invite the Senator's attention to a condition which I am told exists, of which I am reminded by the question of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

I am told that practically all purchases of food products or farm products in this country are made by foreign Governments; that the citizens and dealers and corporations of foreign countries are not permitted to come here and buy products. The Governments appoint commissions, and those commissions are combining and forcing down the American market, and buying together as against a large number of scattered sellers all over the country who have not organized and who are not coordinated. Now, I desire to ask the Senator if he thinks that if corporations like the one in Chicago are organized, or the War Finance Corporation could aid in any way in coordinating their selling agencies so as to meet these foreign combinations in this country?

Mr. EDGE. I am very glad the Senator made that suggestion. I think one of the main activities and essential features of these so-called international corporations is to establish, in the various centers of Europe or South America or any country with which it is hoped we will deal, representatives of the corporations who will be in thorough touch with the local situation, which we can not possibly handle through our Department of State, or even through our Department of Commerce, with the small appropriation we have for foreign investigations. The idea of these corporations is to have men in all these centers who will be thoroughly familiar with trade conditions, so that we can have a real market, based on that type of investigation, which will make possible discovering just such conditions as the Senator mentions. I think the prospect of these corporations being generally formed is very good.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Does my colleague understand that through the War Finance Corporation the export of cotton and wheat to Germany is to be financed?

Mr. EDGE. I understand that the joint resolution which the Senate is now considering does not limit the activities of the War Finance Corporation to any particular type of commodity.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Incidentally, it will furnish credit to Germany; will it not?

Mr. EDGE. It will have the opportunity to do so.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes.

Mr. EDGE. I see nothing, as far as I understand, to prevent it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It might be interesting to the Senate to note an analysis which was made by a writer for one of the financial trade papers of New York. As part of a long statement, there is included this information:

> Before the war $12 out of $22 of our European export balance was owed by Britain. Her share has fallen in 1920 to less than $9. The weakest book debts in Europe are now ours. Our exports to Germany are growing by leaps and bounds. With the mark at less than 2 cents, why should a corporation of the United States Government, formed to prosecute a war against Germany, finance export to that country which increases by leaps and bounds? German faith aside, do we propose to finance, through our export trade, a treaty which has not yet assumed the form of a definite obligation for the repayment of money?

Mr. EDGE. That is very pertinent?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, the question just propounded by the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] brings up a very important subject, and one that I do not believe can be handled by a discussion of this joint resolution; but I hope it is one that is being seriously considered by the administration at the present time.

With regard to the pending measure, I must agree with the sentiments expressed by the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE]. I am rather surprised, however, that he should take the position that he does against the pending measure, because, as I understood from the remarks of Senators on the other side of the Chamber the other day, the first section of this joint resolution is one that would greatly encourage the formation of these finance corporations. My impression is that it will aid, rather than injure, the organization of these corporations. You will remember that the Senator from New Jersey urged his bill a year ago as an emergency measure, and properly so. I think the bill passed on December 24, 1919; but, if my information is correct, the only corporation that has been formed up to date under that bill is one with a capital of $6,000,000. Meantime, this country in some way has succeeded in exporting to Europe over $6,000,000,000 worth of goods.

With some misgivings I am willing to support the first section of the joint resolution. I do this because it is something that we have already done. It is a temporary matter. It is in the line of legislation that has already been written upon the statute books. It is fairly drawn. It does not undertake to deceive anyone, and my hope is that it will do a little good. We all know that what the farmers need to-day and what everybody needs who has goods to sell is a market; and anything that we can do to help market those goods at a reasonable price—many times at a loss, no doubt—we ought to do. But I rose for the purpose of saying that while I can support section 1 of this joint resolution with some misgivings, I can not vote for it if section 2 remains in it, for that is clearly deceptive.

We have no right to direct an administrative officer of this Government to do something which we know he can not do; and the very preamble of the joint resolution commits Congress to the proposition that it can not be done. I read it:

Whereas the banks of the country are unable to extend credit to the farmer in order that the farm products may be held until they can be sold in a fair and reasonable market.

We here declare that the banks can not do this, and yet we order the Federal Reserve Board to do it, without providing for an additional dollar to the reserves. It is not fair to the Federal Reserve Board. It is not creditable legislation.

If section 2 is enacted, the press of the country will immediately publish the fact that Congress has directed the members of the Federal Reserve Board to do all that is necessary to permit the banks of the country to extend liberal credits to the farmers at the lowest possible rate of interest.

The first farmer that applies for a loan will be told by the banker that he does not care what Congress has done, he can not lend money that he has not got, and no law can compel him to do it. The farmer will be recommended to wait upon the Federal Reserve Board; and then the representatives of the farmers will come to Washington, and they will want to know of the Federal Reserve Board why it is that the banks are not supplied with money whereby they can extend liberal accommodations to the farmers at the lowest possible rate of interest. The members of the Federal Reserve Board—I should if I were a member—will say to these men representing the farmers, "If Congress was acting in good faith when it passed that law, then you had better go to Congress. We are in precisely the same situation that the member banks are. We have not got the money." The next thing they will do will be to come to Congress, and they will inquire of the authors of this joint resolution whether or not they were acting in good faith, and of course they were. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] never acts otherwise; neither does the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] says we have plenty of money; so does the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. They are all acting in good faith; and if we have plenty of money, then why not produce it? The next step in the program will be to raise the money.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think the Senator places somewhat of a misconstruction upon the meaning of the language which he read from the preamble of the joint resolution. Properly interpreted, I understand that to mean that in the conditions which have been created by the restriction of bank credits under the policy of the Federal Reserve Board, the banks are not able to furnish the money to finance these exports; not that the banks have not the money, but that the money is not available upon the security which the farmer is able to give.

The Senator will remember that some time during the middle of the summer, just before this disastrous slump in the South began, the Federal Reserve Board promulgated a rule of credit, and that rule of credit greatly restricted the credits which the banks had theretofore been giving, especially credits given to the farmer. One of its fundamental propositions was that the member banks would not be permitted to discount paper in the Federal reserve banks given for the purpose of enabling the withholding of crops from the market. By reason of that order, when a member bank is asked to lend a farmer money for the purpose of enabling him to withhold his product temporarily from the market in order to make better marketing conditions and to save himself against the loss incident to selling his product for one-half the cost of production, the bank says to him: "We can not lend you the money, although we may have a superabundance of money, because in case of an emergency, to meet our own obligations, we can not take the paper which you offer us to the Federal reserve banks and have it discounted." By reason of that restriction, the banks, though they may have the money—those in the South do not have it, but the Federal reserve banks in other sections have an abundance of money—though they may have ever so much money, they can not use that money to make advances to member banks that have discounted farm paper.

That is what the language means. The banks are not able to furnish the credit, because they are not able to discount the paper which they have taken for the advances they have been asked to make or have made.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, if this preamble could be accompanied by the speech of the Senator from North Carolina, it might satisfy the farmers of his State; but it would not satisfy the farmers of my State, because they, when they read a law, go by the language of the law, and I think we have to do that in this case in conjunction with the statement of the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, who told the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry that the reserves of the Federal Reserve System would not permit——

Mr. SIMMONS. Does not the Senator think we can interpret the meaning of that language in the preamble with a view to conditions which actually exist, restricting credit and disabling banks from advancing money which may be necessary for the purpose sought to be accomplished?

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator from North Carolina knows that the members of the Federal Reserve Board have no authority over the conduct of the business of the member banks.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator knows that, of course; but the Senator knows, on the other hand, that the Federal Reserve Board have a perfect right to prescribe to the Federal reserve banks the policy which they shall pursue.

Mr. McLEAN. And the governor of the Federal Reserve Board says that he has done that to the best of his ability for the purpose of conserving the reserves of the system to accommodate the legitimate commerce of the country.

Mr. SIMMONS. If he has done it to the best of his ability, he has done it in a way that has paralyzed the ability of the member banks in the agricultural sections of the country to accommodate the farmers in their effort to protect their products from a sacrifice.

Mr. McLEAN. If that is true, then we must in some way direct the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, or the members of that board, to change their policy. This act does not do that. On the contrary, it says it is to be in accordance with the law as it is to-day, and they tell you that as they interpret that law they are doing all that can be done, that they have to have more funds.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator contend that there is anything in the law as it exists to-day that requires the Federal Reserve Board to promulgate a policy of the kind I have indicated?

Mr. McLEAN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. They can change that policy and still be within the law, and the suggestion intended to be conveyed in that language of the preamble is that it is the opinion of the Congress that the Federal Reserve Board ought to modify that policy in the interests of agriculture.

Mr. McLEAN. Then you must put them in a position where they will be able to do it.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Connecticut permit me, for information, to propound a question to the Senator from North Carolina apropos of the statement he just made? If the Senator from North Carolina will answer it, I shall be very glad if the Senator from Connecticut will yield.

Mr. McLEAN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from North Carolina think that it is the duty of the member banks of the Federal reserve, or State banks, or private banks, to loan millions and hundreds of millions of dollars to farmers and stock raisers, in the face of falling markets, upon grain, and sheep, and cattle, and that the Federal Reserve Board should direct its members to make loans aggregating hundreds of millions, in order that the farmers may hold their grain and their other products in the face of the falling markets until, in the language of this joint resolution, they are permitted to sell them in a fair and reasonable market?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not understand that the bank of the country are unable to extend this credit to the farmers if they are permitted to do it in a safe way, and a safe way to them is under conditions where they can, in case of emergency, rediscount the paper which they take.

If the Senator asks me the question whether, as a matter of public policy, the banks of the country should come to the relief of the farmers in this situation, I answer him, unequivocally, that as far as they are able with safety to themselves, as a matter of public welfare and public policy, they ought to extend to the farmers, in the conditions which we have now, all the credit that they possibly can safely extend to them. The Senator would not contend, I imagine, that it is in the interest of the country that the great agricultural products of this country, made at the highest price at which any crop was ever made in this country, shall be thrown upon the market and sold for one-half of the cost of production. Does not the Senator see that that policy and that course would mean the inevitable ruin of the farming element of this country, which constitutes probably a little more than one-half of our population?

Does not the Senator know that in the agricultural sections of this country every business interest, the banking interests, the manufacturing interests, the commercial interests, depend upon the prosperity of the farmer; and can he not see that if the farmer is compelled to sell his products at one-half the cost of production, at the same time it pulls down the farmer that it will drag down every other legitimate business in the section of the country in which agriculture predominates? Does not the Senator, in the face of a situation of that sort, believe that it should be the policy of this Government, the policy of the financial institutions of those sections and of the whole country, to help the farmer, and in helping the farmer help the business situation in this country against such a disaster as would befall it inevitably in case the farmers are forced to sell their products for one-half what they cost to produce?

Mr. McLEAN. I am glad to know that the Senator from North Carolina is fast becoming a good protectionist.

Mr. SIMMONS. I beg pardon; I did not hear the Senator's remark.

Mr. McLEAN. I am glad to know that the Senator from North Carolina believes in protecting the producers of America against the ruin of foreign competition and provide a market for our home products.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I am not advocating any such policy as the Senator indicates. I am advocating simply the policy of allowing the banks, not forcing the banks, but allowing the banks, as far as they are able, to help the farmer out in this situation. The Senator says I am attempting to protect by that policy the home producer against the foreign competitor. I can not understand the question, if the Senator will pardon me. I can not see its application to the situation we are discussing.

Mr. McLEAN. If I was mistaken, I am sorry. I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment? I apologize for trespassing.

Mr. McLEAN. I did not intend to occupy more than three minutes. I shall finish very soon now, I will say to the Senator from Utah. I would like to confine the consideration of the joint resolution in the minds of the Senate to section 2.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to say that I have been waiting for an opportunity to get the floor to offer, on behalf of the committee, a substitute for the second resolution, and if the Senator will permit I will offer it now, and he can discuss that substitute?

Mr. McLEAN. I shall be glad to have the Senator send it to the desk and have it read.

Mr. NORRIS. For the information of the Senate, on behalf of the Committee on Agriculture, I will say that at the proper time this substitute for resolution No. 2 will be offered.

Mr. BORAH. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 2. That it is the opinion of the Congress that the Federal Reserve Board should take such action as may be necessary to permit the member banks of the Federal Reserve System to grant liberal extensions of credit to the farmers of the country, upon the security of the agricultural products now held by them, by permitting the rediscounting of such notes of extension at a fair and reasonable rate of interest.

Mr. McLEAN. As I understand the amendment, it withdraws the direction and merely expresses an opinion of Congress?

Mr. NORRIS. That is correct.

Mr. McLEAN. Well, Mr. President, it seems to me that when the Congress of the United States reduces itself to the practice of enacting legislation, preceded by long preambles and resulting in the expression of an opinion merely, we had better be engaged in some other business. I was not brought up to believe that that was the right way to legislate. It makes the situation worse instead of better, and it is a confession on the part of the authors of this bill that section 2 is ridiculous and would result in serious inconvenience for its authors before they get through with it. The farmers of the country are entitled to be told the truth, and we must act in good faith, and when they come here and want to know why the Federal Reserve Board can not furnish what, in the opinion of Congress, is necessary, they will be told that we have not furnished the money; and we must do it or stultify ourselves.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, does not the Senator think that in this instance the opinion of Congress is apt to be less dangerous than the mandate?

Mr. McLEAN. If we pursue this course of legislation, it will be.

Now, Mr. President, we may as well tell the whole story; it is very short. No banking system can be devised which will save and protect from loss the producers of a great country like this on a rapidly falling market. We have heard much from the other side of the Chamber about this new banking system; that it is the greatest constructive piece of legislation since the Constitution of the United States; and some of them wonder why we drag in the Constitution when that law is mentioned. Some of us opposed it on the ground that while the system is much better than the one which preceded it, it is not nearly as good as it would have been if the gentlemen responsible for it had been willing to take good advice.

I am not going to criticize the system. I want it to succeed. But I want to say that there was not an expert or recognized authority who appeared before the Committee on Banking and Currency who did not warn the committee that if this system was constituted of more than five banks it would lead to precisely the situation which has presented itself here.

Moreover, Mr. President, there was not an authority or an experienced banking man who appeared before that committee, if my recollection is correct, who did not tell us that one bank would be much stronger and more effective than more. Right here I want to call the attention of the Senate to a statement of the governor of the Federal Reserve Board bearing upon this subject. It was, in substance, that the committee must remember that this is not a central banking system; that it is composed of 12 banks, each independently managed, over which members of the Federal Reserve Board have only limited authority, and we have a situation now which might well have been anticipated, where every one of those banks is trying its best to conserve its reserves against trouble.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator indicates that the proponents of the Federal Reserve Banking System were unwilling to take advice. That might better be determined if the Senator would indicate what advice was rejected.

But right at this point I want to call his attention to the fact that the most strenuous objection urged from the other side of the Chamber to Federal reserve legislation was urged by the distinguished senior Senator from New York, Mr. Root, who contended that the bill as considered provided ample facilities for inflation, with no facility for contraction. Now, however, when that very facility for contraction, which was pointed out, is exercised by the board, Senators on the other side of the Chamber, as well as Senators on this side, complain of the fact and want to break down that very instrumentality of safety. If the Senator will indicate what advice was rejected, I will undertake to show that it was bad advice.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator is entirely correct in his statement that the very men who a year ago were appealing to Congress, sending resolutions to the Committee on Banking and Currency, inquiring why some way could not be devised to deflate the currency and reduce prices, are now here expecting Congress and beseeching Congress to start the ball going in the other direction.

Mr. GLASS. The Senate itself, as the Senator knows, passed a resolution of implied censure of the board, demanding to know why it did not put into operation the facilities at its command for a contraction of the currency and for a mobilization of credits for the crop-moving period.

Mr. McLEAN. I wish to say to the Senator from Virginia that the very incidents which he has cited here ought to warn us against trying to compel the members of the Federal Reserve Board to do what a year ago we ourselves said they must not do—consent to any further inflation of the currency.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have here the last statement, issued on December 1, 1920, by the Treasury Department, showing the circulating medium of the United States for the different years——

Mr. McLEAN. If the Senator has a long statement, I would rather he would not interrupt me at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not a long statement. I simply want to say that the circulating medium of our country on December 1, 1920, was $8,281,659,486, a per capita for every man, woman, and child on that date of $59.41, whereas on December 1, 1919, the per capita circulation was $55.61. So there has not been very much contraction in the circulation of our currency.

Mr. SIMMONS. No one has suggested that there is any scarcity of money in this country. There is more money than there ever has been. There is more money than last year when everybody's pockets were bulging with money, because since then our excess of exports has been two or three billion dollars, and that has brought in additional money, and I know of no particular way in which money has gone out. There is an abundance of money; no one questions that at all in this country.

But the difficulty here is that by reason of the policy pursued by the Federal Reserve Board with reference to credits on farm products the banks in the agricultural sections are not able to rediscount the paper which they took.

Mr. SMOOT. I will not take the time of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to answer, but I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

Mr. McLEAN. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SIMMONS. I had not finished. Does the Senator from Connecticut desire to take me off the floor before I have finished?

Mr. McLEAN. I beg the Senator's pardon; I thought he had finished.

Mr. SIMMONS. I beg the pardon of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. I supposed the Senator from North Carolina had finished.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator says that we have heretofore indicated the will of Congress that there should be some deflation in the currency and that there should be some reduction in the high prices that existed during the war and for a long period after the war. Undoubtedly that is true. No one is objecting to a moderate policy of deflation; no one is objecting to the banks doing a thing that will tend to reduce prices and not utterly destroy values.

The point that we make, the crux of our position, is that the Federal reserve banks, in endeavoring to put into operation a policy which in the main is correct, have made it so drastic as it applies to a particular class of interests in the country that if it is persisted in it means their ruin. There is a difference between the policy which gradually deflates, deflates all along the line, where there is a balanced fall in prices, and a policy which contracts prices or deflates prices as to one particular element of the people unequally and is unbalanced in its deflation of prices as to the others, in the first place; and in the second place, they are inaugurating a policy of deflation which is so drastic as applied to a particular class that it means destruction.

Now, the Senator says that we have no right to express even an opinion about this matter. We would not have a right in my judgment to express an opinion to the board that it ought to disregard the letter of the law; but there is a very marked difference between the rights of the Congress and the people to express an opinion with reference to a policy pursued under the law and the matter of disregarding a law. All the people combined have not a right to direct an agency or department of the Government to violate or disregard the law. Their remedy, if that is necessary, is to amend or repeal the law through their legislative representatives. But when you have a policy being pursued by an agency or department of the Government with reference to a question in which the whole people of the Union are interested, is it to be said that the people have no right to express their opinion as to the wisdom of the policy and as to the effect of the policy?

Mr. McLEAN. Not at all. Will the Senator permit me——

Mr. SIMMONS. But we do not contend and it is not contended here and it is not proposed here that the board violate it in any way. It is simply proposed here, if the Senator from Connecticut will pardon me, that we express our opinion as to the policy which the board has adopted with reference to certain drastic restrictions of credit.

Mr. McLEAN. Certainly not. Will the Senator permit me——

Mr. SIMMONS. We, as representatives of the people, have a right to express an opinion upon that as to whether it is wise or unwise, whether it is sound or unsound.

Mr. McLEAN. I have conceded all the Senator has asked, and now I wish he would allow me to proceed. There is no reason why Congress should not express an opinion. What I say is that when that opinion is expressed, and it is followed by a recommendation or direction to an administrative officer of the Government, we are acting in bad faith unless we put that officer in a position where he can respond to the opinion of Congress. That is all I meant.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

Mr. McLEAN. If the Senator from Virginia will pardon me, I would like to reply to the Senator from North Carolina.

Only a few days ago the governor of the Federal Reserve Board appeared before the committee on this very subject. He is a very candid man, and in my opinion a very honest and able man. I believe he has done the best that he could do under the circumstances to save conditions and conserve the resources of the new banking system for the benefit of the legitimate commerce of the country. That is my belief. In any event, that is his opinion, stated to a congressional committee not a week ago, that it is impossible for him to do anything unless Congress puts it within his power to do it. Now, it is not only ridiculous, but we are acting in bad faith when we direct him to do what he told us a week ago can not be done unless we furnish the money and amend the law so that it can be done.

Mr. GLASS rose.

Mr. McLEAN. I will finish in a very few minutes. Unless the Senator from Virginia wishes to ask me a question, I would like to continue.

Mr. GLASS. I think, if the Senator will permit me, it might be useful to put in the RECORD right now the facts, in contradistinction to the theories that are being advanced here.

Mr. McLEAN. I would be very glad to have them.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] asserts the right of the Senate to express an opinion and I concur; but I contend that when we express an opinion it should be based upon facts and not upon imagination.

This talk about the drastic curtailment of credit and the contraction of credits and currency has no foundation in fact. Let us see what are the facts as opposed to the theories.

The Richmond Federal reserve bank, the bank of the fifth district, situated in the tobacco-growing section of the country and responding to the demands of commerce and of agriculture and industry in the section of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], is so far extended in its credits as that it, as other banks in the agricultural regions, had to avail itself of that provision in the law which permits one Federal reserve bank to rediscount its paper with other Federal reserve banks. Whereas the Richmond bank had outstanding rediscounts to the extent of $99,000,000 on November 20 of last year, this year it has rediscounts amounting to $122,000,000. So there is no contraction there. There is an expansion of credit to the extent of $23,000,000.

Take the St. Louis Federal reserve bank, responding to the requirements of that other great tobacco-growing section of Kentucky, with a branch at Louisville. There has been no contraction of credits or of currency in the St. Louis district. On the 20th of November of last year its rediscounts amounted to something like $64,000,000; on the 20th of November of this year they amounted to $134,000,000, an excess of credits over last year of $70,000,000.

Mr. POMERENE. What year? The Senator stated $134,000,000, but did not state the year.

Mr. GLASS. November 20 of this year.

Take the Atlanta bank, situated in the cotton belt, and let us see if there has been any drastic curtailment of credits or currency there. The Atlanta bank had loaned in November of last year $108,000,000; in November of this year $180,000,000, and increase of $72,000,000, or 80 per cent, in the expansion of credit.

Take the Federal reserve bank of Dallas, in the cotton belt. Last year it was rediscounting $44,000,000. On the 20th of November, this year, it was rediscounting $104,000,000, more than 100 per cent of expansion and not one dollar of contraction.

Take the Federal reserve bank at Chicago, in the great cattle and grain-growing region of the country. Its rediscounts last year were $234,000,000, and its rediscounts on the 20th of November of this year were $455,000,000, an increase of $221,000,000.

At Minneapolis, in the grain-growing and flour section of the country, the rediscounts advanced from $54,000,000 last year to $112,000,000 this year, an increase of over 100 per cent, or $58,000,000.

And so on down the list. So, when you talk about a drastic curtailment of credits——

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator if he can give the figures of the bank at Kansas City; I think it will carry out the same idea.

Mr. GLASS. That I intended to do.

Mr. BORAH. Also of the bank at San Francisco.

Mr. GLASS. Yes. The bank at Kansas City on November 20 of last year had rediscounts amounting to $98,000,000 and on the 20th of November of this year it had rediscounts amounting to $146,000,000, an increase of $48,000,000.

At San Francisco the rediscounts last year, on November 20, were $93,000,000, and this year, on November 20, were $154,000,000. There has been no drastic curtailment of credits or of currency there.

If the Senator from Connecticut will yield me just a moment further, I will point to the fact that the deposits of the New York banks have been reduced in this period of control, not of contraction, $1,400,000,000, which represents, as the Federal Reserve Board conjectures, the withdrawal of deposits from interior banks and the extension of not only that amount of credit to the agricultural interests of the country, but a supplemental amount aggregating over $3,000,000,000.

Any sane man here or anywhere else is obliged to sympathize with the agricultural interests in the existing situation and to do anything that he may to relieve that situation; but I concur altogether with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate, when he says that we should be frank about this matter and not, to use a vulgarism, "pass the buck" to another body. If we want to do something for the farming interests, let us do it and let us not engage in this sort of pantomime. It reminds me of an amusing performance of Col. Mulberry Sellers I witnessed at a theater when I was a boy, where the player of the title rôle lighted his tallow dip and stuck it in the stove in order that his visitors might see the glow of the flame and imagine that they were warm in an atmosphere of zero. That is called psychology, and that is all we are proposing here when we imply this criticism of the Federal Reserve Board and pretend thereby that we are doing something to aid the agricultural interests of the country. We are doing nothing of the kind.

Now if I may, merely in a moment, say it while I am on my feet—and it will save another appearance—I have no very grave objection to the revival of the War Finance Corporation. It may have, momentarily, a wholesome psychological effect. It may save some interests, not alone the agricultural interests, from the rapacity of some money sharks, of which there are many; it may do some good. It was for that reason that, while Secretary of the Treasury, I protested against the discontinuance of its activities when the chairman, Mr. Meyer, wanted to take his hat from the peg and go home; but the effect will be merely psychological; that is all. Not an American farmer will be enabled to borrow a dollar which he may not now borrow.

The other section of the joint resolution is not based upon an intelligent comprehension of the real facts, and the Senate will do itself discredit to imply a criticism of the Federal Reserve Board, when it has only theory and opinion to present in opposition to actual facts and the truth.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Virginia that section 2 of the joint resolution reminds me of the comment of a distinguished foreign ambassador upon taking his first drink of grape juice. He said, "It looks good, and it tastes good, but it does not accomplish anything." [Laughter.] I am ready to admit with the Senator from Virginia that the farmers are suffering losses; their injury is great. The only thing that I want to prevent is the addition of insult to that injury; and that is what section 2 will do unless we provide the ways and means, and that is not easily done.

We are in a similar situation to-day that we were in 1865. Congress then, by an almost unanimous vote, agreed to stand by Hugh McCulloch, then Secretary of the Treasury, in his efforts to deflate the currency; but then, as now, the pressure came on, and after the panic in England and prices started downward here, the same influences came to Congress and said, "This will not do." So they started the printing presses to work, just as we can do now. We can make Federal reserve notes legal tender, and we can postpone the day of wrath a year or two, but when it comes it will be very severe, as it was in 1873.

I wish to say to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] that the conditions are serious, and I am as willing as anyone to do anything that will result in actual assistance to the producers of the country, but I repeat that no banking system can be devised that will prevent loss on a rapidly falling market.

The American people have for several years enjoyed a sellers' market. For four or five years 95 per cent of the American people have had something to sell, either in brains or manual labor or goods or credit—I think 98 per cent of them have—and the going has been good. We were advised two years ago—we advised ourselves, and the advice was good—that the way out of this dilemma was to gradually reduce prices. I had the temerity to say then that a sudden and rapid reduction of prices was the worst thing that could happen in this country. It increases our national debt, for one thing. The national debt was contracted on purchases of war supplies at war prices, and must be paid by goods measured in dollars. When you cut the price of goods in two you require just twice as many days of labor to produce a dollar's worth of goods as before. It is not a pleasing thing to contemplate, but of the 95,000,000 or 98,000,000 people who had things to sell two years ago not one of them reduced by the fraction of a mill the price of the article in which he was interested. That was the trouble.

A few months ago it occurred to the American people that they were consumers as well as producers; but even then they were not willing to go the long and safe way home; they went across lots, through the ditches, and over the fences and organized a consumers' strike, which swept the country like a contagion. Nobody would buy anything.

Now, I should like to have the Senator from North Carolina suggest a remedy that is practicable. The farmers, of course, get hurt first and last. A manufacturer can suspend his operations for a season, but the farmer who suspends for a season usually suspends for good. If, however, we are going to help him, let us do something more than express an opinion or direct an administrative officer of the Government to do something which he has told us in advance he can not do and which we know he can not do. From 1865 to 1873 the American people tried to make gold out of paper, but they found they could not do it, and I do not believe it is worth while for us to repeat that experiment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry for information?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes.

Mr. KING. Assume that this joint resolution will pass in its present form and that the Federal Reserve Board shall attempt to carry out the spirit of the resolution and rediscount the paper which may be tendered by the member banks, and suppose that the member banks are inclined to grant still further credits to the farmers and to the stock growers and to other persons, keeping in mind the fact that most of the banks now are below their legal gold reserve—Federal banks as well as State banks—I want to ask the Senator how if we should loan $1,000,000,000, $2,000,000,000, or $3,000,000,000 more through the State banks and Federal banks we would get the money for a proper reserve in the various banks? Where are we going to get the gold?

Mr. McLEAN. Does the Senator ask me where are we going to get it?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. McLEAN. It can not be had. The Senator knows that as well as I do.

Mr. KING. Exactly.

Mr. McLEAN. We could land right where Germany is if we follow that policy to its legitimate result; we could issue fiat money.

Mr. KING. Then, how are we going to extend still further credits along the lines indicated by the joint resolution if our gold reserve now is depleted?

Mr. McLEAN. We can not do it; that is the point I am trying to make.

Mr. KING. That is exactly what I am trying to elicit from the Senator.

Mr. McLEAN. It is a physical impossibility, unless Congress takes the money out of the pockets of the people in taxes and buys more gold, if it can be bought. I do not know that it can be.

Mr. KING. It would follow, then, as I apprehend the Senator's position, that we would be compelled to resort to taxation to raise more money in order to meet the credit which is to be extended?

Mr. McLEAN. We could issue more bonds possibly and sell them and get money to buy more gold to replenish the reserves; but that has got to be done. I say that Congress, if it intends to do anything but deceive the farmer, should do the necessary thing. What the farmer needs is a market for his goods. He may think he wants extended credit, but my impression is that he needs a market. I think most of the farmers would be willing to sacrifice on their goods to-day if they could sell them at a price, but they can not get the market. That is a very serious thing for us to consider.

I am willing to go as far as any other Member of this body in providing a market here or abroad for the products of this country; but, as I have said, that is a question that I have not time to discuss and consider in relation to the pending measure. It is a very serious question; it is to-day occupying the minds of the bankers of this country and of everybody else who is interested in maintaining the political and industrial sanity of Europe. I repeat, it is a very important subject, but it all looks to providing a market for the farmers' goods.

In 1914 Senators on the other side of the Chamber complained that the farmers of the South could not sell their cotton because there was not money enough, and there was something like $480,000,000 issued under the Aldrich-Vreeland Act; but that did not help. I had the temerity to suggest to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] at that time, as I think he will bear me out, that what the cotton growers needed was a market for their cotton. They held a conference; they decided that what they needed was a market; and they organized a finance corporation of some sort in the South, with a capital of $100,000,000, to furnish credit to the growers of cotton; but I think the Senator will bear me out when I say they did not use $30,000 of that $100,000,000, because the market came along. Whether the farmers of the West want credit, want to go in debt still more extensively to hold their products, I do not know, but I do not think they do. I think they would much prefer to be provided with some kind of a market for their goods; and I think Congress ought to do everything it can, not to enable them to hold their goods expecting to make a profit that may be impossible, but to furnish some sort of a market.

With reference to the fall in prices to which the Senator alluded a little while before he concluded his remarks, I think it should be borne in mind that the farming element of this country is about the only industry that in case of a sudden and disastrous slump in prices, such as took place in September of this year, can not in any way protect itself without assistance from the banks. The farmers have to take whatever price may be offered them. They are practically the only part of our people who have to do that, and they have not been able to prevent any degree of depreciation in the market price of their products that the purchasers of those products saw fit to demand. These purchasers have absolutely fixed the prices for the farmers. The farmers have been absolutely unable to protect themselves against this rapid decline. On the other hand, practically every other industry in this country has inherently possessed the power of protecting itself to some extent, and we have witnessed in this country the very anomalous spectacle of wholesale merchants throughout the country holding their products up to high prices after the prices of those products in other sections of the country had gone down.

We have seen manufacturers in this country holding up the prices of their products against this pressure on the part of the credit situation, and they are doing it to-day. They have suffered a loss to some extent, their prices have been reduced to some extent, but they have been able to protect themselves against a disastrous and a ruinous depreciation. So that the situation of the farmers is clearly different in that respect from the other industries of the country.

Now, I want to direct my attention to the statistics given by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

The statistics which the Senator from Virginia read were from November of last year, 1919, to November of this year, 1920. If the Senator had been able to segregate the credits that have been granted by these banks from the middle of September up to the 1st day of November his statistics would have been pertinent and illuminating, but he does not do that. He gives us the credits of the banks extending from November of last year to November of this year.

Mr. President, the order of the board of which we complain, the order which we say brought about this contraction in credits which has been so ruinous to the farmer, was made, if I remember correctly, in the middle of September, just about six weeks before the termination of the period for which the Senator gave statistics a minute ago. Up to that time a different policy had been pursued by the Federal reserve banks and the member banks, with the consent and acquiescence of the Federal Reserve Board. Up to September of last year credits were granted liberally—not only liberally, but generously—to every industry and for every purpose. Speculation was rife throughout the country, and especially in the South—speculation in lands, speculation in stocks, speculation in automobiles—and there was no difficulty in borrowers going to the banks and getting all the money that they wanted for 10½ months of the period to which the Senator refers.

Again, Mr. President, up to that time the farmers of the South and of the West had no difficulty in getting all the money they wanted. They planted larger crops because of the supposed world demand for their products. They cultivated those crops at a cost a third, probably more than a third, higher than the cost of the crops of the preceding year. The banks in that section were liberal in extending to them all the credits that they needed for the purpose of making this great crop at these high prices. It was during that period, when the cost of the farmer's operations was so high, when credit was so liberally extended for every other activity in which our people were engaged, that this large extension of credit was granted to the farmer.

But just as that crop was finished, just as that crop was ready for market in September came this order of the board restricting loans made to farmers for the purpose of holding their crops or for the purpose of financing their crops, and during that period the trouble was made. During that period I undertake to say that the credits extended were nothing like commensurate with the credits extended during a like period of the preceding year.

In confirmation of my statement here, and the statement of my colleagues from South Carolina and Georgia and Alabama, that the farm products of the South are to-day selling for less than one-half of the cost of production, I ask any Senator from the South who lives in an agricultural part of it, who is in close touch with the agricultural interests of that section, if that statement is not correct?

I again propound an inquiry to them with reference to the extension of credits. I want to ask that group of Senators who represent the agricultural interests of this country whether in the South or in the West the statement I have made is not correct, that beginning some time in September, about the time we began to market our crops of grain and cotton and tobacco, there was suddenly a restriction upon credits—not a moderate restriction, not a restriction calculated to bring down prices upon a gradual, sliding scale, prices of agriculture, prices of manufacture, prices of mines, and prices of forests—but immediately following that order there was a sudden cessation of this liberal credit that the banks had been extending all during the period when those crops were being made and being harvested?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that question of any Senator from the agricultural part of the country who disputes that as a fact, because the Senator from Virginia has said we are not talking about facts here; he says we are talking upon a phantom basis; and yet the facts upon which I rely are twofold: First, that the farming products of this country have slumped one-half, while the other products of this country probably have not slumped more than 25 per cent; secondly, that the contraction of credits of which we complain, especially as they apply to the farmer, began about the middle of September of the present year.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I have the figures for the very period that the Senator from North Carolina indicates, and they do not show anything of the kind.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then they represent loans made to others than farmers.

Mr. GLASS. As a matter of fact, the extensions in September are rather larger and show a greater difference than the extensions in November. I should be obliged to the Senator from North Carolina if he would define for us the order which he says has been issued by the Federal Reserve Board to curtail agricultural credits. There has been no such order.

Mr. SIMMONS. If I used the word "order," I probably was mistaken in the use of language. I meant the policy promulgated.

Mr. GLASS. The policy promulgated by the Federal Reserve Board was not a policy of restricting credits upon farm products. It was distinctly the contrary. It was an avowed policy of the curtailment of credits for nonessential things.

Mr. SIMMONS. That was a part of it.

Mr. GLASS. And nobody will say that the wheat grown by the farmer or the cattle fed or the cotton raised are nonessential things.

Mr. SIMMONS. May I ask the Senator if the Federal reserve banks were not advised against making loans based upon advances made to enable farmers to hold their crops from the market for a better price and better marketing conditions?

Mr. GLASS. To "hold" their crops! Now we are getting at the kernel of the whole proposition. The Senator would have the Federal reserve banking system—which had its very inception in the idea of accommodating commerce, a system intended to be responsive to the commercial requirements of the country—transformed into a speculative and investment banking system, not a system designed to aid in the purchase of goods and in the moving of goods, but a system designed to store goods, to keep them off the market.

If that is what Congress wants to do, if it wants to wreck the Federal reserve banking system and transform it from a reserve system into a system for investors and for speculators in commodities, it should have the courage to do that act of unwisdom in the open; but if it wants to maintain the existing system as a reserve system, always responsive to the commercial requirements of the country, why that it should do.

Mr. President, as I have pointed out, and as no Senator may gainsay, there has been no curtailment of credits. There has been an alarming expansion of credits. As I said a while ago, the chief assault upon Federal reserve banking legislation, when pending here, was the impressive contention of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. Root] that it provided ample facilities for inflation and afforded no method of contraction. The answer made to that contention, not here, but elsewhere, was that the proposed legislation did furnish ample facilities for contraction; and among the facilities at that time cited was this very precautionary policy of the Federal Reserve Board. Now, when this facility is put into operation for the first time—and, if you please, Mr. President, put into operation at the suggestion of the United States Senate, which passed a resolution last May, curt in its tenor, directing the Federal Reserve Board to inform the Senate what it proposed to do to put a stop to this extravagance and this saturnalia of credit—it is sought here to subvert the original purpose of the law and we are asked to criticize the board for doing what the Senate itself called upon the board to do.

We ought to expunge this second section. It does no credit to the Senate. Perhaps it was not designed to inculcate a spirit of bitterness and of hostility on the part of the great agricultural interests of this country toward a banking and currency system, which literally saved those interests, as well as every other interest in this country, during the war and in this period of readjustment; but that precisely is what it would do, and the Senate ought not to be willing to array in hostility against this system the great farming interests of the country upon the groundless supposition that they have been denied credits when they have not been denied credits. The facts show that they have been extended an enormous amount of credit.

There was a time when we had a system under which neither credit nor currency might be obtained in such an exigency as that which now confronts the country; but happily that day has gone. We have a system now under which credits have been safely expanded. When a bank fails to-day it fails because it has been unwisely conducted; it fails because it has responded to demands which should have been rejected. That is clearly indicated in every press report of nearly every bank failure in this country.

If the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] wants me to put in the RECORD the figures for September rather than those for November, I shall be glad to oblige him; I put him on notice, however, that his theory will no more be confirmed by the figures for September than by those for November.

It was intimated here the other day that at one time the angle of expansion for a brief period was 45 degrees, whereas the angle of expansion for a later and longer period was but 2 degrees. Mr. President, is there any sane human being who objects to the Federal Reserve Board putting a stop to the 45-degree angle, which meant ruin to the banking business of the country, ruin to the commerce and the industry of the country, irreparable ruin to the farming interests of the country? It meant that speculation was running riot, and the only criticism I make of the Federal Reserve Board in respect to that is that it did not begin to put a stop to commodity gambling soon enough. Had it done so, perhaps we should not have so far to fall. It let the situation get almost out of hand, and it applied the brakes none too soon. It did not apply them to the agricultural interests, as some Senators would have us believe.

The only suggestion of curtailment was as to nonessentials—automobiles, limousines, things of that kind. The day of reckoning for that sort of thing can not be escaped. It must come. I do not care how soon it comes; how soon I am compelled to have one automobile instead of two, or no automobile instead of one; or how soon other people less able to have any shall be deprived of the privilege of mortgaging their homes and their futures for this sort of thing. But there has been no "order" of the Federal Reserve Board circumscribing credits to farmers, and there is no commercial transaction of which I can conceive, or of which anybody else may conceive, which involves the legitimate purchase and movement of goods, which may not find accommodation, so far as the Federal reserve banks are concerned; not one.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator is mistaken in one respect. The cotton factors of my section of the country have been deprived of rediscounts in the Federal reserve bank.

If the Senator will pardon me, I will state the service which the cotton factors perform. They are those who in the spring of the year lend money to farmers directly, taking usually a crop mortgage and such other mortgages as they can secure. They lend the farmers money for the purpose of making the crops. Later on they lend other moneys for the purpose of gathering the cotton crop, ginning the crop, and marketing the crop, and when the cotton begins to come in, in the fall, the farmer ships the cotton to these factors, and the factors put their paper with the banks; and for the last eight years, under the rulings of the Federal Reserve Board, they have put their paper in the banks, secured by this cotton, as the very terms of the act provided, in my judgment.

Within the last 8 or 10 months those factors have been notified that they can no longer get credit, and they have denied that class of our people credit in the Federal reserve bank of which Memphis is a part, the St. Louis Federal Reserve Bank. That situation I know exists, and I wanted to call the Senator's attention to it while he was on his feet.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, of course I should have to familiarize myself with the facts in a case of that sort. But I adhere to the declaration that anybody engaged in a current commercial transaction, in the purchase and movement of goods, may get credit so far as the Federal reserve banks are concerned.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

Mr. GLASS. Just a moment. It frequently happens that member banks of the system—and instances have come to my notice where nonmember banks have undertaken to shift responsibility to the Federal reserve banks for their own refusal to grant credit. Down in Virginia six weeks ago a bank which was not a member of the Federal Reserve System and had no right to accommodation at the Federal reserve bank, was denying credit to persons in its community upon the ground that the Federal reserve bank would not rediscount its paper, when it had no right to ask for the rediscount of its paper. A more intimate inquiry disclosed the fact that that very bank—and not a large bank, either—had $136,000 loaned out for the purchase of automobiles, and it was undertaking to prejudice the Federal reserve banking system in the minds of the farming community in that section upon the plea that it could not get accommodation, when it was not even a member of the Federal reserve banking system and was entitled to no accommodation there. I have not the remotest doubt that there have been multiplied instances of bank officials, not having the courage or the character to refuse undesirable and unnecessary loans, undertaking to make it appear that the Federal reserve banking system had collapsed and could not function.

I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. RANSDELL. I rose, Mr. President, to explain in some part a matter about which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] inquired. I happen to be very familiar with that matter. I was one of a delegation from the South which appeared before the Federal Reserve Board on or about the 19th of October for the purpose of asking them to correct the very matter which the Senator complains of.

It was a general rule which they had established, to limit the loans on these papers which the factors usually borrowed on, to the men who actually owned the cotton, and not to the factor to whom the cotton had been shipped. My understanding, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee, is that that practice was permitted to go on as usual; that the Federal Reserve Board, realizing the reasonableness of the request of these cotton factors, had permitted the banks to revert to the old system, which had been carried on so satisfactorily for many years past. I think the matter he complains of has been corrected.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator is mistaken. They decline absolutely now to rediscount factors' paper. They require the factors to obtain the paper of each one of the individual farmers, and then limit the rediscount to that paper. They have broken up the whole of the system under which this business had been conducted.

Mr. RANSDELL. Perhaps I have been misinformed; but I will say to the Senator that I went there with a delegation from New Orleans, and, so far as New Orleans is concerned, I have heard no further complaint. I was told that it had been arranged satisfactorily and that they were allowed to get their advances as in the past. Perhaps I have been misinformed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield to me to make a statement?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have numerous letters from the Federal reserve district of which my State is a part, and especially from the cotton part of it, in which it is said that the Federal reserve bank there has refused to rediscount this paper. It has rediscounted it ever since the bank was established until a short time ago, and that curtailment of credits has suddenly been made. I think it is fairly within the contemplation of the present act, but they have denied that credit.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, this discord as to the facts and difference of view but illustrate the futility of the Senate of the United States undertaking to conduct the detailed business, intricate in all of its parts, with which the Federal Reserve Board is charged.

I am unable to determine from the meager statement of the case here whether the board, if it has inhibited this paper, has done it within the requirements of the law. I have no doubt in the world that the board, in intimate communication with all the arteries of trade and with full information upon every aspect of the subject, is vastly better able to determine whether in an exigency or at a particular period it should grant certain sorts of credits.

Mr. RANSDELL. If the Senator will permit just a very brief additional explanation——

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. RANSDELL. I, of course, can not say absolutely what has been done, but I will state that I went with this delegation before the Federal Reserve Board, with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] and the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and I am under the impression that the Federal Reserve Board complied with our request. They told us that it was a general rule which had been established by them in November, 1919, giving a great deal of discretion in the matter to the various banks—not an ironclad rule, but a rule which gave discretion to the various Federal reserve banks. I think I am right when I say that the Atlanta bank, in which district New Orleans is located, has been permitting the old rule to prevail. I am not sure about the rule in the Memphis bank. I believe the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is in the St. Louis district?

Mr. MCKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am not sure about it there, but I think it has been corrected in New Orleans.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I think we ought to look at the situation just as it is. I objected on Saturday to casting any reflection upon the Federal Reserve Board. It is not right or proper to do so.

The fact of the matter is that every preceding year in our history, whenever the cotton crop, the wheat crop, or the wool crop has come upon the market, it has been sold and that money has gone to pay the notes that were held by the different banks in these sections, and when those notes were paid, of course, all of those banks had money to loan. In fact, every bank in the United States expected this year that those loans would be paid within a certain time. They were not paid. No wool loans were paid, very few farm loans, if any, were paid, and very few cotton loans were paid, and the banks were called upon to carry those loans instead of having them paid. Not only that, but the banks were asked for additional credits to enable them to carry on their business, and, of course, the banks did not have the money.

Mr. KING. To hold the products from the market.

Mr. SMOOT. As long as the products are held out of the market and are not sold, the banks that are holding the notes of the farmer and the woolgrower and the stock grower can not loan that money to some one else. We might just as well look at the situation as it is and not make any kind of excuse.

Mr. GLASS. Does the Senator think—of course, he does not—that the Federal reserve banks should be devoted to the policy of loaning money to hold goods for a higher market and to that extent withholding accommodations to people who may want to buy and sell goods?

Mr. SMOOT. No; and the Federal reserve banks will not do it unless Congress absolutely issues an edict that they shall do it, and if Congress did do that it would destroy the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. GLASS. Absolutely. I believe I do not care to say anything more on the subject. I am a little disposed to apologize for my temerity, being a new Member, in taking the floor at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia has alluded to some matters in which I am interested, and I desire to reply to him. I wish to say to the Senator that I have no earthly objection to his putting in the RECORD as a part of his remarks the credits extended in the month of September and the month of October. I would be glad if he would do so.

I wish to say to the Senator from Virginia, who is in large measure the author of this Federal Reserve System, that I hold that legislation in as high esteem as he does. I think it is probably the best piece of financial legislation ever passed in this country. I think the Federal Reserve Board has saved the situation in the years during the war, and since the war, so far as that is concerned.

I do not at all question the wisdom of the administration of that board as a general proposition. I think it has been very wisely and very justly and very sagaciously administered, but I do think in this particular instance about which complaint is made that the board has made a very serious mistake and one which is bringing great suffering to a large section of our country.

I agree with the Senator that the situation requires that the banks should issue an edict against further credits for speculative purposes, for buying automobiles, for buying real estate at fictitious values, for buying stocks that have nothing behind them probably except a prospect. I think that has been very beneficial to the country and I do not complain of it; but I do not want to put agricultural products into that category. I do not think that dealings in agricultural products could be classed as speculative, and I think there is the point at which the board deviated from the wise policy which it had pursued with respect to speculative ventures and with respect to our finances generally.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Just let me finish this and I will yield to the Senator in a minute.

Mr. POMERENE. I was just going to ask a question.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator just withhold it a moment?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] insists that what we are demanding is that the Federal Reserve Board shall lend money for the purpose of holding the crops from the market.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I took the words from the mouth of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I recognize that the Senator did, and the words used by me were technically erroneous. They do not accurately convey the impression or the thought that I have in mind.

Now, Mr. President, the facts are these: There have been two eras in our country in recent years when there was no market for raw cotton in the country. That happened once just after the outbreak of the war when an embargo was placed upon our exportation by the European situation. Cotton fell to 5 cents a pound. Why, Mr. President? It was because there was no market for our cotton. When a product of that sort falls to that low price it indicates an absence of market. What was done in that case by the Federal Government? The great Secretary of the Treasury, William G. McAdoo, recognizing that a condition had been created when there was no market for cotton in this country, realizing that unless some relief was obtained the cotton growers of the country would suffer disaster and ruin, announced to the country that to relieve against this situation of no market, which was a monetary situation in part, he was ready to furnish to the banks of the cotton-growing section of the country $500,000,000 by way of deposits in order to enable them to allow the cotton producers to withhold their cotton—not withhold it from the market, Mr. President, and I wish the Senator from Virginia were here to understand the distinction—not to withhold it from the market, but to withhold cotton sales until there should be a cotton market and a market for cotton goods.

This situation has arisen again. This product has fallen until it is selling in the local markets of the South for from 8 to 12 and 13 cents, when it costs at least 25 or 30 cents to make it, 25 cents on very fine land and 30 cents on inferior land. The same situation that existed when Secretary McAdoo came to the rescue of the farmers exists to-day. Prices of 8 and 9 and 10 cents for cotton produced at the cost at which this crop of cotton was produced do not indicate a market for cotton. They indicate that there is in this country no market which is entitled to be called a market for cotton.

What I am insisting upon is not that the cotton be held permanently from the market. I am insisting that these farmers be given the facilities and the means by which they may hold their products, the products of one year's toil, produced at the highest cost ever paid in this country for labor and material, until there shall again be a market for cotton in the country.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I feel that there is no intention on the part of any Senator to cast reflection upon either the Federal Reserve Board or the Federal Reserve System.

I do not think the effect of this joint resolution will be in that direction. It is merely the expression of a wish that, so far as safety will allow, there should be accommodation in the direction indicated.

I am in favor, Mr. President, of the organization in the different States of corporations intended to promote exports. That movement has great significance, and, in my judgment, is the best way to work out the solution of the problem which now confronts the country with reference to exports. At the same time, I can see that by reviving the activities of the War Finance Corporation we provide an agency which can cooperate with the export-trade organizations in the different States and temporarily relieve the conditions which depress agriculture to-day.

It is quite difficult to find an answer to the argument of the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to a communication from certain Senators, that the Treasury of the United States ought not be appealed to or ought not to be used in order to accomplish the advancing of prices and the furthering of withholding products from the market in order that better prices might be obtained; but we can, I think, very reasonably, with all deference to the Federal Reserve Board, and in consistent acknowledgment of the tremendous, vital service which the Federal Reserve System has rendered to the country, especially in the critical days we passed through when without that system we could not have financed the war, let alone have financed to the extent we did our associates on the other side, insist that agriculture shall not be discriminated against. I do not mean to say that it necessarily follows that there is a charge that agriculture has been discriminated against, but the impression to some extent prevails that the effect of the policy instituted has been to discriminate against agriculture in the operation of that system. The pending joint resolution goes to that extent, at least; that it is the view of Congress that agriculture shall not be discriminated against in the administration of the Federal Reserve System. It is quite true that agriculture touches every other interest, and primarily I believe that the wisest solution is in the cooperation of the War Finance Corporation with the local organizations composed of farmers, bankers, and other interests.

Mr. President, what we are doing is largely temporary. In my judgment, for permanent relief agriculture in this country must fall back upon the Federal farm loan act and its proper administration. I wish to offer here, so as to save time, an extract from an address delivered before the conference of the National Board of Farm Organizations held at Columbus, Ohio, September 1 to 3, 1920, by Mr. W. W. Flannagan; and, if there is no objection, I ask that this extract from that splendid address be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WATSON in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Extract from an address before the conference of the National Board of Farm Organizations held at Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 1–3, 1920.]

THE NEED FOR A NATIONAL UNION OF FARM LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

[By W. W. Flannagan.]

A pending case in the Supreme Court of the United States, entitled Charles E. Smith v. Kansas City Title & Trust Co. is attracting much attention from its present and what may become its far-reaching effects upon the agricultural interests of the country.

The suit in question was brought in the Federal circuit court at Kansas City, Kans., to test the constitutionality of the farm loan act, and was inspired by the Farm Mortgage Bankers' Association of America. Smith, the plaintiff, is a stockholder in the title and trust company named, and this company was alleged to have had under consideration an investment in farm loan bonds, which under the farm loan act are declared to be "instrumentalities of the Government," and as such exempted from all taxation. Smith procured an injunction to prevent such investment. The Federal land bank at Wichita and the First Joint Stock Land Bank of Chicago, which issues such bonds, intervened, and the circuit court promptly dissolved the injunction, from which the plaintiff appealed to the United States Supreme Court. The case was argued at Washington by eminent counsel early in January of this year, the Federal land banks being represented by ex-Justice Charles E. Hughes, the joint-stock land banks by ex-Attorney General George W. Wickersham, and the plaintiff by William M. Bullitt, of Louisville, Ky. Without expressing any opinion the court in April ordered the case restored to the calendar for reargument in October, when the court reconvenes from its summer recess.

The effect of this order was construed by the Farm Loan Board to be the destruction of any market for farm loan bonds, and the board ceased to function as to any new business. The banks organized under the farm loan act are dependent upon the sale of farm loan bonds for funds to lend to the farmers. Anticipating such a market through the operation of a banking syndicate of bond dealers, previously employed by the Farm Loan Board, the Federal land banks had borrowed from the commercial banks about $15,000,000, pledging farm loan bonds as collateral security, and had also approved loans applied for to a much larger amount.

Under these circumstances the Farm Loan Board appealed to Congress to extend for 1920 the operation of a law passed in 1918, which appropriated $100,000,000 for the purchase of farm loan bonds during each of the fiscal years of 1918 and 1919, of which only about $135,000,000 had been so used during the two years. Such legislation would have allowed the purchase of $65,000,000 bonds and made available that amount for additional loans to farmers. But Secretary Houston, in a letter addressed to the chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee, objected to this full extension of the operation of the law of 1918, and asked that the purchase of bonds be limited to such bonds as were secured by mortgages approved prior to March 1, 1920, in which restriction the Farm Loan Board acquiesced, and Congress acted accordingly. The effect of this was that the banks were limited to commitments already made (in amount of about $30,000,000) and discontinued all efforts for any new business.

By direction of the board the banks severally reduced their operating forces to a minimum and the board itself reduced the number of employees in the bureau at Washington about one-half.

The Farm Mortgage Bankers' Association of America, which, as stated, instituted these legal proceedings, consists of dealers in farm mortgages who, prior to the passage of the farm loan act, had a lucrative business in the purchase and sale of such mortgages. This business consisted in lending money for periods from three to five years at the best interest rate obtainable, usually with a commission added, and disposing of these mortgages with or without indorsement, so as to leave a profit in the transaction. In some cases the mortgages taken were pledged with some trust company as collateral security, with the right of substitution, the lender issuing its own collateral trust bonds bearing the lower rate of interest against same, the bonds being disposed of to the public. As the farm mortgages matured, usually in less than five years, and as the bonds ran for terms of 10 to 20 years, the opportunity was given for an increase in the rate of interest with each renewal of the mortgage, and also an additional profit in the way of another commission.

The Farm Mortgage Bankers' Association maintains that the maximum interest charge should not be fixed by law at 6 per cent per annum, claiming that competition properly adjusts this, but 50 and more years of experience has demonstrated the fallacy of such a theory, and that farmers have always heretofore paid "all the traffic will bear." Statistics compiled by the Agricultural Department show that the average rate of interest on moragages paid by farmer borrowers throughout the United States, prior to the passage of the farm loan act, was in excess of 7½ per cent. In many States of the South and Northwest such rates ran as high as 10 per cent. The lowest rate included in this average prevailed in the State of New Hampshire, where rates were 5.3 per cent, due to the fact that farm mortgages there held by savings banks are exempt from State taxation. Under the farm loan act a uniform asking rate throughout all the States for farm mortgages had been established, this rate in no case exceeding 6 per cent per annum; the great majority of loans under the system have been made at 5 and 5½ per cent, no commission being charged. A commission charge in addition to interest is a penal offense for any loan made under the farm loan act.

In addition to the uniform reduction of the average rate of interest charged on farm mortgages, the Federal land banks have during three years extended benefits to 130,000 farmers, by making loans for terms running from 20 to 40 years. All loans are made upon the amortization plan of repayment, under which a semiannual sum (called installment) of $32.50 for each $1,000 borrowed pays interest at the rate of 5½ per cent per annum, and also discharges the principal of the debt in 34½ years. The mortgage loan once secured, there is no worry about renewals, and none should exist about the final payment under the small installments required. The borrower has the option of paying off the whole or any portion of the debt at any interest period after the expiration of five years.

There are two separate classes of banks chartered under the farm loan act which have no direct connection with each other, though both are chartered by and under the supervision of the farm loan board. They are known, respectively, as Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks. The Federal land banks have restricted territory in which they can each make loans, which is called a district, consisting of several States, except in the case of the State of Texas, which is a district in itself. The country has been divided into 12 districts and one Federal land bank is located in each district. These banks are intended to operate exclusively in the interest of the farmer borrowers, who are organized into local associations called national farm-loan associations. These associations are the only beneficial stockholders of the Federal land banks entitled to vote at shareholders' meetings; the capital stock held by the Government can vote, but such stock does not share in dividends.

The other class of land banks known as joint-stock land banks are organized with private capital. They are each limited in territory in which loans can be made to two contiguous States; they have the same limitation of 6 per cent as to the rate of interest which may be charged and are prohibited from any additional commission charge. They are under governmental supervision and subject to official examination. They make loans through agents of their own selection, and have no connection whatever with the farm-loan associations.

The loans already made by the 12 Federal land banks aggregate about $360,000,000. Some of the loans have been voluntarily paid off in full, and all which have run one year have been slightly reduced by amortization payments. The principal of the actual amount of loans in force July 31, 1920, is $344,475,809, represented by 124,590 existing borrowers. All borrowers are locally united into farm-loan associations which are chartered corporations, and there are now in operation 3,985 of these associations. They are located and doing business in every State of the Union. As there are only about 3,000 counties in the United States, it will be seen that the average is more than one for each county. Through these associations, properly supported and financed, the machinery already exists for carrying out the avowed purpose of the farm-loan act "to provide capital for agricultural development."

These associations now own $17,404,615 out of the total $24,337,860 capital stock of the Federal land banks. The stock originally subscribed by the Government, $8,892,130, is being rapidly reduced by additional subscriptions for stock which these associations make, such addition being 5 per cent of every loan made. The Government has already been repaid from this source $2,050,450.

The Federal land banks have issued bonds in the amount of $329,600,000. They have sold to the public $152,342,200. The Government has purchased $173,285,000 and they have on hand the unsold balance of $3,972,800.

The 29 joint stock land banks have outstanding loans to farmers in the aggregate amount of $79,406,446; they have issued bonds to the amount of $75,285,000, of which they have sold to the public $59,669,300, the balance on hand being $15,615,700. The Government has never purchased any bonds from the joint stock land banks, nor made any subscription to their capital stock.

The Associated Farm Mortgage Bankers take great credit unto themselves for having "suspended" the business of the land banks. They have a very clever secretary, who on behalf of the association for many months has been flooding the country, including the Members of Congress, with propaganda, seeking to arouse public sentiment against the tax-exemption provision of the farm-loan act. He maintains that this exemption gives the opportunity for men of large incomes to become "tax dodgers" through the purchase of farm-loan bonds, and almost weeps at the distressing loss to the United States Treasury thereby. The question of the loss of public revenue by freedom from taxation of municipal securities, of insurance company assets, of Federal reserve banks, and of all other exemptions, does not seem to disturb him. If he only can save to the Treasury the "farthing" income a tax on farm-loan bonds might yield, he will rest content with the "pound" loss to Uncle Sam from all other exempted securities. Of course everybody sees through this sham anxiety, and understands the selfish interest, which prompts the procedure.

With the wonderful amount of good already accomplished under the provisions of the farm-loan act, more beneficial to the farming interests in the short period of its existence than its most ardent supporters ever anticipated possible, it seems inconceivable that its enemies attacking it from purely selfish motives will be allowed to destroy it. Nor are its supposed friends of the Farm Loan Board free from criticism. To rest supinely quiescent, drawing full salaries, and doing nothing constructive, pending the decision of the Supreme Court, can not be considered commendable leadership. Whether the decision of the court is favorable to the banks or unfavorable, there has been no foresight displayed in the way of some suggested method for securing funds for the continuation of "providing capital for agricultural development" through additional legislation or otherwise. A favorable decision creates no market for 5 per cent bonds through a bankers' bond-selling syndicate, this being the only method heretofore adopted by the board for disposing of farm-loan bonds, except to ask Congress for an appropriation for their purchase.

The method of a bankers' bond-selling syndicate, as employed by the Farm Loan Board on behalf of the Federal land banks for the purpose of distribution, must be considered a failure when the figures show that out of the total bonds issued, less than 47 per cent has been marketed under such arrangement. The joint stock banks which have not had the supervision or assistance of the Farm Loan Board in disposing of the bonds issued by them, make a much better showing, as the figures indicate they have marketed through their own efforts nearly 80 per cent of the bonds which they have been authorized to issue.

Fortunately, the Federal land banks have attained the position where each one of them is self-sustaining with the volume of business already secured. They have a gross income per month of about $1,600,000 and a net income of over $250,000 per month, after paying all administrative expenses and providing for interest on all outstanding bonds. They have also accumulated a reserve fund from and including undivided profits aggregating $2,326,668. If they should therefore have to continue the policy adopted for them by the Farm Loan Board, in refusing new business, their administrative expenses could be largely reduced and their undivided profits considerably increased.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Flannagan was the former secretary of the Farm Loan Board. I have asked to have this extract from his address printed in the RECORD because it deals with the actual operations of the only financial system ever established in order to meet the real needs of agriculture in this country by providing capital for agricultural development. Mr. Flannagan thoroughly understands the farm loan system and the purpose of Congress in establishing it; he knows what it has accomplished and how it is operated. No one is better qualified than he to throw light on the subject.

I should like it understood just what that plan and system embodied in the farm loan act has meant to those who are engaged in the basic industry of the country and what it has already done for those who produce the Nation's food. I believe the full, untrammeled operation of that system would bring the surest and greatest relief to that industry now so depressed and that it offers the most efficacious remedy yet proposed for existing conditions.

There is no injunction against the Farm Loan Board or any Federal land bank or any joint-stock land bank. There is no necessity for employing any bankers' bond-selling syndicate to sell the farm loan bonds; in fact, as Mr. Flannagan shows, that method was not advisable in the first instance. Farm loan bonds were in demand by individuals, institutions, and security seekers everywhere, and those which were offered generally sold above par. The bonds would be taken readily by the public. The Treasury might wish to keep them off the market in order to prevent competition with its own securities temporarily, but it seems to me the Farm Loan Board has not been sufficiently active in carrying forward the work they were doing and has been too much disposed to cease business because a suit was brought by those concerned with the increasing interest rates.

One effect of the system has been to lower interest rates in all directions, although the suit was decided by the only court that has passed upon it in favor of the farm loan act and every feature of it. If the Farm Loan Board would go on with its work as before that suit was brought, considering and inviting applications, making loans, and generally conducting business, many farmers would be saved from ruin, agriculture would take on new life, and a healthy condition would soon appear.

The proper administration of the farm-loan system and the energetic execution of that law would redeem agriculture. A time like this is the time when it is most needed, and it is deplorable to have it lie dormant, sleeping, while those it should be relieving suffer. Deserving applicants are turned away and are told to wait; those who need the assistance the law promises and offers can not avail themselves of it and become discouraged. No country is safe without a substantial, contented rural population. The law is on the books; the machinery is set up. From actual experience and unquestionable demonstration it can bestow the benefits which a sound agriculture calls for; and, yet, instead of meeting the present needs of the time it appears to cease functioning and in effect assumes an aspect of liquidation.

The farmers of this country are justly impatient; they are asking earnestly why should those in charge of the only financial system ever devised for their necessities and insuring the good of all now shut up shop and after the most gratifying experience practically go out of business and that at the time of their supreme need?

The pending joint resolution to put into active operation the War Finance Corporation ought to pass, but the farmer needs much more the vigorous administration and full operation of the Federal farm loan act. I realize the adverse effect of the litigation mentioned, but I do not concede that it should result in total paralysis. I sincerely hope some way may be found that will enable the Farm Loan Board to proceed with their most important work.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think it ought to be said that the committee bringing in the joint resolution does not offer it as a cure-all for the difficulties that confront the country or the agricultural portion of it. There are two propositions proposed: One to rehabilitate the War Finance Corporation and the other expressing the opinion of Congress that some action ought to be taken to extend credit to the farmers upon agricultural products now in their possession. I do not expect that the passage of the joint resolution and the operations under it by the administrative officers of our Government will bring complete relief or complete happiness or complete justice. I think, however, it will do substantial good. Neither do I believe that the committee would, if they could, prevent, for instance, the reasonable and fair deflation of the currency.

I think it is realized that everybody—the farmer as well as everyone else—must stand some injury and some loss; but we are confronted with a condition that is so unjust to those who have produced agricultural products that it seemed to the committee we ought to alleviate in some degree, if we could, by any instrumentality within our hands, the suffering and the loss that must come to that class of our population.

During the debate to-day most of the discussion has been against the second section of the joint resolution proposed by the Committee. Mr. President, there is not any disposition to be discourteous or to harshly criticize the Federal Reserve Board. Because of the fact that it was argued on Friday and Saturday that the joint resolution brought in by the committee did that, the committee met and adopted a substitute which we thought would in effect accomplish the same result, although couched in a little different language, omitting any direction, but satisfying ourselves with some expression of opinion by Congress. When, however, we do that, with the honest and the fair intention of making it impossible for anybody to say that we are discourteous or unfair, we are almost laughed out of court by those who were opposed to the original proposition because it was too harsh, as they have said, and because it was insulting and implied a discourtesy to the Federal Reserve Board.

The committee realized, Mr. President, that this action is only temporary. It is not offered as a permanent solution of the difficulty. We want to get, if we can, some immediate relief. It is for that reason that most of the members of the committee have not participated in the debate. They were willing that those who opposed the proposed legislation should debate it, and then vote. If the Senate is opposed to the proposed action, if the Senate does not want to take this step looking to what the committee believe would afford a partial relief to the agricultural situation, it can vote it down. If it turns out, however, on a roll call that a majority here are so foolish and so simple and lack so in wisdom that they want to help the agricultural situation, if they can, then, of course, the joint resolution will prevail.

I am not unmindful, either, that this joint resolution if it passes must be put into effect by unfriendly officials. The Secretary of the Treasury is opposed to it, and the Federal Reserve Board is opposed to it; so that they will be able, if they do not want to give effect in good faith to our action, to cite instances that have occurred here to-day on the floor of the Senate where those who favored the legislation were charged with acting in bad faith, were charged with trying to do something that was an impossibility, were charged with trying to deceive the agricultural interests of the country and to practice deception upon the farmer. They will be able to find in the debates, from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, all those things said by Senators on the floor; and so it may be possible that unwilling officials of the Government, called upon to perform an official duty contrary to their wishes, and having heretofore themselves expressed an opinion that it would not accomplish anything, may get a good deal of solace, if they do not carry it out in good faith, from expressions that have come from great, wise Senators on the floor of this body.

Mr. President, a great deal has been said about the Federal Reserve System. Some Senators have said that this is an attack upon it. I do not conceive it to be such. Of course, the committee, being rather feeble-minded, may not know, but we did not think it was an attack on the Federal Reserve System. We were in our simplicity acting in good faith, at least. It did not occur to us that we were insulting anybody in the administrative department of the Government, or that we were destroying the Federal Reserve System.

There is not any question of what the facts are. There is not any doubt to-day but that in the South and in the West and in the East, in all agricultural communities, there is the greatest kind of depression; that the products there can not be sold for anywhere near what it has actually cost to produce them. There are in the West now instances where renters who have worked all summer to produce a crop of corn have gone away and left it without husking it, because they would not be able to get enough out of it to pay the expenses of harvesting it and delivering it to market. There are a great many cases of that kind existing. The man who produced cotton in the South, the man who produced hogs or cattle, and put them on the market, are all in the same condition. All are presented with a condition that means ruin to hundreds of thousands of our citizens. Now, when we try to relieve them, it is said by some here that we are unfair to the consumers; that they ought to be heard.

Mr. President, if the consumer has the power now, and takes advantage of the present condition, to bring ruin and destruction to the producer, the consumer next year will be on a strike himself. After all, Mr. President, assuming that we are perfectly fair and perfectly honest, this is just as much of a question for the consumer as it is for the producer. You ruin the farmers, you make it impossible for the farmers to get the cost of production for a year or two, and the consumers will find themselves in a position where it will be impossible for them to get the necessaries of life. There ought to be no difference between classes, and therefore I hurl back the assertion that this is class legislation. It is intended and the result will work out to assist somewhat to bring justice to the consumer as well as to the producer.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. As the Senator suggests that this is not class legislation, is he willing, then, to change the first section so as to provide for "agricultural or other products"?

Mr. NORRIS. I am. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. POMERENE. I am very glad to know it.

Mr. NORRIS. And I think that would be the law if it were not changed. As I have said several times, Mr. President, while the word "agricultural" is used, and "agricultural products" are referred to, and the extension of credit based on corn, wheat, cotton, live stock, and other agricultural products, it simply calls the attention of these officials to the conditions that exist in regard to those products. It does not change the law whereby the War Finance Corporation can go on and operate, if this joint resolution is passed and they are rehabilitated, in respect to manufactured products just as they did before; but we thought it was proper under all the conditions to emphasize the agricultural condition, and call their attention to it, so that they would bend their energies in that direction; and the same thing can be said in reference to the Federal Reserve Board part of it.

Mr. President, these people who in some lines have produced the greatest crop in history and are unable to sell it are confronted with the proposition that if they are indebted to the bank they are called upon for payment, and the only way they have to pay is to sell that agricultural product—hogs, cattle, corn, wheat, cotton—and sell it for whatever they are able to get, at a time when everybody knows that it means their ruination. Take wheat as an illustration; does it mean cheaper flour? What does it mean?

Why, wheat, an annual crop, must be held, a good portion of it, nearly a year before it can be used by the consumer. Who should hold it? If the farmer could hold it, if the man who produces it could hold it and market it in orderly fashion during the months of the year as it is used by the consumer, that would be the ideal system. Everybody concedes it. That would bring the consumer and the producer closer together and eliminate the middleman. But if the producer must sell it now, who gets it? Not the consumer, but the speculator. The man who has been a middleman during the war and made his millions will be in shape to make millions more between the producer and the consumer of wheat and other food products.

That is what happens. You can talk from now until doomsday, but you can not do away with the fact that the farmers all over the country are told by the local bankers: "We can not extend your credit. We must have part at least of your debt paid." And the farmer is forced on the market with his wheat. And who gets it? Not the consumer, but the speculator. And after that has gone on for two or three months what happens? After the wheat is out of the hands of the farmer who produces it and is in the hands of the speculator, then it goes up, God only knows how high, and there is where the consumer will get his wheat.

Is it a sin, therefore, that the farmer should hold the wheat a little while, until he can sell it in a market that will at least give him the cost of production? That is what these Senators cry out so about, that the Government ought not to go in with any class of people to hold anything off the market; but here is something that can not get to the consumer if it does go on the market. It will have to be held by somebody.

It will not take any more money to extend loans to farmers who have wheat they have produced. It will not mean expansion. There is enough money now. Local banks are anxious to extend credit to these producers of food products. If the Federal Reserve Board will simply give permission, there will be no difficulty. We do not need any more reserve, as has been argued by some. It is only a question as to whether these food products shall be held a short time by the producer or whether he shall be compelled to sell to the speculator and let him hold it. Let the consumer think of that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. In support of the very position the Senator is taking, it has been stated to me—I do not vouch for it, because I do not know—that practically the only concern that is really upon the southern market to purchase cotton at this time is a great exporting concern with unlimited capital.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator. I have heard that statement made, and I have not heard it contradicted. I do not know as to the truth of it in detail; but we are told here to-day that we ought to be frank; that we ought to act in good faith. That is what I want to do, and that is one reason why I have taken the floor. I did not suppose before some of these speeches were made to-day that anybody contended anything to the contrary. I do not want the agriculturists of the country to get the idea that this is going to be a complete remedy. They do not expect that it will, those who have appeared before the committee.

One Senator, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], had a great deal to say about the effect that this would have in exciting the farmer against the banker and exciting the banker against the farmer; that it would bring up an antagonism between them. Why, Mr. President, here is one case where the farmers and the bankers are together. If you take a vote of the bankers of this country out in the country where these products are now ready for the market and awaiting a fair market, you will find that they are unanimous for some legislation of this kind. They think it will help, and they say that the reason why they can not extend credit is because of the orders higher up.

Again, it is said by the Senator from Virginia to-day that some of these bankers are telling their farmer friends that they can not extend credit, and blame it upon the Federal Reserve System, the Federal reserve banks, when they are not members of the Federal reserve banking system. That may be true, and many times it is not only true but it is right.

Go out into the country and take your little bank, rediscounting paper in Chicago, probably, and nine times out of ten rediscounting its paper now, not a member of the system, with a bank that is a member of the system, and when the screws are pulled on that big bank it pulls the screws on the little bank, whether it is a member of the system or whether it is not. It does not make any difference. So, in effect, what the Federal Reserve Board does affects all banks, whether they are members of the system or not; and sometime ago, when, as the Senator said, these bankers were expanding loans, and credits were being extended with the consent of the Federal Reserve System, it was in absolute accordance with the wishes of the Federal Reserve Board, at a time when they would not extend credit for legitimate production.

I stated once before here—and I am going to state it again, because there were not many Senators here at the time, and those who were here have probably forgotten it—an instance that illustrates that. It happened here in the State of Maryland, with a farmer with whom I have been acquainted ever since I have been in Washington, for about 18 years now. He is a man who is perfectly good. He has a farm of between three and four hundred acres, finely improved, with a fine lot of stock of all kinds. He told me himself in my office over in the Senate Office Building, less than a year ago, that he went to the bank to borrow $500 to buy fertilizer. Now, in my country we hardly know what fertilizer means, but everybody in the East knows what that means in raising a crop. It is one of the necessities; and his banker told him that he could not loan him the money. He said that while he was perfectly good, and he would be glad to loan to him if he could loan to anybody, under the orders of the Federal Reserve Board he could not make a loan for the purpose of buying fertilizer.

The man who operated that farm, and owned it, was not quite satisfied. He doubted whether the Federal Reserve Board were operating this thing in good faith, and while he had no reason to doubt the word of the banker he thought he would see if he could get credit in another direction. So he drove around to the automobile dealer in his automobile, and said, "My automobile is getting old, and I have been thinking of buying a new one. I wish you would look at it and see how much you will allow me for it if I get another one just like it only new." The dealer looked it over, took him in and showed him the new one, and told him what he would allow him on the old one. Then the man said "But I haven't got the money. I wouldn't be able to pay you the cash difference"—and it was a good deal more than $500 difference, too. The dealer said, "That makes no difference. I will take your note. Give me your note, get out of your old machine, get in the new one, and it will be all over." The man said, "Do you do that with everybody?" He answered, "Everybody who is good, like you." The man said, "You can not carry all the notes, can you?" He said, "Oh, no; I won't carry yours. I will turn it over to the bank." The farmer said, "Will the bank take my note that way?" The dealer said, "Oh, yes; there will be no trouble about that."

But 10 minutes before the same bank would not take his note and lend him money to buy fertilizer.

The expansions which have taken place, which the Senators are boasting about so much, have been in other lines than in the lines of production. At least, the farmer now is unable to go to the bank and extend his note. It can not be done.

Mr. President, in my humble judgment the substitute which is offered by the committee is an improvement over the original section 2 of the joint resolution. It is true that it expresses only the opinion of Congress, and that is about all we can do, Mr. President; that is about all we do, whether we put the word "directs" in it or not. I concede that we can not direct a discretionary action of any board or any executive officer. We ought not try.

But those who oppose this proposition are boasting that there is more money than ever in the country, and some of them say, "They can not have any more money unless we increase the reserve." If there is more money in the country than ever, which I concede, then we do not need any more reserve, then why not extend to the farmers of the country, who have these products ready for market, time to meet a better market, as this resolution says Congress thinks ought to be done? I think the two sections work together. If the first one is adopted, and the War Finance Corporation is rehabilitated, it will take them some time before they can get the machinery in order for the purpose of financing the exportation of American products produced on the farm. While they are getting the machinery in working order we ought to carry the farmers of the country who own these products for a few months until that machinery can be perfected and put in order.

In my judgment, Mr. President, even if the first section about the War Finance Corporation were not adopted, and only section 2 were agreed to, if it could be held a few months, I have no doubt that most of these products will come up somewhat in value. There will be some of them, certainly, which will go up. If we do nothing, you will see wheat go up, and the consumer will pay the higher price. It will go up just as soon as they get it out of the hands of those who have produced it and into the hands of the speculators.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that a man ought to be compelled to apologize, when on the floor of the United States Senate, who defends a proposition which is intended in good faith to assist the agriculturists of this country. I do not think that it is becoming of Senators here to say that those who favor this legislation are not acting in good faith and do not expect to get some good results from this legislation. We may not accomplish much, perhaps, if we pass it, but if the officials whose duty it is to carry it out will carry it out in good faith, there is not any question but what good will come from it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have listened to this debate with a good deal of interest. It seems to me the primary mistake that is being made is this: We are speaking of this bill in terms of cotton, or corn, or wheat, or hogs, or cattle, or iron, or copper. What we ought to do is to speak of it in terms of cotton, and wheat, and corn, and hogs, and cattle, and iron, and copper.

When my very good friend, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], suggests that the agricultural interests are alone suffering, or are suffering more than the manufacturing interests, I excuse his suggestion because he perhaps has not investigated the subject. I realize that there is distress in agriculture. But there is distress among manufacturers as well. My own city we delight to call the city of diversified industry.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator allow me simply to inquire, because it is impossible to understand thoroughly just the argument he is making now, whether he means that the manufacturers of his section particularly are suffering from a lack of a domestic as well as a foreign market?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes, I do; and I think the Senator will understand me as I go along.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I want to suggest to the Senator that the domestic market for his section is largely dependent upon the primary ability of the agricultural interests to market their crops.

Mr. POMERENE. I realize the argument that is made; I have heard it many times. The State of Ohio is a State of diversified industries. Agriculture is suffering; manufacturers are suffering. For instance, in my own city the biggest plant we have, a steel plant, which employs about 8,000 men, is closed down. Another concern which employs 4,800 is running now with about 700.

In the city of Akron the rubber companies are closing down or running not exceeding 20 per cent. One of these manufacturers, who was in my office a few days ago, who has been in the habit of employing about 30,000 men, now is employing about 20 per cent; and that is the situation in many industrial towns. In Youngstown, where iron and steel are king, I am informed that none of the plants are running to exceed 50 per cent.

When we speak of keeping these products on hand, that is the situation which confronts many of these manufacturers, particularly in the rubber industry. They have their warehouses bursting with raw material, which they bought at the highest price, or with the products which were made out of this high-priced material, with the highest-priced labor, and they are obliged to cut their prices and then can find no market.

I am not speaking of this because of any special sympathy with the employing manufacturers themselves, although my sympathy goes out to all of them; but what I am thinking about more than anything else is the thousands of men who will be out of employment, and no one can tell how long.

I refer to this because I take exception to the statements of those Senators who come here and plead for one special industry. Why can we not be as broad in our comprehension of this subject as the Nation itself? I have no objection to the reference to the agricultural interests in the first section of this joint resolution, but I hope that in the prevailing conditions whatever we do here will be for the benefit of "agricultural and other products."

Let me go a step further. I have read most of the testimony which was taken before the Committee on Agriculture, and I think that they have done a real service in bringing it to the attention of the country. I am not prepared to say that the Federal Reserve Board have not done their full duty, and if my good friends from the West and the South will look at this from every standpoint, I do not think they will say that they have not done their duty, because I believe they want to be fair.

Now, Senators, let me make this suggestion: The Secretary of the Treasury is opposed to this joint resolution. Gov. Hamlin, as I understand it, is perhaps opposed to it. I think the Secretary of the Treasury is looking at this with reference to the burden it will be upon the Treasury, but this burden will be borne by the Treasury, if assistance is to be had, whether it is through the medium of the War Finance Corporation or directly from the Treasury. I do not know that this joint resolution is going to do any good, but if that second section is eliminated, I will vote for the first part of it, with the hope that it may do some good. I think if the directors of the War Finance Corporation will take up this work they may be able at least to help the country psychologically. I doubt whether it will be of very much more assistance than that.

When our friends talk about agriculture not being a speculative proposition, while in the primary sense it is not, I think from what I have heard our friends from the South and our friends from the West say, they will not deny that speculation is rife with cotton and wheat and corn. I do not know how you are going to distinguish between the farmer who works his farm and the speculator who farms the farmer, when it comes to this kind of relief.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has called the Senate's attention to what has been done toward assisting the agricultural interests. A part of that assistance comes from the Cleveland reserve bank not because they do not need their money when things are booming, but many of the manufacturing plants in our section of the country are only running part capacity, and this money is not needed now, and they are enabled thereby to help other sections of the country, and I am glad they are giving aid.

Now, let me make another suggestion, and I make this particularly to the Senators from the West and from the South. No section of the country is going to prosper when it charges outrageous rates of interest. In my own State the legal rate is 6 per cent; the contractual rate may be 8 per cent. Anything above that is usury. There are 12 States, including the District of Columbia, in which the contractual rate is 10 per cent—Arkansas, Arizona, District of Columbia, Florida, Kansas, Minnesota, Nebraska, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, Texas, and Wisconsin. There are 10 States and Territories in which the contract rate is 12 per cent—Alaska, Hawaii, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming. No farmer or manufacturer can afford to pay 10 per cent or 12 per cent interest on borrowed money. Have your legislatures reduce their rates of interest and you will serve your States.

My very good friend the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] offers his amendment limiting the rate of rediscount to 6 per cent. Is that going to help the farmer? Why, it enables the banks to get money at 6 per cent and, in these States to which I have called attention, to loan it at 10 or 12 per cent, and they take the difference. The farmers are not going to get the benefit of it. The banks will.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has offered a substitute for section 2. As between the original section 2 and the substitute I shall vote for the substitute. If it comes to the adoption of the substitute I shall vote against it.

Senators, it is a pretty serious problem to attempt to interfere with the administration of the great financial system of the country, which was so great and so good as to enable the United States to finance all of its war operations and loan ten billions of dollars of money to our allies. Let me suggest—and I say it with all due respect—that with the limited knowledge that anyone of us or all of us may have with regard to the financial system of the country as a whole, I do not believe we ought to try to tie the hands of the Federal Reserve Board.

If any Senator will take the time to read the testimony of Gov. Harding—and I want to indorse everything that has been said here in a commendatory way about him—he will find that many of the banks in the West and the South that ought to be financing agricultural operations have not rediscounted a dollar of the bills receivable of these banks. Other banks have rediscounted their bills recently, and perhaps they have gone beyond the line that good banking would suggest; I do not know. There may be one bank in one State that deserves and ought to receive further accommodations from the Federal reserve bank in its district. There may be other banks which ought not to have them. That is a matter to be decided by the reserve banks and not by the Congress.

I was a good deal interested in the story which was just given to us by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] with respect to some banker who was not willing to discount paper for fertilizer, but was for the balance due on a new automobile. I do not know why the Senator should think that he could make the United States Senate believe that Gov. Harding was responsible for that statement. That is the most amazing proposition imaginable, that a banker out in Nebraska should refuse to take a farmer's note for fertilizer, but would take it for the balance of the purchase price of an automobile. That challenges belief.

Senators, this attempt, not to deflate but to prevent further inflation, was begun more than six months ago. In my own city of Canton last spring there was great need for 2,000 new houses, and the builders could not get the money. The houses were needed—I am sure of that—but the banking authorities felt that it would be unwise to encourage further expansion along that line. Frankly, my judgment was, notwithstanding the local needs, that as a general proposition the Federal Reserve Board was right.

There is just one time when I get panicky, and that is when I see men in high authority trying to take away the restrictions from our financial system. If they could have their own way we would be on the way to the goal that has been reached by France and Germany and Russia.

Oh, it may be that we can handle these things so as for the moment to make a little more money—aye, a little more money measured in cheaper dollars—but, my friends, the day of reckoning, if that system is to be in vogue, will be near at hand. To use an old Latin maxim, let us haste slowly when it comes to taking the restrictions away from this Federal reserve system, which is so well guarded and has served the country so well.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I believe the Secretary of the Treasury, or the directors of the corporation itself, made a mistake in discontinuing the operations of the War Finance Board. The bill creating this War Finance Corporation was approved April 5, 1918, while the war was going on. Five hundred million dollars, or so much thereof as might be necessary, was appropriated for the purposes set forth in the act. The corporation was empowered and authorized to advance for periods not exceeding five years moneys to any bank, banking, or trust company which had made loans to a business whose operations "shall be necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war," and also to any person, firm, or corporation that had bought bonds of the United States. In a like manner it was authorized to lend money to reserve banks, banking institutions, or trust companies under the same conditions. The corporation was also in "exceptional cases" authorized to lend money directly to persons, firms, or corporations under conditions named. The corporation was also empowered to issue bonds "in an amount aggregating not more than six times its paid-in capital," these bonds to be exempt from taxation, except certain specified taxation. Now, of course, it was very proper for the Secretary of the Treasury to discontinue the operations of this corporation so far as all of these powers were concerned. Beyond doubt it should have been discontinued.

On March 3, 1919, the Congress amended the War Finance Corporation act as follows:

SEC. 9. That the War Finance Corporation act is hereby amended by adding to Title I thereof a new section, to read as follows:

"SEC. 21. (a) That the corporation shall be empowered and authorized, in order to promote commerce with foreign nations through the extension of credits, to make advances upon such terms, not inconsistent with the provisions of this section, as it may prescribe, for periods not exceeding five years from the respective dates of such advances:

"(1) To any person, firm, corporation, or association engaged in the business in the United States of exporting therefrom domestic products to foreign countries, if such person, firm, corporation, or association is, in the opinion of the board of directors of the corporation, unable to obtain funds upon reasonable terms through banking channels. Any such advance shall be made only for the purpose of assisting in the exportation of such products, and shall be limited in amount to not more than the contract price therefor, including insurance and carrying or transportation charges to the foreign point of destination if and to the extent that such insurance and carrying or transportation charges are payable in the United States by such exporter to domestic insurers and carriers. The rate of interest charged on any such advance shall not be less than 1 per cent per annum in excess of the rate of discount for 90-day commercial paper prevailing at the time of such advance at the Federal reserve bank of the district in which the borrower is located; and

"(2) To any bank, banker, or trust company in the United States which after this section takes effect makes an advance to any such person, firm, corporation, or association for the purpose of assisting in the exportation of such products. Any such advance shall not exceed the amount remaining unpaid of the advances made by such bank, banker, or trust company to such person, firm, corporation, or association for such purpose.

"(b) The aggregate of the advances made by the corporation under this section remaining unpaid shall never at any time exceed the sum of $1,000,000,000.

"(c) Notwithstanding the limitation of section 1, the advances provided for by this section may be made until the expiration of one year after the termination of the war between the United States and the German Government as fixed by proclamation of the President. Any such advance made by the corporation shall be made upon the promissory note or notes of the borrower, with full and adequate security in each instance by indorsement, guaranty, or otherwise. The corporation shall retain power to require additional security at any time. The corporation in its discretion may upon like security extend the time of payment of any such advance through renewals, the substitution of new obligations, or otherwise, but the time for the payment of any such advance shall not be extended beyond five years from the date on which it was originally made."

SEC. 10. That section 15 of the War Finance Corporation act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 15. That all net earnings of the corporation not required for its operations shall be accumulated as a reserve fund until such time as the corporation liquidates under the terms of this title. Such reserve fund shall, upon the direction of the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, be invested in bonds and obligations of the United States, issued or converted after September 24, 1917, or upon like direction and approval may be deposited in member banks of the Federal Reserve System, or in any of the Federal reserve banks, or be used from time to time, as well as any other funds of the corporation, in the purchase or redemption of any bonds issued by the corporation. The Federal reserve banks are hereby authorized to act as depositaries for and as fiscal agents of the corporation in the general performance of the powers conferred by this title. Beginning 12 months after the termination of the war, the date of such termination to be fixed by a proclamation of the President of the United States, the directors of the corporation shall proceed to liquidate its assets and to wind up its affairs, but the directors of the corporation, in their discretion, may, from time to time, prior to such date, sell and dispose of any securities or other property acquired by the corporation. Any balance remaining after the payment of all its debts shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts, and thereupon the corporation shall be dissolved."

SEC. 11. That the short title of this act shall be "Victory Liberty loan act."

It will be seen from a perusal of this act that Congress simply uses the organization for the purpose of doing virtually an entirely separate thing, to wit, to increase our foreign trade.

Mr. President, I doubt whether under this amendment either the Secretary of the Treasury or the board had any right to suspend the rights of the War Finance Corporation. In the amendment of March 3, 1919, it is said "beginning 12 months after the termination of the war, the date of such termination to be fixed by the proclamation of the President of the United States, the directors of the corporation shall proceed to liquidate its assets and to wind up its assets, but the directors of the corporation in their discretion may from time to time prior to such date sell or dispose of any security or other property acquired by the corporation under this provision of the law." Congress specifically told the directors of the corporation what they could do at their discretion. It gave them the right to sell and dispose of securities prior to the dissolution of the corporation, but did not give them the right to suspend wholly its operations. The original purpose of the corporation was to make loans to a business whose operations "shall be necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war." During the war this was done. When the war was over Congress, in its wisdom, simply directed that the War Finance Corporation machinery should be used for a wholly different purpose, namely, to aid exporters for a period of 12 months after the proclamation of the peace. That time limit has not yet begun to run. It is inconceivable that Congress would give the Secretary of the Treasury, as the head of this corporation, the right to perform it functions or not do so, as he saw fit. There is no express authority in the act that he or the directors should suspend its operations at will. The purposes of this act are admirably set forth in a report by Senator SIMMONS, which he filed on February 28, 1919, and to which I shall refer later.

Mr. President, it seems to be the consensus of opinion that the first section of the joint resolution should be agreed to. That is for the rehabilitation of the War Finance Corporation. With that I heartily agree. I think it is not a panacea, but will be productive of much good, and I shall vote for it with a great deal of pleasure. I think it ought to pass, by all means. I am sure it will pass.

As to the second section of the joint resolution there seems to be very great conflict. Some say it is a criticism of the Federal Reserve Board. I indorse everything the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and other Senators have said here in reference to the great ability of the Federal Reserve Board and the magnificent work that institution has done for the country during the six years that it has been in existence.

I do not think there ever was such a banking system anywhere in the world as has been created under the direction of this board, and I think, generally speaking, that it has administered the financial affairs of the country in a marvelously successful way.

I have no criticism along that line to make of it. But I do not mean to say by that—and I do not think any of us do—that it is not possible for the board to err at some time. I do not subscribe to the doctrine that it is wrong, or even improper, for Members of the Senate, or for the Senate as a body, or Members of the House or the House itself, to give its or their own suggestions to the board. I think it ought to be an advantage to the board to have suggestions from the body that created it. I see no reason why those suggestions should not come. I can not imagine why the board should object to these suggestions.

Along that line, I want to call attention of the Senate to the time when the Federal Reserve Board required that all loans should be made at the legal rate of interest in the State where the money was loaned. For instance, Tennessee has a rate of interest of 6 per cent, and under directions from the Comptroller of the Currency no bank in Tennessee was permitted to make a loan at a greater rate of interest than 6 per cent. Now, the Federal Reserve Board, while requiring loans at 6 per cent as a policy for the banks under its direction, has instituted new arrangements by which a larger rate than that is in many instances charged by the Federal reserve banks themselves. In other words, the Federal Reserve Board is violating its own rules as to interest charges, and in a sense has become a usurer. For instance, I am told by reliable bankers in the city of Memphis, my home city, that they have been charged and have paid to the Federal reserve bank as much as 12½ per cent as interest for loans made by the Federal reserve bank to that particular bank. This charge is made under the deflation policy established by the board. I do not mean to say that this policy of deflation is not for the best interests of the country. I think there is no serious difference of opinion about that. We could not keep on, as the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] so well expressed it a while ago, at a 45 degree angle. We all realize that. There must be a brake applied, but under the particular facts in the case I have mentioned, where a bank was given, say, $1,800,000 as its line of credit at 6 per cent, and then it had to pay a larger rate on the next $300,000, and on the next $500,000 at a still larger rate, and so on, and if it borrowed more money of the Federal reserve bank it continually increased the rate until in one case I know it to be the fact that the rate charged was 12½ per cent. I think this is an unwise policy at this time or at any time. I do not believe it is necessary.

That puts us in the anomalous position of having the Federal Reserve Board require that banks in my State should lend their money out at a rate of interest not exceeding the legal rate, which is 6 per cent, and of itself lending money to these very banks, in some instances and in the manner which I have stated, at 12½ per cent. Of course, no bank could live under that rate of interest. It is quite a hardship upon banks. I say that not in any criticism; I say that merely in order that the Senate may have the facts about it, so we may advise together and with the board, not in a spirit of hostility, not in a spirit of criticism of this great institution—the Federal Reserve Board—but so that we may advise together and consult together and see if we can not do something to better existing conditions.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me, speaking about that 12½ per cent, I presume that that was under the operation of an amendment passed here in April, 1920, that gave the Federal Reserve Board power to graduate and progress the rate after a bank had rediscounted a certain extent of its capital and surplus?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, does not the Senator also know that that rate was not an accommodation rate, but a penalty upon unwise banking?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not understand it in that way. I understand that the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis, for instance—I will not call the names of banks in my State—announced to the particular bank I have in mind that it could have a line of credit of $1,800,000 at a rate of 6 per cent; that if they got $500,000 more—and I do not mean to be accurate about the amounts as they progressed upward, but, say, $500,000 more—they would pay 7 per cent; that if they got $300,000 additional they would pay 8 per cent, and so on, until this particular bank, which is one of the strongest financial institutions in my State or in any other State, had to pay as much as 12½ per cent for money that it was compelled to loan in order to do the business with which it was confronted by its customers.

Mr. GLASS. That was the universal rule; it was not peculiar to the Senator's State.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can not say as to that. In another State I heard of a loan at 18 per cent.

Mr. GLASS. And it was done, as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has said, under the amendment to the Federal reserve act which Congress deliberately and considerately passed in order practically to restrict—and I might almost say to penalize—banks which made loans so far in excess of their actual resources. It is somewhat akin to the provision of the Federal reserve act which puts a penalty upon the Federal reserve banks which default in their reserve requirements. It is not a commercial accommodation, but a restriction, and the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks would be very much obliged by member banks refusing to ask for rediscounts on a basis of that kind.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that all that the Senator says is correct; I am not disputing that.

Mr. DIAL. The same rate applies to all banks in the same district on the same kind of paper.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; except as to those who exceed their quota or limit, of course. It is a uniform rule upward, as I understand it, the rate depending upon the amount borrowed above the limit first fixed.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator understands that if that were not done, banks which do not exceed their limit would be placed at a very great disadvantage.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand the situation and the motive for the law; its purpose is good; there is no trouble about that; but it puts the Federal Reserve Board in this remarkable attitude, that that board which for nearly six years of its history has made this requirement and in some cases has threatened to penalize and perhaps has penalized banks—I do not know that it has penalized them, but I do know there have been threats of it—for loaning money at over 6 per cent interest under this graduated system, this sliding scale of credits, the Federal reserve bank is making it impossible for the local bank to charge merely the legal rate of interest in its particular State; otherwise it would go out of business; for, of course, it would be impossible for it to continue in business under such circumstances.

It does seem to me that when we passed this law and gave this authority we expected a reasonable interpretation of the power to raise interest rates, and I say this not in a spirit of criticism. The practice, however, seems to have gone beyond the limit which we had any reason to expect. Previously the Federal reserve banks had been loaning money at 3 and 4 per cent. I do not think any of us contemplated—I know I did not when I voted for the bill—that the Federal reserve banks would be lending money to member banks at any such rate as 12½ per cent under any circumstances. I can hardly conceive that anyone could believe that we intended such an authority, and I doubt if any of us felt that it would be done by the board.

It seems to me to be of vast importance that this body at this time should fairly and frankly discuss these matters openly in the Senate and among ourselves and advise with the Federal Reserve Board, not in a spirit of criticism, for I think that there is not a Senator on this floor, on whichever side he is, whatever may be his views about banking, who does not believe that the Federal Reserve System is one of the greatest systems in the world; we do not want to change it; we do not want to hamper it; but we want to uphold in every way we can the men in charge of it. I not only concede but I take the greatest pleasure in saying that they are doing the very best they can; they are doing a wonderful work; but I do not mean to indicate by that that they are infallible. I think that these interest rates might well be lowered. We might well accomplish what they are undertaking to accomplish—that is, to deflate the credit conditions of the country, to check them, because they ought to be checked—and I believe that if the matter were handled in a little different way by cutting out all speculative loans and loans were permitted for productive, commercial, agricultural, and industrial purposes at a reasonable rate of interest we should have all the money which is necessary for proper purposes. Some method ought to be found to check these speculative loans of the country. There seems to be now no effective checking of speculative loans. I believe it would be better for the whole country to center its attention upon the checking of speculative loans rather than checking agricultural, commercial, productive, and industrial activities.

Mr. DIAL and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from South Carolina rose first, and I will yield to him, and then I will yield to the Senator from Utah in just a moment.

Mr. DIAL. I merely want to keep the record straight. I will ask the Senator from Tennessee if before the Federal reserve bank act was passed it was not the law that a national bank could not borrow any more than an amount equal to its capital and surplus?

Mr. McKELLAR. That was true.

Mr. DIAL. That was true at that time. Now, let us consider the rate of interest. It was graduated according to the amount of the borrowings. Some of the banks have since borrowed six times the amount which they could originally have borrowed?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. DIAL. In fact, I heard of one bank that borrowed forty times the amount which it could originally have borrowed. Now, does not the Federal reserve banks merely charge the higher rate of interest for such unreasonable accommodations, and is it not better for a majority of banks to have a graduated schedule and a higher rate under such circumstances?

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator about that; but I have heard—I do not say with assurance that my information is correct; it is merely hearsay; I think I saw it in a newspaper or it may be that some banker told me—that in the Kansas City district one bank paid as high as 18 per cent for money. However, I think any such rate of rediscount as 8 per cent or 10 per cent or 12 per cent is a matter beyond the realm of what that bank ought to pay. That is my opinion. I may be incorrect about it, but I think it is well for us to talk it over. I understand the second section of the joint resolution is to be amended by inserting the words "a reasonable rate of interest" instead of "the lowest possible rate of interest." I do not see any objection to some expression of that sort, showing the desire of this body to be reasonable in its interpretation of the penalty clause which we incorporated in passing the sliding scale to which reference has been made.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. I simply wanted to say to the Senate that I had occasion to make personal investigation of the Kansas City charge. The bank there from which that rate of interest was exacted had extended credit beyond all reason; as I recall, it had loaned eight times its capital and surplus, and I doubt very much whether the Federal Reserve Board should have rediscounted its paper at all. It seems to me the bank should have been closed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that where a bank is required to pay such a rate of interest as 18 per cent for rediscounting its paper, surely the Federal reserve bank ought not to lend that bank money at all. I think to refuse a loan rather than charge 18 per cent would be a very sensible thing to do, but for the Federal reserve bank to take advantage of a member bank that is borrowing to that extent by charging it the enormous rate of interest of 18 per cent seems to me not sound banking policy, although I am not an expert banker and do not claim to be. It savors peculiarly of usury to me.

Mr. GLASS. The reserve board was not taking advantage of the concern; it was helping the concern after satisfying itself that it might pay out. I very much doubt whether it even should have done that.

Mr. McKELLAR. I not only doubt it, but I say it ought not to have done it, because I think that is the usual plea of all usurers, namely, "I am just helping the borrower out"; but the law steps in and says that he can not lend money to a borrower at any such rates of interest. The Federal reserve bank, however, is permitted to go beyond that and charge a sliding upward scale of interest rates that are distinctly usurious in their nature.

Mr. DIAL. They do not want to lend it to anyone else at any such rate. I looked into some of these excessive loans, and my information was that in such instances the bank was overloaded with Government securities or some such class of securities, and that the Federal reserve bank, of which it was a member, did not want to turn it down, and, therefore, as an accommodation to that bank let it have the money under the circumstances and not because they wanted to lend them the money.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can only say about the bank in the city of Memphis which I have in mind that there is not a more solvent institution in the country. It is one of the great money-making institutions of my State; it has been marvelously successful, and is one of the most stable institutions not only in my State but in the country. However, it had to pay for a portion of its money in interest at that rate in the way I have stated, as much as 12½ per cent, and I do not believe any system or policy that would penalize a bank under such circumstances is exactly right. I do not mean by that to criticize the Federal Reserve Board or the Federal Reserve System because of this injustice as it seems to me, but I am merely calling attention to it with the hope that that particular arrangement will be modified, and the policy corrected by the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. In citing the case from Kansas City to which the Senator has just referred, does he not impliedly criticize the Federal Reserve Board because they granted too great credit to that bank?

Mr. McKELLAR. Not the board; but I imagine that the Federal reserve bank of that district, as the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] intimated a while ago, acted rather unwisely. I would have thought so if I had been a member of the board, and if the institution were in that kind of a condition I would not have agreed to the loan at all.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator pardon me again?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. KING. As I understand the Senator's discussion, he concedes the necessity of member banks maintaining a proper gold reserve?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, of course.

Mr. KING. And he concedes, of course, that loans should not be in excess of sound banking, and that sound banking must be predicated upon a proper gold reserve?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. KING. Now, does not the Senator know that the Federal reserve banks have gone to the extreme in extending credit, so that now in the United States the reserves of many of the banks are below the legal requirement, and, indeed, all of the banks are perilously approaching that condition?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not so understand it. I understand that we are considerably above the limit of a proper gold reserve.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. McKELLAR. I take pleasure in yielding.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Comptroller of the Currency and the governor of the Federal Reserve Board made the statement that there was gold available for the issue of further credit, in addition to that outstanding, of $2,000,000,000. That statement has gone unchallenged; and surely if the Comptroller of the Currency does not know what he is talking about, some of the others that we are alarming so greatly may not know what they are talking about.

Mr. KING. Of course, I am not in a position to challenge the accuracy of the statement of my friend.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is printed, and I think I can get a copy of it and lay it before the Senator. It is contained in an official statement of the Comptroller of the Currency this year, as late as October, as I remember—that there was available in gold reserve a sufficient amount to issue $2,000,000,000 more of circulating securities in addition to those we already have. Now, if the Senator will allow me, I do not think he will contend that the member banks have got to retain the 40 per cent of gold in reserve. There has got to be 40 per cent to redeem outstanding Federal reserve notes of the reserve banks, and yet they can go below that under a tax. The law provides that they may suspend it for 30 days and repeat the suspension if the condition of business justifies it.

Mr. KING. I express no opinion as to the amount of reserve which must be held by the member banks. I should have some doubt about the statement attributed to the Comptroller of the Currency that there was that much gold available upon which to predicate further issues; but that is not the point upon which I want to interrogate the Senator. I want to ask the Senator from Tennessee if it is not a fact that to-day any member of the Federal reserve banking system that has proper reserves, that has not extended and expanded its credits beyond what is safe and sound banking, may go to the Federal reserve banking system and get rediscounts for farm purposes or for any legitimate purposes?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is not my understanding. My understanding is that the Federal reserve banks in the several districts rate the various member banks in those districts, and, for instance, say that bank A in Memphis shall have a line of credit of $2,000,000 at 6 per cent, and then increases the rates on up for additional loans; bank B, a line of credit of $1,500,000 at 6 per cent, and then increases the rates on up for additional loans; but none of them get it for any less than 6 per cent, as I understand, now.

I am not sure that this automatic raising of the interest rates, this very large raising of the interest rates, is the wisest thing to bring about deflation. It seems to me that the better way would be to cut out speculative loans, which could be easily done, and after that is done there will be plenty of money for agricultural and industrial and commercial purposes, which means the business life of our country.

For that reason, Mr. President, I intend to vote for the second provision here as amended, for these reasons: In my judgment it constitutes no criticism of the Federal Reserve Board. This body aided in creating the Federal Reserve Board. Surely we may advise with them; we may give them our views about it. We do not require them to do anything. We merely give them these suggestions. Unless members of the board take the position that on financial matters they are infallible, and that no one else has any right or knowledge on the subject, they will not be offended by what we are honestly and faithfully doing in our service to the people.

It does strike me that under those circumstances it should not be considered by anyone that this is a criticism of the board. I surely do not intend my vote to be a criticism of the board or of the system, because I am one of its stanchest supporters and have been from the beginning. But I shall vote for this resolution because I think it is a wise and proper measure at this time.

Now, Mr. President, I want to refer for just a moment to this proposition in aid of the present situation so far as agriculture is concerned.

I understand that the farm loan act is held up or has been held up for many months by a lawsuit that is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States. Of course, that lawsuit can not be hurried. Nothing can be done until it is decided. It is very unfortunate, it seems to me, that the farm loan act is held up by a lawsuit, but when a lawsuit comes we have to look it squarely in the face and take the consequences. I hope I am not trespassing upon the rights or privileges of a coordinate branch of the Government when I say that I hope that court will soon pass upon the question, because should it be passed upon favorably it will tend very greatly to relieve the present situation. If unfavorable, we might be able speedily to correct it. The farm loan bank is of the greatest advantage to the farmers of my State, and if the system were in operation now it would tend to relieve to a very great extent the conditions which exist in my State and in all the other agricultural States. I do not know whether or not we can do anything with it until that opinion comes in, and it is just one of the things that we will have to wait on. I hope it may come in soon.

Mr. President, I wish to offer here a copy of a report made on the War Finance Corporation amendment filed in March, 1919:

SECTION 9.—AUTHORIZATION OF LOANS BY WAR FINANCE CORPORATION TO ASSIST IN THE EXPORTATION OF DOMESTIC PRODUCTS.

This section authorizes the War Finance Corporation to make loans to exporters and to banks, bankers, and trust companies until one year after the termination of the present war to assist in the exportation of domestic products. Because of exchange conditions, thereby necessitating some of the foreign governments putting restrictions upon our exports to them, as it is claimed, it is believed that this provision will materially help our industries in their production during the transition period and to maintain their export business.

This section authorizes the War Finance Corporation to make advances, for periods not exceeding five years, direct to any exporter engaged in the export business in the United States, if in the opinion of the board of directors of the corporation he is unable to obtain funds upon reasonable terms through banking channels.

Any such advance shall be made only for the purpose of assisting in the exportation of such products, and shall be limited in amount to not more than the contract price therefor, including insurance and carrying or transportation charges to the foreign point of destination if and to the extent that such insurance and carrying or transportation charges are payable in the United States by such exporter to domestic insurers and carriers. The rate of interest charged on any such advance shall not be less than 1 per cent per annum in excess of the rate of discount for 90-day commercial paper prevailing at the time of such advance at the Federal reserve bank of the district in which the borrower is located.

This section also authorizes the corporation to make advances for not to exceed five years to any bank, banker, or trust company in the United States which after this section takes effect makes an advance to any exporter for the purpose of assisting in the exportation of domestic products. Such advances are to be limited to not to exceed the amount remaining unpaid of the advances made by the bank, banker, or trust company to the exporter for the purpose of exporting domestic products.

The corporation can not have outstanding under this section and unpaid at any one time advances in excess of $1,000,000,000.

The corporation at the time of making any advance must require the promissory note or notes of the borrower, together with full and adequate security in each instance by indorsement, guaranty, or otherwise. It shall also retain power to require additional security at any time. Authority is also granted the corporation to extend the time of payment of any advance through renewals or the substitution of any obligations or otherwise, but in no case can it extend the time for payment of the advance beyond five years from the time the advance was originally made.

Under the original act the War Finance Corporation is only authorized to make loans for the purposes set out therein until six months after the termination of the present war. This bill does not change that limitation, but gives the corporation the power to make loans until 12 months after the termination of the war only for the purposes of assisting in the exportation of our domestic products.

In the discussion Friday much emphasis was laid on the fact that under this amendment over $46,000,000 of business had been done up to the time of suspension. This proposition is effectively answered by the following testimony taken from pages 21 and 22 of Mr. Meyer's testimony:

Mr. LAZARO. I was asking whether he considered that the only remedy.

Mr. MEYER. I say it would be one remedy.

Mr. LAZARO. Can you think of any other remedy?

Mr. MEYER. I prefer to answer that question later, if I may. The business we were considering at the time we suspended operation amounted to $100,000,000. Naturally we wanted to issue the corporation's bonds to raise the money, but there was no occasion to do it on account of suspension. For instance, a loan of $8,000,000 was made to a group of banks in various parts of the United States for the purpose of financing cotton exports, and the banks in turn had the security of a syndicate of all the important spinners of Czechoslovakia, guaranteed by the seven largest banks in Czechoslovakia, and the whole indebtedness in turn was guaranteed by the Government of Czechoslovakia.

Under more or less similar arrangements the War Finance Corporation financed the export of $12,000,000 of wheat to Belgium and $5,000,000 of condensed milk to various countries in Europe. At the time that it was requested by the Secretary to suspend financing exports it had applications involving the export of $17,500,000 of copper, $2,200,000 fabricated steel to Italy, $5,000,000 "Black Patch" tobacco from Tennessee and Kentucky, $4,000,000 cotton to Czechoslovakia for a large southern exporter, $25,000,000 cotton to Czechoslovakia for a group of southern bankers, $3,000,000 for cotton to Italy by a group of bankers, $9,000,000 by a group of bankers for export of cotton to Italy, $24,000,000 for the export of cotton by a syndicate of banks headed by one of the largest national banks in the United States, $2,400,000 by a group of bankers for coal to Italy, $4,000,000 by a group of bankers for cotton to Italy, $4,000,000 for ships to be bought or constructed in this country for Italy; in all, $100,000,000 in applications promising practical results with adequate security, according to the opinion of the directors of the War Finance Corporation.

These are not repetitions; they are separate applications, although they sound in some cases the same. In addition to these definite propositions, various other negotiations were under way for further extensive loans which no doubt would have materialized in large financing of exports of various kinds of American products.

Mr. President, I have another matter. I introduced a day or two ago an amendment that I want to offer to amend section 3 of this act. That amendment is very brief. It is as follows:

That factors' paper with cotton or other staple agricultural products as collateral shall be eligible for rediscount in Federal reserve banks.

Mr. President, I offer that now as an amendment. The purpose in offering that amendment is that under the original Federal reserve act I find these words, on page 25, under the powers of the Federal reserve banks. It describes the paper upon which they may lend, and I quote as follows from that page:

Upon the indorsement of any of its member banks, which shall be deemed a waiver of demand, notice and protest by such bank as to its own indorsement exclusively, any Federal reserve bank may discount notes, drafts, and bills of exchange arising out of actual commercial transactions; that is, notes, drafts, and bills of exchange issued or drawn for agricultural, industrial, or commercial purposes, or the proceeds of which have been used, or are to be used, for such purposes, the Federal Reserve Board to have the right to determine or define the character of the paper thus eligible for discount, within the meaning of this act. Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prohibit such notes, drafts, and bills of exchange, secured by staple agricultural products or other goods, wares, or merchandise, from being eligible for such discount; but such definition shall not include notes, drafts, or bills covering merely investments or issued or drawn for the purpose of carrying or trading in stocks, bonds, or other investment securities, except bonds and notes of the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, to my mind that clearly includes what is known as cotton factors' paper. It has been construed to be a part of that power from the passage of the act down until a few months ago, when this deflation process began. That paper of factors has been made, discounted in the bank, and rediscounted in the Federal reserve bank. It is known as commercial paper with bills of lading of cotton attached.

Now I want to explain to the Senate, as I did in part awhile ago, just what that means, and just what that system of bank business is.

Cotton factors usually have the designation of "commission merchants" attached to them; for instance, "W. A. Gage & Co., cotton factors and commission merchants." I will just take them as an illustration. They have been in business for many years, perhaps half a century, in the city of Memphis. In the spring of the year they lend money to the farmers to grow their crops. They lend it to them from time to time, taking mortgages on their crops and such other property as the farmer may have that they regard as good security. They lend the money from time to time as the crop is in the process of being made.

In the summer or at the beginning of the early fall, when the cotton begins to be gathered, they lend more money in order to pay for the gathering of the crop. When it is gathered they have to pay the ginners, and then the marketing of the crops, the hauling of the crops to the city where the factor is located. Now, when that cotton begins to come in in the fall, the factor under this law and under well-established custom has been in the habit of taking the warehouse receipts for the cotton and attaching them to his paper and going to the bank and discounting it for the purpose of loaning that farmer other money to gather and market the remaining portion of the crop. If there ever was a business which came directly within the purview of this act, this cotton factors' business does come within the purview of the act. The cotton under these circumstances is treated by the farmer and the factor substantially as the factor's cotton. Always before he has been able to borrow money on it; and yet the Federal Reserve Board recently singled out this particular business, and said: "We will rediscount no more cotton factors' paper"; that they would only rediscount it when the farmers themselves made the notes and sent them to the factor, and the factor would then indorse the notes, and they must have the indorsement of the farmers.

That is an impracticable business. It can not be done in more than a very few cases; and the result has been that this great line of business, which has probably been instrumental in producing the greater part of the cotton crop, has just been denied credit at the banks. That is what it means.

Under those circumstances, I do not think it is a criticism upon our part at all, but that it is merely expressing our view to the board, to say that this particular paper is eligible for discount and should be eligible.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. The trouble about that is this, is it not: How are you going to determine what interest the factor has in that cotton? It does not belong to him, except to the extent of the advancement he has made. You would have to safeguard that in some way, would you not?

Mr. McKELLAR. That could be safeguarded without any trouble. It has been safeguarded through all the generations. I know it was a common practice when I was a boy, because I was a farmer, and borrowed money in that way; and it has been a practice ever since, to my certain knowledge. There never has been the slightest question made by the Federal reserve bank until this system of deflation began.

Under those circumstances, it seems to me it was an unwise proceeding; and, with all due respect to the Federal Reserve Board, I think it is an unwise proceeding that a start should be made upon the men who deal with the farmer and who aid him in producing his crops. The farmer should have every facility for obtaining money when his security is good.

Mr. President, the result of this holding has been that cotton factors have either been injured and their customers, or many of them, ruined, or they have been forced to sell their cotton for anything they could get for it in order to obtain the money to pay back the loans that had already been made. The holding of the board has constituted an unlawful invasion of the rights of one class of our citizens. It has had a most depressing effect upon the price of cotton, and it has forced into great distress many institutions and individuals who have furnished the moneys to produce, gather, gin, and market these cottons, and the farmers for whom they acted have been greatly injured.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DIAL. I think these people should be allowed to borrow to the extent that they have advanced money; but the law in the Senator's State perhaps would not allow them to borrow on the margin that did not belong to them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, no direction is given in my amendment. It merely says that that paper shall be eligible for rediscount; that is all; and it seems to me that unless we want to single out one of the great aids to production in this country and say that it shall not be entitled to credits, after the Federal reserve act specifically gives them the right, it ought to be done. That is the way it seems to me, and I hope the Senate will look at it in the same way and agree to the amendment.

The amendment I have offered is as follows:

That factors' paper, with cotton or other staple agricultural products as collateral, shall be eligible for rediscount in Federal reserve banks.

Mr. President, I do not desire to take the time of the Senate further. I merely ask that my amendment be voted on at the proper time. I also ask unanimous consent to make a part of my remarks a resolution from the Tennessee Cotton Seed Crushers' Association and certain letters referring to the subject under discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). Without objection, permission is granted. The Chair hears no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MEMPHIS, TENN., December 4, 1920.

Senator KENNETH MCKELLAR,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, as well as virtually all the other cotton factors in this city, were caught with a large stock of last season's discolored cotton, a very small percentage of which was considered bollies, or real low cotton; therefore most of this cotton would be classed as from low middling to strict middling, much of which is only slightly discolored by the weather.

It is true that we had a little demand for this kind of cotton even up until this fall, and the buyer was able to fill his orders at most any price which he might offer; therefore we hardly see how we could be blamed for the carry-over.

This fall's receipts began to sell for about 22 cents on our market, and down now to 15 cents and 15½ cents for pretty white cotton; off grades are selling for 8 to 12 cents, and cotton seed are selling for $20 a ton.

At these prices you must know that the merchants and cotton factors' collections for advances to make this crop would be extremely small—seldom more than 25 to 50 per cent, and in many cases even nothing after the rent is paid, and in most all cases their only security are mules, wagons, and farming implements, which, if forced on the market, would not bring 25 per cent of their value the first of this year.

We will admit that our banks are helping us carry over the large stock of old cotton, but are continually calling for a margin as the price declines, for which we could not complain, and are continuing to put up as long as we have any security, which is now about exhausted.

It is hard to get in more of this year's crop than barely enough to pay the interest on renewals and rents, and consequently we are gradually bleeding to death.

It might have been necessary for the Federal reserve banks to have increased the rate of interest in order to have stopped the inflation, but it does seem that the thing has gone far enough, and that they could afford to reduce their rate so that our banks and trust companies could lighten up on their interest; a few exceptions, however, but we are still paying on very many of our loans from 7 to 8 per cent.

We know that you are interested in our behalf, and hope that you Senators will have no trouble in having something done for our relief, such as the reestablishment of the War Finance Board, and even more than this, if possible. We need immediate relief; I do not see how we can wait until after next March.

If there is not a market opened up for our product somewhere and better prices obtained soon, the wreck to the most conservative business men of the South will be terrible.

Hoping that you appreciate the situation and will lose no time and spare no effort on your part in securing relief.

We beg to remain,

GEO. T. WEBB & CO.,
By GEO. T. WEBB.

PHOENIX COTTON OIL CO.,
Dyersburg, Tenn., December 3, 1920.

Hon. K. MCKELLAR,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: This is to advise that a large number of the managers of the cottonseed oil mills from all the Southern States met in conference in New Orleans to discuss the serious conditions of their trade, due to the general business and industrial depressions and lack of an export outlet for products.

It was the sense of the meeting that present prices of cotton seed and cottonseed products are much below the cost of production. Many oil mills have already closed and others are forced to consider taking similar action.

In an effort to relieve the present deplorable situation, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas the economic condition of the United States of America to-day is sound, but due to contraction of credit and absence of exports there is much distress to agriculture, labor, and commercial interests, with general stagnation of business; and

Whereas the welfare of the entire agricultural and industrial life of the country is seriously threatened by the low prices that now prevail for all farm products, which prices mean irreparable loss to the producer; and

Whereas the edible oil mills of the United States, which convert the raw material into finished products and distribute them in this country and abroad, should continue to operate in order to provide a ready market to the farmers for their products at fair and remunerative prices and to assure the necessary supply of edible oils, fats, cattle feed, and fertilizers to the country; and

Whereas the representatives of the edible oil milling industry of the United States at a called meeting held at New Orleans this 29th day of November, 1920, having carefully discussed all phases of the situation, do therefore Resolve, That the Congress of the United States be urged to proceed in the proper but the most direct way immediately on being convened in December to direct the following departments of the Government to perform those duties for which they were created, to wit:

First. That the Secretary of the Treasury restore the War Finance Corporation immediately and to restore to that corporation the assets it possessed previous to its disbandment.

Second. That the Shipping Board reduce all ocean freight rates to conform to conditions now existing and to extend every available assistance to American exports.

Third. That the Federal Reserve Board be urged to reduce its discount rates and extend credits in the present emergency.

Fourth. That the Department of Commerce be directed to use every facility of the Government to assist in marketing the surplus agricultural and industrial products of this country at home and in foreign countries.

Your efforts in helping to relieve the condition will be appreciated.

Yours, very truly,

D. W. MESS.

TENNESSEE BRICK & TILE CO. (INC.),
Dyersburg, Tenn., December 1, 1920.

Senator K. MCKELLAR,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am quite sure you to some extent are familiar with the general financial conditions of your people, but am of the opinion that it is even more serious than you have yet realized; therefore urge you to use your influence in the Senate to give us some relief.

All classes of business are embarrassed financially to the capacity, including jobbers, manufacturers, retail merchants, and farmers, none of them being able to meet debts due, much less those soon to mature.

I have had experience as an office man and manager of business for over 30 years, passing through panics of 1893, 1903, 1907, and 1914, and have never experienced anything to equal this.

There is a feeling among the more intelligent class that this could have been avoided by the Federal reserve bank not deflating the currency to so great an extent and the continuance of the War Finance Corporation.

There is a general hope that when Congress reconvenes they will demand that the War Finance Corporation shall again be made to function and that Congress will demand that the Federal reserve bank lower the rates of interest, so as to save the business interests of this country from bankruptcy.

Knowing that you are deeply interested in the welfare of your people and desire to serve them in a way most acceptable to them, will say that I know a Congressman or Senator that will put forth his best efforts along this line will be greatly appreciated.

Assuring you that I appreciate your past record as a representative and feeling confident that you are willing to accept advice from your constituent and that you will do all you can to relieve things, I am,

Yours, very truly,

C. C. MOSS,
Secretary for Above-named Company,
President and Manager Baker-Watkins Supply Co.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I will detain the Senate but a few moments. I am decidedly in favor of this joint resolution, Mr. President, but there has been so much said about it already that I shall not attempt to analyze it further. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is entirely satisfactory to me. I believe it puts the second section of the joint resolution in better form, and I shall gladly support it.

I wish first to read a telegram from the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, dated New Orleans, La., December 8, and addressed to me here:

The New Orleans Cotton Exchange earnestly requests your assistance in bringing about such action through executive or legislative intervention as will accomplish the reinstatement of the War Finance Corporation for relief and restoration of commerce to normal lines. We are not asking governmental assistance to hold cotton or other produce for speculative purposes or to force higher prices upon consumers who have equal rights with trade and producing interests. We contend, however, that justice and equity demand that the National Government, which financed trade movements for foreign nations during the war to the extent of many billions of dollars, should aid in fostering and clearing the channels of American trade sufficiently to enable us to sell to others and to enable others to buy from us the produce which is clogging our trade avenues. If the people are to continue payment of taxes for the support of the Government and liquidation of interest on our national debt they can only do so through the maintenance of trade relations which have been rudely shattered by the course of foreign exchange and the drastic collapse of values of all kinds. The problem which confronts us is beyond the ability of individual enterprise, calling for joint action which can only be secured through Government intervention. We ask that intervention for the restoration of normal conditions through which production may be maintained on natural lines and values may reach a proper level based upon a world-wide law of supply and demand. We are convinced that only by such means may the interests of the Nation as a whole be subserved, and producers and consumers, employers and employees, be placed upon a just and equitable level. The South is nobly stemming the tide of adverse conditions. We ask only that the War Finance Corporation clear the obstructions from our trade. We will do the rest.

EDW. S. BUTLER, President.

Mr. President, the people of New Orelans to whom I have talked—the merchants, bankers, cotton men, and business men generally—believe that very great assistance in the marketing of cotton, the great crop of the South, will be given by the revival of the War Finance Corporation. Personally, I am very strongly of that opinion. I sincerely hope that Congress is going to pass, and pass quickly, the joint resolution providing for the revival of the War Finance Corporation, and expressing our opinion, as set forth in its second section, that the Federal Reserve Board should do everything possible to extend additional credits and lend money at cheaper rates if that extension of additional credits and cheaper money be consistent with sound banking; and that is as far as the joint resolution goes.

Mr. President and Senators, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a very important proposition which has not been touched on here very much. The United States raises the principal portion of the cotton crop of the world. Fully two-thirds of the cotton of the world is produced in America. I know personally, because I am a cotton grower, that the present price of cotton is at least 50 per cent below the actual cost of production. On my own plantation I am sure that every pound of cotton raised by me this year costs me 60 per cent more than I could now sell it for.

Had it not been for the high prices prevailing for cotton during 1917, 1918, and 1919, there would be very great distress in the cotton sections of the South. The people of the South made a great deal of money last year and the year before. They were very prosperous when the year 1920 was ushered in. But their money has been spent. Never was there so expensive a crop as that of the current year. Wages were higher, foodstuffs of every kind for man and beast were higher, farming implements of every kind were higher. The crop was very, very expensive, and now it is selling away below the cost of production.

Mr. President and Senators, if we do not get something like an approach to the cost of producing this crop, what is going to happen to the next crop? What will happen to the world if we do not succeed in making at least a reasonable crop of cotton next year? We must, as Senators, look farther than the ends of our own noses in considering a great question of this kind. We must look not only to the marketing of the crop of the current year, but to the production of the crop of 1921; and I say to you, sirs, in the most solemn manner, that in my judgment, unless some provision be made for the orderly marketing of this cotton—I am speaking particularly of cotton—at a price at least approaching its cost, the people of the South will not be financially able to make another crop. It is not what they would like to do, Senators, it is what they will be able to do.

There is no farm crop with which I am familiar—and I have been farming more or less all my life—that is anything like so expensive as cotton. I have heard it said frequently that it takes 13 months in a year to make a crop of cotton. I have myself often seen people picking in the fields the crop of the previous year when plowing the lands to begin the crop of the current year.

Cotton is a very expensive crop to make. It is made almost entirely by hand labor. Machinery helps very little in making the crop. You can plant it by machinery; you can break up the land by machinery; but when that is done you have told the whole story. You have to cultivate it by hand labor. You have to harvest it by hand labor.

Where the money will come from to make another crop I do not know. The banks are already loaded up. The commission merchants are loaded up. The farmers have spent what money they had, and they can not sell the crop they have now, even at the ridiculously low price at which it is quoted.

I think one of the functions of government, Senators, is to assist its citizens to find markets for their products; I do not say now, mind you, to find high-priced markets, but find markets for their products.

We have no markets now. You can not sell the cotton of the South. Even at the present quotation in the New Orleans market of 14¾ cents for middling cotton you can not sell it. I do not know what price would force it to sell. If it were put down to 9 or 10 cents a pound, speculators might be found who would buy it. But the mills are holding off from the market; they are paying no attention to it and buying only in very small quantities.

Let me read to Senators a very helpful article appearing in the Baltimore Manufacturers' Record of December 2, quoting from a great English spinner—mind you, an English spinner—located in England. He is a man who consumes the cotton of the South, and he tells the southern farmers to "hold on to their cotton like grim death." It is surprising for an English spinner to say that. I read just a few lines from this very able editorial on page 117 of the Record:

Some weeks ago we mailed to every cotton mill in America and to leading mills in Europe a pamphlet entitled "A Plea for the Cotton Growers of the South," in which are set forth some facts in regard to the cost of cotton raising and to the economic slavery in which the South lived for many years by reason of the low price for cotton. T. Haythornthwaite & Sons (Ltd.), English cotton manufacturers of Burnley, writing under date of November 8 to the Manufacturers' Record, say:

"We have received your booklet entitled 'A Plea for the Cotton Growers of the South,' dated September 9, 1920, and our Mr. W. Haythornthwaite has read it through several times with very great interest.

"The statement which you make and the information given is something entirely new so far as Lancashire cotton-cloth manufacturers are concerned.

"We have felt, like yourselves, the disability obtaining when buyers persistently hold off, and we have found that whenever the price of cotton shows a consistent rise from a low level to a high level the buyers of cotton and all the various kinds of textile goods from all over the world become very anxious to secure their season's supplies.

That is what they are doing now. The buyers of America and the buyers of England and the buyers of all the world are holding off. We can not sell our cotton because there are no buyers for it. The article continues:

"We can quite believe that the price of cotton shows a loss to the grower, and we are of the opinion that trade will not revive until the raw cotton begins to lift its head from the present very low levels.

"We are of the opinion that all the markets of the world require cotton goods in very large quantities, and we also believe they will not purchase until a rising market is in operation.

"Our experience has always shown that to have a large volume of trade confidence in the stability of prices must obtain.

"In February of this year cotton was quoted in Liverpool at 28.40d.; to-day the quotation is 14.50d., and in view of the rate of exchange the price, we consider, is very cheap.

"The solution to the whole position rests with your people as to their ability to hold the goods (cotton). Our advice is 'hold on like grim death.'

"Will you please forward us the average cost of growing cotton at your convenience?"

Here is an admission by one of the important cotton manufacturing concerns of England that it has been heretofore wholly ignorant in regard to the question of the cost of cotton growing in the South and the conditions under which the farmers of this section have had to live during the last 50 years by reason of the poverty prices of cotton. They take the very proper view of the situation that on a falling market people will not buy cotton goods, and that, though the markets of the world need vast quantities of cotton goods, they will not be purchased until there is a rising market.

Then follows a further most interesting discussion by this paper, which I will not take the time of the Senate to read.

Mr. President, the people of the South are going to hold on to their cotton until they can get some one to buy it. They can not make people come and buy it. They are obliged to hold on until some markets are open to them. The mills in this country are living from hand to mouth, manufacturing no more than they are absolutely obliged to manufacture to keep up with their orders; the mills of the Old World are buying practically none; and unless some help can be given for the orderly marketing of the cotton, not holding it for high prices, but the orderly, businesslike, sane marketing, during the course of the next six or eight months I predict, sirs, that there will be very little cotton made next year—not because the people do not wish to make it.

Speaking of myself, I do not know what else to make on my plantation but cotton, and I am in the same situation as many others. I would like to make it, but how am I going to furnish bread, meat, clothes, shoes, seed, and feed for live stock for all the people who live on my property and depend on me for everything unless I can get a little something for the cotton which I made this year and which is now locked up in a warehouse in New Orleans? It has not been sold, and if I were to try to sell it to-day I could not find a purchaser. You must help me and all others to market their cotton in an orderly way.

Is there any reason why a crop which takes 12 months to make should be marketed in 3 months? If we are working at it hard for 12 months in the making, why should we not market it during a period of 12 months? Yet the old rule has been to rush the cotton onto the market and force a sale of it within three months. There is no business sense in that.

All that the joint resolution looks to, and all that it expects to accomplish, is that we will assist export corporations, formed under the provisions of the Edge law, to export, in an orderly way, in a gradual way, the cotton of this country.

I hope that it is going to go up some in price; I sincerely hope so, but whether it goes up or not, when a demand comes from the countries of the Old World, when we have export corporations created and assist them in their financing by the War Finance Corporation, taking securities of the Old World, we will begin to ship the cotton. We will gradually get rid of it, and then we will have a little money with which to make and gather a new crop. I tell you, Senators, this question before you is a serious matter for the United States and for the world, in so far as it relates to cotton.

Now, just this thought to wheat and meat growing sections of the country. The South has not been a very large producer of meats nor of wheat. It has furnished one of the very best markets that the people of the West, the meat and wheat growing sections, have. I have often heard it said that the southern man raised the cotton, and that he had his storehouse or warehouse in the North and the West. There he goes for his oats, his wheat, his meats of every kind. To some extent the South is getting out of that position; to some extent it has been raising its own corn, its own wheat, its own oats, its own meat. Unless we get some help in handling our cotton, and continue to raise cotton, those of us who continue to live on the farms will devote a very large percentage of our ground to foodstuffs of every kind and sort. We will be compelled to do that. It costs much less to plant land in corn, oats, or hay for pasture and grazing hogs, sheep, and cattle than it does to plant it in cotton. One farmer can handle 40 or 50 acres in oats, corn, or hay, but he can not cultivate and harvest more than 10 acres in cotton in the Mississippi Valley, where I live, to save his life, and his wife and children have to help him then.

So, you see, unless we can get some help we are going to turn to other things—the things which have been engaging the farmers of the North and West—and our people, who have been their best customers, will become their competitors, as we will raise more of these things than we need for home consumption.

This question interests all of us. There is a selfish interest in it. We of the South are interested just as much as you of the North and West are to see you get a good price for your wheat and meat, and you are interested to see us get a good living price, and no more than a living price, for our cotton. Senators, this is a matter of very great importance. I earnestly hope that without further delay the Senate will adopt the joint resolution.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I did not intend to take part in the debate upon this very important and meritorious measure. I, with other Senators, was willing to remain silent in order to end the debate as soon as possible and pass the joint resolution, which we believe will carry a large measure of relief to the distressed farmers of the South and West.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] referred to the testimony given by Gov. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and quoted him as saying that farmers of the South were trying to borrow money to enable them to hold cotton that they had been carrying for two and three years. I can not allow that statement to go unchallenged. The facts do not warrant anyone in saying that any considerable number of farmers are carrying cotton produced two years or even one year ago. I do not want the impression to prevail here or elsewhere that our farmers, merchants, and bankers, who are honestly and sincerely seeking financial aid in the marketing of this cotton crop so as to prevent tremendous losses are trying to deceive the public or work a "skin game" on the Government.

I do not know of but one farmer in Alabama who has on hand now any of the cotton crop produced in 1919, and he has only about 15 bales. I have only heard of three farmers in all of the cotton belt who still have some of the cotton produced in 1919. The fact is that crop has been consumed.

Mr. President, while I regard the Federal Reserve System as the greatest banking system ever written, I must say that, in my judgment, the Federal Reserve Board made a grave mistake in undertaking to bring about deflation as rapidly as it has.

We are now in the aftermath of a great World War, and in order to prevent disastrous losses in the business of agriculture and commerce, deflation must be brought about slowly and in an orderly way. The matter of deflation can not be accomplished in a brief period of time without producing disastrous results to the agricultural industry and other industries in the country.

Mr. President, I am anxious to reach a vote on the pending measure as soon as possible. I feel that there are Senators enough here favorable to this legislation to secure its passage, and I shall refrain from making any lengthy observations at this time. Quick action is what is needed now. Delay is dangerous.

To unnecessarily prolong the debate in the face of the urgent, crying need of legislative action would present a situation like unto one presented where a dwelling house is on fire and the inmates are crying for aid, and the fire engine is needed and ready to be used in extinguishing the flames, and some one should appear upon the scene and say that while he favored bringing out the fire engine and also favored extinguishing the flames he desired to submit a few observations as to how the engine should be brought out and how it should be used after it was brought out. The house would burn down in the meantime.

There are Senators here who, I am sure, do not understand the distressing condition of the farmers of the South and West. If they did understand the situation just as it is, I do not believe that there would be any hesitancy on the part of anyone in this Chamber in coming quickly to the relief of the farmers of our country.

Gov. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, is quoted as having said in a speech out in Indiana the other day that if the "farmers would be patient prices would adjust themselves." Mr. President, I am reminded of an experience that I had as a boy. In company with other small boys, we found an ox who had fallen into a bed of quicksand and he was trying his best to get out. Instead of going after somebody to get the ox out we stood and looked on while the ox and sand adjusted themselves. They did adjust themselves, but when the period of adjustment was ended the ox was dead. If Congress refuses to go to the aid of the farmer in this hour of his great distress and the prices of farm products are left to adjust themselves, the farmers of the South and West will be swallowed up in the quicksand of bankruptcy and ruin.

There is money in great abundance in the country, and it is the duty of the Government at a time like this to do the thing necessary to bring it out of its hiding place. If the interest rates are raised upon the people in the cotton-growing States, as was the case, from 4½ to 7 per cent, and the margin of profit was so small that banks were unable to handle the cotton, as they did when the rate of interest was, as in 1919, 4½ per cent, and because of that situation money went to New York, where the rate of interest on call money was more inviting, then it is the duty of Congress to direct the Federal Reserve Board to do the thing necessary to bring relief to the great agricultural industry of the country.

But, Mr. President, the suggestion is made that we ought not to instruct or direct the Federal Reserve Board as to just what we desire done to relieve agriculture at this critical time. Why not? Senators in this body voted for a bill which directed the Interstate Commerce Commission to permit the railroads to make 5½ per cent upon their investment, but when we undertake to get money for the farmer at a reasonable rate of interest in order to save him from financial ruin we are warned against the danger of such a course and told that we are undertaking to pass a piece of class legislation. I would remind Senators that the Interstate Commerce Commission has jurisdiction over pipe lines and other agencies of transportation and yet the Senate did not name a single one of them, but specifically pointed out in a bill that passed both branches of Congress that the Interstate Commerce Commission should permit the railroads to make 5½ or 6 per cent upon the money that they had invested.

Why are we not justified to-day in this body in directing the Federal Reserve Board to go directly to the rescue of farmers who are selling their products at prices far below the cost of production? Why not direct that board to give special attention and immediate relief so far as possible to a condition so desperate as that which confronts farmer, merchant, and banker in the agricultural regions of our country? There is testimony in the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to the effect that farmers in the West are selling their corn 44 cents per bushel below cost of production. Let me say just here that cotton at 15 cents a pound, the price now quoted, is 15 cents a pound below the cost of production. Do you think that it is fair and right to permit the farmers of the South and West to bear the brunt of all this slump in the price of their products? Do you not think it fair and just that we should recognize the fact that this dreadful and disastrous condition was brought about not by our farmers but by war?

All admit that the conditions from which they suffer were produced by a war for which they were in no ways responsible, Mr. President, but their boys had a great deal to do with putting that war down, and some of those boys sleep in France, where the poppies grow, and to-day their surviving comrades in the South and West are calling upon the great Government whose flag they followed when the life of the Nation was imperiled to see to it that the evil effects of that war shall not destroy the peace of mind and property of those they love. I went to New York a few days ago, making some inquiries into the cotton situation. I went upon the floor of the New York Cotton Exchange, and I saw them selling cotton down and down. A gentleman told me that Great Britain speculators in Liverpool were selling our market short, selling thousands and thousands of bales for the purpose of beating down the price of cotton so that they could get it and sell it to Germany for more than a dollar a pound in German money.

Is the American cotton producer to be pillaged and plundered in this fashion by cotton speculators in a foreign country while our own Government sits by and winks at the gruesome game? Senators, in 1919 our farmers received 40 cents a pound for cotton. The price was driven down in a few days to 30 cents a pound. Do you know how much loss the cotton farmers sustained on a 10,000,000-bale crop when the price fell from 40 cents to 30? It was a loss of $500,000,000 for the farmers in seven States to sustain. The manipulators did not stop at reducing the price to 30 cents, they broke it to 20 cents, and if cotton had been sold at that price our farmers would have lost $1,000,000,000. They did not stop there, they beat the price down to 15 cents, and that represented a loss of $1,250,000,000 which the farmers of the South would sustain if forced to sell at the ruinous prices now obtaining. Do you wonder that these farmers are crying out for deliverance from conditions that mean their undoing.

The grain growers of the West are suffering in much the same fashion. They owe money and those to whom they owe it are asking that their debts be paid. If they are forced to pay with produce selling under the cost of production they suffer tremendous financial losses.

Then what will happen? I will tell you what will happen in the case of cotton. Cotton is just as certain to go back to a price above 30 cents as we live and God reigns, because the farmers are not going to sell it at the low, destructive prices now being offered. As the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] has said, they are going to hold it. When they hold it the spinner at home and abroad has got to have it, sooner or later. The supply of both is nearly exhausted, and when they are forced to come into the spot market and buy the price is bound to advance.

What is happening? Suppose the farmer should have to sell this cotton now; what would he see later on? He would see the speculator who bought it at 15 cents a pound sell it in 90 days, maybe, for 30 cents and above. Why not aid him in obtaining a profitable price?

I wish to remind the Senators from the West—and they are supporting this measure very heartily, I am glad to say—that we buy mules from your people, and for the last year or two we have paid you $300 each for plow mules. If the price of cotton is beaten down to around 12 or 15 cents a pound, we shall not make 6,000,000 bales next year, and the price of mules will be less than $100, or around $100 each. So by destroying the purchasing power of the cotton producer you injure the mule business of the West. We buy meat from the West; we buy grain from the West; and it is hurting the people who produce mules, grain, and meat when we cut down the purchasing power and the debt-paying power of the South. That is not all.

The automobile business is hurt in the South, and every other business is hurt because the farmer, merchant, and banker are tied up hard and fast on account of the low price of cotton.

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] told the Senate of the situation that he found in his recent tour through the South and West. He said that this call for the revival of the activities of the War Finance Board does not come merely from farmers, but comes from merchants, bankers, and business men.

Senators, I think that the psychological effect of the passage of the pending joint resolution will simply be marvelous. With $500,000,000 of capital to start with, and the ability to issue $3,000,000,000 more on top of that, the resumption of the functions of the War Finance Corporation is going to have a marvelous effect. What will it do? The men who are hiding their money in order to hold back until the price of cotton gets to the ground and the price of grain gets down to the ground and then buy it and hold on and make hundreds of millions of dollars will say, "Unlock that vault and let that money come out; these people can get money from the Government; they can get it from the War Finance Board, and we had better get back into the market." And they will. So we will have that aid.

Why not let it go out to the country that we have not only revived the War Finance Corporation but that we have instructed the Federal Reserve Board to lend all encouragement and aid possible to the farmers? I think that we need such a provision in the joint resolution, because the impression has gone forth that the Federal Reserve Board has been asking for the curtailment of credit. Why did we put into the law that the Interstate Commerce Commission should permit the railroads—naming them—to make 5½ per cent upon their investment? Is it any more unfair or unjust to name the interest of the farmers than it was to name the railroads? One of them constitutes the great arteries of commerce and the other produces that which feeds and clothes the world.

What are we to do? In one of the orders issued by the Federal Reserve Board in one of the districts they said, "It is the business of this board to control credits and the volume of currency." What does that mean? It means the power of life and death over the money supply and credit of the country. If it is being so controlled that it is not flowing properly, and where it ought to go, what is the duty of this Government in the premises? It is to direct where money shall flow to prevent great financial losses to the people who need aid at a time like this.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have a letter from Beach, in my State, upon this particular subject; and as the writer is a farmer himself, and suggests several remedies that ought to be applied in this case, I shall ask that it be read by the Secretary. I have already spoken upon this subject, and do not wish to take up further time.

This writer suggests four remedial propositions. The first is the prohibition of fictitious sales; the second, the extension of farm credits by the Federal reserve banks; the third is an immediate embargo upon the importation of Canadian wheat; and the fourth is the strengthening of the Federal land bank law, and the elimination of the red-tape requirements of that law.

The last speaker on this subject has stated that he would be glad to stand with the West upon any proposition that will be helpful. The most important thing that is suggested in this connection is the matter of prohibiting importations for some time. Any law of that kind would not affect cotton, to be sure. There are no imports of cotton, and therefore any embargo against the importation of cotton would not affect us in the least.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a correction? We imported 690,000 bales of cotton last year.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; there is a little Egyptian cotton imported.

Mr. RANSDELL. May I be permitted to say that 690,000 bales is not a little.

Mr. McCUMBER. Comparatively, there is only a very little. In this instance, however, it has not been asked, but in the farmer's instance it is asked. Our complete remedy is in the embargo proposition. There were loaded, I think, half a dozen ships at Port Arthur only the other day to haul millions of bushels of grain from Canada over to Buffalo; and at the same time that these Senators are advocating some method to export our grain, Canadian grain is coming into this country in these unprecedented quantities. I suggest again that we had better stop the importations before we seek to provide some method by which we can export the same number of bushels that we are importing.

We only raise in the United States annually about 750,000,000 bushels of wheat, just a little more than is necessary to feed the American public for one year. If we will give the farmers who raise that wheat the American market for one year, I think the subject will very nearly settle itself; but if to the little surplus that we would have to sell abroad we are to add in the year all of Canada's surplus, amounting to about 150,000,000 bushels, we shall have a more difficult task before us.

So I may have, before I get through here, an opportunity to ask the Senator from Alabama to join with us in an effective remedy. I shall vote for this measure, because I think it may do some good. I should equally vote for every one of the propositions contained in this letter, because I believe that each one has some merit and all of them together might produce the result needed.

I ask that the letter may be read from the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

BEACH, N. DAK., December 7, 1920.

Hon. P. J. McCUMBER,
United States Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

SIR: As a farmer I desire to call your attention to some things of which you are well aware and in which all farmers are vitally interested.

The recent tremendous fall in the price of wheat to $1.17 on the local market here when the actual cost of producing wheat in my case was about $2.50 per bushel, and I know that the cost of production in my case was much lower than most of the farmers in this part of the State. From all I can learn there was nothing to justify the price of wheat ranging as low as it did. Authorities are all agreed that there is a great shortage of wheat in the world to-day, and yet notwithstanding this the farmers of this country are compelled to produce their wheat at a tremendous loss. We can not expect the farming interests to prosper under these conditions; in fact, if they continue the farming industry in this country will be destroyed. Now, it seems to me that this is a national question and one that ought to be dealt with by the National Congress.

As a first remedy it is pretty well-nigh the unanimous opinion of the farmers of the country that the present practices of speculation on the boards of trade ought to be abolished; that fictitious sales of wheat when no delivery of the same is intended should be prohibited absolutely.

Another thing that would help is a more liberal extension of farm credits by the Federal reserve banks. The present attitude of those in control of these banks is to ignore the demands of the farmers, and put all available money at the disposal of the speculators in the great eastern centers. The Federal reserve banks of North Dakota have absolutely failed to assist the farmers in any manner. The farming industry is entitled to credit when backed by good security just as much as any other industry, and in its present condition it needs the aid of that credit if it is not to be ruined.

Provision should be made for the immediate shutting out of Canadian wheat when conditions arise such as we have just passed through.

The present Federal land bank law should be strengthened so that loans could be made to farmers with less red tape than under the present law. This law should be put in such shape that a man without land and without money, but with a knowledge of farming should be enabled to acquire a farm at a low rate of interest and covering a long period of time. The present tendency of the farming industry is to drive the farmers off the land. We want legislation that will encourage those who are on the land to continue to stay there and to enable others to acquire farms. The farmers of the country are united in their support of the principle underlying the present land bank, but they want the functions of this bank enlarged.

I hope that you will give the above matters your earnest attention, and if there is anything I can do toward aiding you in bringing about better farming conditions I will gladly do so.

Yours, respectfully, CONRAD FAKLER.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the other day when the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] was addressing the Senate I interrupted him and referred to an experience I had in the West and South during the month of November.

Mr. President, I am chairman of a subcommittee of the Senate which is making a nation-wide inquiry relative to housing conditions in the Nation and matters pertaining to housing. Our committee took it upon themselves, however, when we discovered the great business depression about the country, to inquire into the general business situation. Wherever we went we inquired of the bankers, merchants, and farmers just what they thought would bring the greatest relief in this emergency. It is contended everywhere that although this country now has a surplus supply and Europe an unfilled demand the law of supply and demand has been set aside through the breaking down of the medium of credit exchange.

I am going to read some extracts from the statements made to our committee in its examination of conditions throughout the West and South—the statements of some of the leading men of affairs in the part of the country we visited.

Mr. James B. Forgan, chairman of the board of directors of the First National Bank of Chicago, Ill., and perhaps one of the greatest bankers in the country, said this:

I was in accord with the action of the Secretary of the Treasury in suspending the War Finance Corporation, but due to changed conditions it might be helpful to resume. It would be too bad not to adopt every facility we have to help out at the present time.

Mr. Henry G. Wallace, editor, of Des Moines, Iowa, one of the best-informed agricultural writers of the country, says:

Revival of the War Finance Corporation would relieve the situation as to meat and farm products.

Mr. B. F. Kaufman, president of the Bankers' Trust Co. of Des Moines, Iowa, said:

Some system of establishing credits so that foreign nations could buy would assist us in solving the wheat problem. Bankrupt countries can not buy our commodities unless we extend them credit. I believe that there is 10,000,000 bushels visible supply of corn now as compared with 4,000,000 visible supply a year ago.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. CALDER. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. If it will not interrupt the Senator, following the opinion the Senator has just read as to the large supply of wheat which could be sold abroad, if we reestablish the War Finance Corporation for the purpose, as is frequently expressed, of extending credit in order to finance the purchasing abroad of wheat and to increase the price in order to meet the situation, as it is frequently described, that at the present prices the farmers will lose so much money that they can not afford to sell, and with the importation of wheat, now thoroughly understood, from Canada at lower prices, how could it be possible to help export or sell this American wheat in the face of that situation if we had 50 finance corporations?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from New Jersey, I do not see how it is possible for us to sell high-priced wheat in Europe just now, no matter how many war finance corporations we have and how we permit them to extend credits for foreign financing. I do believe, Mr. President, that with the demand for wheat undoubtedly existing in Europe, if we read aright the newspapers, at the low price at which wheat is selling now it would be possible for us to finance its exportation.

Mr. EDGE. I am rather inclined to agree with the Senator. Then that will not solve the problem we hear and read so much about, that at present prices the grain farmers will be ruined and that this particular legislation will solve this problem and raise prices.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I have no idea that this legislation is going to raise prices. I believe it is going to provide facilities for farmers and manufacturers in this country to get rid of their products at the present market prices. We were told in the West by many men that there was a foreign market, but they had no credit by which they could bring their goods to that market. We have been talking in this Chamber for months against high prices, and I knew, too, that the condition of affairs now apparent throughout the country was bound to come, and I am not sorry it is here. We had to have this deflation, and had to have this lowering of prices, and the business men and the farmers of the country have to make up their minds to take their losses.

But, Mr. President, if it is possible anyhow, any place, anywhere to afford an opportunity to dispose of the crops and the products of the factory at the present prices, then let us do it by all means, and give us an opportunity next spring to resume business again.

Now, Mr. President, referring again to what Mr. Kaufman, president of the Bankers' Trust Co. of Des Moines, said:

I think it would be helpful if there were some system by which the Government through a revolving fund could help foreign nations establish credits. I think loans to American banks through the War Finance Corporation would be advisable at this time and would be helpful in the movement of American products, and that it is more desirable than attempting to finance commodities in warehouses in this country.

That is in line with the contention of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE].

Mr. Albert A. Reed, vice president of the United States National Bank of Denver, said:

Little or no progress has been made in our efforts to reduce the volume of credits. There is no margin of credit available for investment in fixed capital. The chief causes for our inability to reduce loans are the collapse of the wool market, the shortage of grain cars in August and September, the reluctance of farmers to market their grain at prevailing prices, the decline in prices of live stock, etc. Anything that would increase the orderly marketing of farm products or mineral products or any other American products would increase the prosperity of the entire country and would be reflected here.

Mr. Flower, president of the Fidelity National Bank & Trust Co., of Kansas City, said:

We have had a very acute financial situation in Kansas City for the last six months, and it is not through yet. It started in last spring at the time the Grain Corporation withdrew its heavy deposits which they had in the national banks of this city, totaling some $27,000,000. The banks were not able to liquidate as fast as the withdrawals were made. Since that time we have had to finance the wheat crop, and when it came to disposing of the wheat crop, which is the big ready money in this section, the car shortage was felt, and when we got cars the prices kept dropping down and the farmers refused to sell. The country banker has carried his farmer who has withdrawn his deposits, and the shrinkage in deposits during the past few months has been very great, perhaps 25 to 30 per cent. It is the wheat and cattle in this section that affects us. I would think that from a banking point of view and from the point of view of the producers of American products who can not find markets that an emergency exists.

Mr. C. P. J. Mooney, of Memphis, Tenn., said at St. Louis:

Foreign buyers are practically out of the market for dark tobacco grown in Tennessee and Kentucky by some 80,000 small farmers, whose crops last year amounted to about $40,000,000. Seventy-five per cent of it has been marketed to France, Germany, Italy, and Spain, very little being marketed in this country, and that only for snuff. Inasmuch as the American market is limited, the inability to export brings distress to the people who have been producing the dark tobacco. We thought when rice dropped to a dollar this summer there would be added domestic consumption of rice, but apparently the people of the United States do not appreciate rice as a food crop. We have exported much of the stuff we have grown. Until the war broke out it was cotton every fall that brought back the gold from Europe. If we are to sell to France, Germany, Italy, and Spain, and other continental countries, we must finance these sales. The Nation secured a victory in the World War and we must now bring it about so that the exchange of world products throughout the world can be resumed. I believe the way is by means of the Edge bill and by the resumption of some of the work that was done by the War Finance Corporation.

Mr. Hecht, president of the Hibernia Bank, of New Orleans, is perhaps one of the greatest bankers in the South, if not one of the greatest in America. He has just completed the organization of a six-million-dollar bank under the Edge Act, the first one that has been completely organized in this country. Mr. Hecht said this:

The suspension of the War Finance Corporation activities at the time they were suspended was justified, but I am quite convinced that the complete change of conditions since that time would fully justify its resumption. Six months ago we all had the honest belief that we had a shortage and underproduction of everything, but we now find ourselves with an apparent tremendous oversupply. The demand for products has declined in the same ratio as prices. Nobody likes to buy on a declining market, but there are a great many countries that have not only a desire to buy but an urgent demand for some of the very products we are talking about. These countries are not able to get the goods because there does not exist financial machinery to make it possible for them to buy. The War Finance Corporation did a great deal to relieve that situation, and the organiation of one or more Edge banks can help out some, but it would help ten times as much if the War Finance Corporation could function, because otherwise the functioning of these Edge banks will be more or less limited.

Charles De B. Claiborne, vice president of the Whitney Central National Bank, of New Orleans, said this:

Europe has bought very little [cotton] this year. We tried to obviate that by the formation of a three-million-dollar bank under the Edge Act, but we gave up the idea because the War Finance Corporation, we understood, was not to function normally. I believe it was very disastrous, because, if you will notice, sugar, rice, cotton, and other commodities have gone below the cost of production, and it is going to cause a great deal of hardship throughout the South if something is not done. There is no market at all and we look for a very slow liquidation in the next six months unless something is done to assist us to export commodities. I think resumption of the activities of the War Finance Corporation would be one of the most potent factors in helping the present financial situation, in helping the orderly marketing of products.

Mr. President, I have numerous other comments on this subject from other bankers of the South and West, but I will not take up the time of the Senate to discuss them just now.

Let me say, Mr. President, that there is no question in my mind—and I speak as a New Yorker, representing the greatest State in population and wealth and in the way of conservative business—speaking for that State, because I have tested the judgment of the leading business men of New York, there is no question in my mind that the revival of this War Finance Corporation will do much to facilitate our foreign business. I am sure it will be helpful, and I am sure that the great body of the business men of America would be glad to see it revived. The psychological effect of it would be wholesome, and I am confident it would do much good in the country as a whole, both in the agricultural sections and industrial sections as well.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I want to vote for this joint resolution, because the purpose which it has in view meets with my support, as it does doubtless with the support of every Senator on the floor.

Yet I have two objections to the joint resolution, both of which are obviated by a substitute which I had printed Saturday, and which is upon the table, and which I will now ask that the Secretary may read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read the proposed substitute for the information of the Senate.

The READING CLERK. Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That in the judgment of the Congress the War Finance Corporation should resume its operations.

SEC. 2. That the Federal Reserve Board should fully cooperate in such renewed activities of the War Finance Corporation.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, there is an old legal proverb that hard cases make bad laws. There undoubtedly is the hard case here, the situation both with regard to wheat and cotton, as well as other agricultural and industrial products, and it may well cause anxiety. But if you attempt, in curing the case, to formulate concrete and detailed directions, either to the War Finance Corporation or to the Federal Reserve Board, you have established a precedent which is dangerous. I do not know why it is that the price of wheat has diminished as it has. There are 29,000,000 bushels less in the harvest of last year than the average of the last 10 years. There is a hungry world needing wheat and the exports have been twice as great as the normal exports of wheat, and yet, in spite of those two facts, which would naturally mean a rising market, we have had a constantly declining market, to the detriment of the farmers in every section of the land.

My own judgment, in passing, is that the cause of it lies in the absence of investment buying; I mean to say in the buying on the part of millers and manufacturers who normally, whenever the prices of wheat began to decline in view of a future crop, bought heavily and stopped the decline. In the present financial condition of the country they buy only from hand to mouth, and when the market started to decline the purchasing that had always heretofore stopped the decline was not present and the decline continued until we are met with the situation which we have to-day.

This joint resolution, as it is offered, confines the attention of the War Finance Corporation to the rehabilitation in the financing of the exportation of agricultural products to foreign markets. That is good. The encouragement in the exportation of agricultural products to foreign markets is necessary; so is encouragement of the exportation of copper, of farm implements, and of industrial products.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I shall offer in a few minutes, before the Senator's substitute is voted upon, an amendment adding "and other," so that it will read—the exportation of agricultural and other products to foreign markets—broadening the provision so as to include all.

Mr. SPENCER. I thank the Senator from Georgia. As is always the case, his amendment is helpful, and in my judgment it does strengthen the joint resolution.

But why specify any article of export? Why say to the War Finance Corporation, "Encourage wheat, encourage cotton, encourage agricultural production," and refer to other products of the Nation, even by the language of the proposed amendment? Why do we not get precisely the same result and obviate a bad precedent if we say to the War Finance Corporation, "In the judgment of Congress you ought to resume activities," and let it rest there?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think I can give the Senator a suggestion which possibly will include a reason for putting the emphasis on agricultural products. Congress has already done something which has facilitated greatly the exportation of other than agricultural products—manufactured products. The Edge Act operates very largely to promote the exportation of manufactured products——

Mr. SPENCER. Did I understand the Senator to say the Edge Act?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Edge Act; and moreover the other legislation which Congress has passed has facilitated greatly the combination of manufacturers for the exportation of their goods.

And there is still another reason. During the existence of the War Finance Corporation, most of its financial aid was extended to manufacturing institutions for the exportation of their goods, the obvious reason for that being that they were ready to apply to the War Finance Corporation and in a position to receive the aid of the War Finance Corporation. But when we come to agricultural products, no such machinery exists; it is more difficult to find any organization ready to apply to the War Finance Corporation. The agricultural producers are not united, as are the manufacturers, in great corporations.

So one of the serious evils from which we are suffering at the present time is that the agricultural interests of the South and the agricultural interests of the West have lacked some aid of this sort to promote their exportations. I think, therefore, it is not unwise to emphasize the need of aid for the agricultural products and that the additional language suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], to include any other product, is perfectly reasonable.

Mr. SPENCER. Is it not true that if the language of the original resolution specified agricultural products and the amendment of the Senator from Georgia adds to it other products, industrial or agricultural, the result is that the War Finance Corporation is asked to resume activities for all the products of the Nation? And if that is true, is it not a safer and simpler way of getting at it by expressing to them the judgment of Congress that they resume their operations, for the result is the same?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The view of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] was the view of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, that the situation with regard to agricultural products justified our emphasizing agricultural products, although for myself I wished to add "and others." The opinion of the committee at the time they used the expression "agricultural products" was that even if no other language was used, under the general terms of the joint resolution, if the War Finance Corporation resumed activities it would apply to all classes of products, and they simply meant to emphasize agricultural products. My own view was that it might be misunderstood; it might be thought that we only wanted to renew operations as to agricultural products, and therefore that we ought to add the words "and others."

Mr. SPENCER. I agree with the Senator as to the benefit of his amendment, but is it not true that it was the main purpose of the joint resolution, though it did originate with the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, who undoubtedly had agricultural products mainly in mind, to give expression to the judgment of Congress that the War Finance Corporation, whose operations had been suspended in May by judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, should now be resumed, and is it not the main purpose of the joint resolution to resume the activities of the War Finance Corporation? As the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] suggests, they should give particular attention to agriculture; but are we not opening a door that will be difficult to close when we say to an agency of Government, "Direct your assistance, your financial operations, along a particular line"? Are we not on wiser and safer ground when we say "act," and leave it to their own judgment, for they must have information as to the state of the country and as to the need of any particular product. Then if their action is against what Congress thinks it ought to be there may be occasion for legislation; but on an expression of opinion detailed direction seems to me unwise.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think if the Senator is at all familiar with the circumstances, even in normal times, under which farmers produce and sell, he will realize that they are radically different from the organized industries of our country and that in a time of stress like this everything moves along the line of least resistance, and he, the farmer, offering the least resistance, of course is first sacrificed. We realized during the war that he is of paramount importance to the country. I think for the first time in the history of America the relationship of agriculture to the welfare of the country was realized. This is for his particular benefit, not to ignore others under the law, but particularly to direct the attention of the War Finance Corporation to the distressed condition in which agriculture now finds itself.

Why, has it not come to pass, if the Senator will allow me, that one of the leading men of the West appeared before our committee and testified that he himself had killed sheep and fed them to hogs because it was unprofitable to ship them to the market. Corn is being burned for firewood; cotton is standing stagnant on the wharves and rotting in the fields and sheds of the South, with the world shivering and naked.

Surely we should have brains enough, knowing where the cancer is, to apply the remedy. These other men will take care of themselves largely when this fundamental element of our commerce begins to function properly. Surely it is wise and proper right now for us to direct attention specifically and directly to that great disorganized mass, the aggregate of whose productions excels all other productions.

Mr. SPENCER. Does the Senator think the War Finance Corporation is in entire ignorance of the agricultural conditions which the Senator so eloquently describes?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As a matter of fact it may not be; but if we simply reenact the law without giving them the specific thing we want to help, we may not obtain the result we are after. Are we to sit here and leave it to them, when we are the representatives of the people who are supposed to point out the particular evils and emphasize them? Are we to close our mouths and leave it to those who administer the law when there is nothing in the law which calls specific attention to a specific evil?

Mr. SPENCER. If the board know and recognize the evil and have the power to remedy it, is it unnatural to suppose that they will apply their powers to remedying the evil about which they know?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As a matter of course they might be inclined to do so, but they certainly would go about it more liberally and freely if they were directed specifically by Congress to take care of this fundamental matter.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator has no doubt about their power to act now?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, I think there is doubt of it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me to follow my line a little further, the record of the operations of the War Finance Corporation shows that they gave credit chiefly to manufacturing concerns. I think it desirable to call their special attention to agricultural interests.

For instance, of the total of $47,000,000 which they advanced for export, $5,000,000 went for the exportation of locomotives, $10,000,000 went for the exportation of electrical equipment, $4,000,000 went for the exportation of agricultural implements, $5,000,000 went for the exportation of condensed milk, and so on. All those great exportations were made by great manufacturing concerns. I am not criticizing them for making those advances, but I think it is the desire of Congress in passing this joint resolution that the War Finance Corporation shall give its particular attention to agricultural products for exportation. Therefore I see no objection to placing the emphasis upon agricultural products.

Mr. SPENCER. I quite agree with the Senator from Nebraska that there has been an undue proportion perhaps of manufactured articles, and yet if the Senator from Nebraska will think a moment he will see where the joint resolution, as it is originally proposed, would lead us. If we pass the joint resolution as it is submitted we say to the board, "Through your operations you are facilitating manufacture too much at the expense of agriculture." We are substituting our judgment for theirs in the proportion of their activities to one line of American products over that of another.

Certainly the Senate would not consider it wise for Congress to keep a tabulated account and say, "To-day you gave too much assistance to locomotives and too little to farm implements, too much to manufactured products and too little to cotton or cotton products." There must be a discretion vested somewhere, and my point is that just in proportion as we make a specific recommendation or direction, as it originally was, along a certain line, we are opening the door to a future that will cause us trouble.

My second objection to the proposed resolution has to do with the second section, and is stronger than the first. I wonder if Senators have read it as I read it, that it is proposed to say to the Federal Reserve Board, "The Congress of the United States wants you to grant liberal extensions of credit to the farmers of the country at the lowest possible rate of interest." I submit that that direction to the great Federal Reserve Board is ridiculous. It is more than any stockholder would attempt to give to any bank in which he might have control of the capital stock. The Federal Reserve Board are there with their tremendous powers and their great resources, and Congress, not by law, but as an expression of opinion upon a subject which no one of us is presumed to have the same amount of experience or knowledge as the board whom we are directing, says to them, "In the functioning of your activities remember that at the lowest rate of interest you are to pick out a single class and give to them the most liberal financial accommodation."

Certainly the farmers are entitled to liberal accommodation. Certainly there can be no argument about their need of it. But have we not gone as far as Congress ought to go when we say to the Federal Reserve Board, "There should be a resumption of the activities of the War Finance Corporation that we have devised. When they resume we give you our judgment that you ought to cooperate fully with them in their activities"? Everything that purports to be accomplished by the joint resolution, it seems to me, is accomplished by the substitute. If it is not, the substitute does not accomplish what I have in mind.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the pending motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. NORRIS. I ask that the Secretary may state the pending amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask that my amendment may be changed to read 5 instead of 6 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the change will be made as requested, and the amendment as modified will be stated.

The READING CLERK. As modified the amendment is to strike out, on line 16, the words "the lowest rate of interest" and insert in lieu thereof the words "not exceeding 5 per cent per annum."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] if the amendment, if adopted, is directory upon the Federal Reserve Board to say that no rate of interest over 5 per cent shall be charged?

Mr. HARRIS. It is.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think there will be no doubt, I should like to say to the Senator from Georgia, that the substitute for section 2, which will be offered when the parliamentary situation is such that it can be presented, will be agreed to. I believe, from what I have heard from Senators, that the Senate is almost unanimously in favor of the adoption of the proposed substitute. If that is done, then, of course, the amendment would not be applicable.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator to which substitute he has reference?

Mr. NORRIS. The substitute for section 2. The Senator from Georgia has an amendment pending to that section. Of course, I concede that that would take precedence, even if the substitute were offered. I supposed that the senior Senator from Georgia had a motion pending adding the words "and other," so as to read "agricultural and other products." I supposed that was the pending motion. If there is no debate on it, I do not care, but I think if it were agreed to it would practically destroy the effect of the joint resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, if my amendment shall be voted down, I desire to say that I expect to support the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. Last year Congress guaranteed the railroads 5½ per cent and they raised freight rates and passenger fares. The farmers are in a worse condition now than were the railroads at that time. We simply ask a rediscount rate on agricultural products not exceeding 5 per cent. I think Congress should grant the farmers every possible help in their distressed condition.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I can not allow the statement which has just been made by the junior Senator from Georgia to go unchallenged. Congress made no guaranty to the railroads after September 1. There was a guaranty made to them of the average rate of return for the three years previous to that time because guaranties had been given to the employees. After that there was simply a rule adopted for the direction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, namely, that they should make rates which it was supposed would return 5½ per cent or, in their discretion, 6 per cent. That is all. There was not any guaranty about the law.

Another suggestion, if I may be permitted to make it: I called attention this afternoon to the fact that there were 12 States in this Union in which the contractual rate of interest was 10 per cent and 10 States in which the contractual rate of interest was 12 per cent. If we are going to limit the discount rate to 5 per cent, we shall be simply helping the banks make the difference between 10 or 12 per cent and 5 per cent. I do not know how that is going to aid any farmer.

Mr. GRONNA and others. Question!

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]. [Putting the question.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. NORRIS. I now offer the committee substitute for section 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In lieu of section 2 of the joint resolution as it is printed it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 2. That it is the opinion of the Congress that the Federal Reserve Board should take such action as may be necessary to permit the member banks of the Federal Reserve System to grant liberal extensions of credit to the farmers of the country upon the security of the agricultural products now held by them by permitting the rediscounting of such notes of extension at a fair and reasonable rate of interest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have made up my mind with some reluctance to support the pending joint resolution. I have not any great hope that it will accomplish much good, but its psychological or moral effect may possibly be productive of some benefit. I wish, however, to call the attention of Senators to the powers of the Finance Corporation. Those powers are found in two paragraphs of section 7 and in section 8 of the act, and I do not see how, if we properly construe the language of those paragraphs, the Finance Corporation can render any aid in the present emergency.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia rose.

Mr. NELSON. I will yield in a moment. They certainly can not do so except indirectly through the banks.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NELSON. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That act was amended on March 3, 1919, and the powers of the board are given in section 21. They are entirely different from the original war powers.

Mr. NELSON. I now notice that. Their powers are increased to the extent of allowing them to promote commerce with foreign nations, but the question is, In what manner are they to give relief? Will farmers' organizations—and we have them—which are engaged in shipping farm products be in a position to avail themselves of the law? I ask the Senator from Georgia that question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; there are organizations of exporters engaged in exporting farm products; there are many exporters who export farm products; and the War Finance Corporation under section 21 would be able to aid those exporters in carrying the credits of central Europe, which are required for a longer time than the banks can carry such credits.

Mr. NELSON. But here is the question: It is not intended to cover the borrowing of money for the export trade, but the furnishing of money to enable the farmers to hold their crops over in this country, to stop the sale of them, if you please.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The War Finance Corporation is given the power to aid in carrying credits for exports, and that part of the joint resolution is intended solely, through longer credits, to facilitate the exportation of raw materials and manufactured products into countries which otherwise could not buy them.

Mr. NELSON. The difficulty in this matter, it seems to me, is that we may furnish the money, if we can do so, to carry the crops, but that will not enhance the price of the crops or give us a better market. To get a better market we must have a greater demand from abroad. In this country we raise a surplus of agricultural products; our production is much greater than our consumption. We have to get rid of that surplus, and in order to get rid of that surplus we must sell it to advantage in other countries. With the exception of two crops produced in the United States, namely, cotton and corn, we come in competition with all the world.

In this connection I heard an intimation to-day that we ought to open some markets in Europe that are not now open. In normal times, prior to the war, the great wheat countries of the world were the United States, Russia, and Rumania. The United States and Russia from year to year had a large export surplus, and next to them came Rumania. This year, fortunately, Russia and Rumania are closed to us, and I doubt very much, if they were not closed, whether there would be a surplus in Russia or whether there would be much of a surplus in Rumania, which is one of the Balkan States. I mention this in order to call attention to the fact that, although some contend that we should open our doors to the trade of Russia and of the Balkan States, that could not possibly help the farmers of this country, because those countries, if they had law and order within their borders, would be our greatest competitors.

What is needed above everything else is to restore law and order in the countries of the Old World and put them in a condition where they can purchase our surplus products. They are hard up to-day; they have no money; they have no credit; and the great desideratum is to bring about such a condition in Europe that they will be able to consume more of our products and will have either money or credit to pay for them.

If the corporation to which the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] referred to-day could thus raise a billion dollars and devote it to the marketing of American products, so that the money, although loaned to Germany or other countries in Europe, as in the case of our war loans, would be expended here for the purchase of American products, it would be a great help.

It is some time since the law in regard to export associations was enacted. I supposed at the time that the bankers would organize such associations, but the indications are now from what took place at Chicago that the bankers, while they are willing to organize them and to father them and be a wet-nurse to them, yet expect the farmers to buy the stock and debentures; or, in other words, they want the farmers to use the name of the bankers; they are willing to father the scheme, but they are unwilling to put in all the money that is needed. They want the farmers to take the stock and debentures of the corporations organized. That is a feature that I do not like. I should be glad to see the great bankers of New York and Chicago and other places patriotic enough to raise the money for these purposes themselves, without calling upon the farmer.

The bankers in New York have lately been making loans to foreign Governments at the very high rate of 8 per cent. Denmark lately secured a loan of I have forgotten how many million dollars at 8 per cent. I think Sweden also secured a loan; I know that Norway did. The bankers have money to loan to foreign Governments at exorbitant rates of interests, but they are unwilling to put their hands into their pockets and raise the money that is necessary to help the farmers of this country.

We passed the act providing for the creation of export associations, I think, during the early part of the last session of Congress. I could see through it then. It appeared to me that it was a scheme in behalf of the bankers. While on its face it purported to have back of it public-spirited motives of the highest character, yet it was a scheme to organize corporations, to scatter their bonds and debentures amongst the American people, and to have the rank and file of the farmers and poor business man buy the bonds and securities, and thus compel them indirectly to finance the transactions, instead of the great bankers and the moneyed men of Wall Street going into their own pockets and furnishing the necessary capital.

I am not an enemy of great money concerns. I have not reached that condition, Mr. President; but what I do not like about them is to have them pose as ready to help the American people, ready to go into their own pockets and aid in an essential work, and then go out to Chicago and hold a convention and see how many farmers and cattle raisers and other men they can get to come in and take the stock of the corporation.

I have only one word more to add, and it is practically what I said in the beginning. I gravely doubt whether much good can be done by this proposed legislation; but I am willing to try the experiment. The moral effect of it may be good. Psychologically, it may have a beneficial influence; but otherwise it will not count for much. I think there is another thing that we need at present. Canada is flooding this country with her wheat products. I see by to-day's paper that Canada is rushing in her wheat, fearing that we will put an embargo on it. I trust we may put an embargo on the shipment of Canadian wheat; but, after all, that will be only a temporary relief, because whatever Canada does not ship to the United States of her agricultural products she will ship to Europe, and there it will come into competition with the surplus which we ship there. So it will be, as I might say, a mere temporary tonic, and yet we ought to try it.

Conditions among the farmers are a great deal worse than people in the East imagine. Our farmers had to pay enormous wages, from $4 to $6 and $8 a day. They had to pay twice as much for thrashing their grain this year as they ever paid before, and now they are confronted with the prevailing low prices that really do not furnish them one-half of the cost of the production of the grain. I am not as familiar with the cotton situation as are Senators on the other side, but I know the cotton producers are suffering. They are suffering from another cause. We suffer because of the competition of the wheat from the Argentine, Australia, and other countries. There is not the competition in cotton that there is in wheat. There is not the competition in corn, even, that there is in wheat; but the cotton producers are suffering from the stagnation that exists in the manufacturing world. There is a lack of demand in the textile manufacturing world for cotton. I am sorry for the cotton growers. I feel for them just as I do for the farmers in my country, and I hope that we will do our very best to get relief for them.

Another matter about which I want to ask the indulgence of the Senate briefly is this: We have on the calendar a bill which was reported at the close of the last session, authorizing the farmers of our country to form themselves into associations for buying and selling purposes. Some question has been raised in many quarters as to whether such combinations would not be in conflict with the antitrust law. The object of the bill which is on the calendar is to relieve selling associations of farmers and stock raisers from any difficulty under the antitrust law.

There have been no prosecutions, so far as I know, under the antitrust law in reference to such associations, but there are many who fear that there may be; and in order to remove that fear and to make such organizations perfectly safe, the Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill, which is a House bill, with an amendment. The amendment consists in taking away from the Secretary of the Treasury the power involved in the bill and putting it in the Federal Trade Commission.

I hope that when the pending joint resolution passes we can follow it up with the passage of the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary. We certainly ought to do what we can at this juncture to help the farmers of the country. They are bearing the brunt of the downward trend of prices. It has confronted them in the first instance. The jobbers, the wholesalers, and the middlemen are not affected, and they are not willing to stand the losses that are entailed on the farmers. As the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] said the other day, one has to pay almost as much to-day for a mutton chop in a restaurant in this city as the sheepman can get for a whole sheep in the city of Chicago.

Mr. President, when this joint resolution passes I hope the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the other measure to which I have referred. It is a small matter, but we have an illustration of how valuable these selling associations have been in the matter of the sale of fruits on the Pacific coast. They have their organizations. They have had them for years. They ascertain, through their organizations, at what places and what cities in the East there is a market for their products, and they immediately ship the products there. Under the old system they would oftentimes ship carloads of perishable fruit to a city where it could not be disposed of at any price, and the fruit would be a total loss.

Our dairy farmers have succeeded to a large extent by a system of cooperation, and it is a curious fact that the dairy farmers form the one class of farmers who have been least affected by the downward trend of prices to-day, not in respect to their cattle and hogs but in respect to the products of the dairy, particularly butter. By organization and cooperation, and by means of cold storage, they have been able to hold their butter and peddle it out and get a fair price for it.

There is a spirit of socialism abroad in this country, Mr. President—state socialism. There are many who believe that the Government should undertake to do everything.

My idea is that the best thing is to aid the farmers. Let the farmers form their buying and selling associations, recognize those associations, and let the farmers be put in such shape that their associations can function freely and meet with the approval of the public. That system had already to some extent been in vogue in Russia before the revolution and the time of the soviet government. Even the Russian farmers had succeeded to a large extent in forming, before the revolution—I do not know what has happened to them since—buying and selling organizations; and by that means they succeeded in getting better prices for their products, and getting lower prices for what they were compelled to purchase.

So I trust, Mr. President, that in a spirit of desire to help the farmer we will pass this joint resolution, and, when it has been passed, that the Senate will indulge me by allowing me to call up the other measure to which I have referred.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], who is chairman of the committee, if he does not approve the substitute of the Senator from Nebraska—if it is not acceptable to him?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have only this to say: The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had a meeting this morning, and it was the wish of a large majority of the committee to offer this amendment. Personally I would rather have seen the joint resolution pass in its original form, and I know of at least one other Senator who entertains that opinion. Of course, I shall not object to it, however, because a majority of the committee approves it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I rise to say that I shall give my support to the substitute offered by my colleague [Mr. NORRIS], and I can support it much more willingly than I could support the original section 2.

Section 2, as originally drawn, appears to be a reflection upon the Federal Reserve Board. The substitute, I think, is free from that objection. It comes within the legitimate jurisdiction of the Congress to express its opinion as to what should be done.

Moreover, I desire to call attention to the fact that the policy of the Federal Reserve Board in administering this great law has been a liberal one. I think, from what has been said here, that there is not yet a due appreciation of the tremendous expansion of bank credits that has gone forward under the administration of this board.

In 1914, when this board went into office, the bank loans of the national banks of the United States were less than $7,000,000,000. At the present time the bank loans of the national banks are almost $14,000,000,000. At that time—I mean, when the Federal reserve act first went into force—bankers were rediscounting only about 1 per cent of their bank loans. That per cent has steadily risen, year by year, until at the present time the banks of this country that are members of the Federal Reserve System are rediscounting on an average something near 17 per cent of their loans.

Not only has there been an enormous expansion of bank loans under the administration of the Federal Reserve Board, and an enormous expansion of rediscounts, which at the present time have risen until they reach over $3,000,000,000—that is to say, the banks of this country are rediscounting, practically borrowing, through the Federal Reserve System over $3,000,000,000 in order that they may have the resources to accommodate their customers—not only is that true on the average, but in my opinion the banks of the agricultural regions of the West and South have been favorably considered as far as the law permits by the discretionary power of the Federal Reserve Board.

For instance, Mr. President, one of the provisions in the original Federal reserve act, which I had something to do with incorporating in the act, reads as follows:

Provided, That notes, drafts, and bills drawn or issued for agricultural purposes or based on live stock and having a maturity not exceeding six months, exclusive of days of grace, may be discounted in an amount to be limited to a percentage of the assets of the Federal reserve bank, to be ascertained and fixed by the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. President, that amendment to the bill was forced in upon the floor of the Senate after a fight. That fight was made for the purpose of protecting the agricultural interests of the country, North, South, and West particularly. Under that provision the Federal Reserve Board might have limited the Federal reserve banks to loaning 25 per cent of their assets upon agricultural notes of that sort or they might have made it 50 per cent. But as a matter of fact they exercised the whole power which Congress gave to them and they directed—and the order is now in force—that the Federal reserve banks of the country can lend 99 per cent of their assets on agricultural paper of this sort. That is very clear proof that the attitude of the Federal Reserve Board toward the agricultural interests of the country is a liberal attitude; that it is not restrictive to an unfair degree.

Again, we realized when the act was passed that when we established 12 Federal reserve banks in the United States, instead of 4 or 1, that a number of those banks would be largely local concerns, that all the customers in their districts would want their money at the same time, and that there might be need that they should be assisted by other Federal reserve banks. So we incorporated on page 21 of the act this paragraph:

To permit, or on the affirmative vote of at least five members of the reserve board to require, Federal reserve banks to rediscount the discounted paper of other Federal reserve banks at rates of interest to be fixed by the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. President, under the provisions of this law the Federal Reserve Board might have required each one of the 12 reserve banks to stand on its own bottom and to stop discounting the paper of the member banks in its district when its limit of reserve had been reached, say, 40 per cent. But the Federal Reserve Board did not do that thing. It has exercised its full power, and when the Federal reserve bank at Minneapolis, at Kansas City, at Richmond, and at Atlanta, and the banks in other agricultural districts, reached the utmost limit to which they could go in rediscounting bills, the Federal Reserve Board here in Washington directed the stronger Federal reserve banks in the older districts of the United States, particularly Cleveland, Philadelphia, and Boston, to rediscount the paper of those Federal reserve banks in the agricultural districts of the West and South, and it was done.

I say this much, Mr. President, in justification and in defense of the Federal Reserve Board. It has gone as far as the law allows it to go in providing credit to the agricultural interests of the country. If there was a defect, it was our mistake in dividing up the banks into so many districts so as to make them to some extent local. I am not criticizing the law in that respect now, but I say that if there was any defect, it was in the organization of the system, and not in the administration of it by the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. President, I have not a great deal of faith in the joint resolution, but I am going to support it. I believe that the psychological effect of it will be good. I have not much faith in it, partly because I have observed, under the former operation of the War Finance Corporation, that it was used chiefly for the promotion and financing of manufactured exports, and I doubt somewhat whether it can be used effectively for the promotion of the exportation of agricultural products.

In my opinion what is above all desired is that Congress should devise some way to bring to the agricultural interests of the United States a larger supply of credit. They can not supply themselves with their credit. In the industrial centers of the country, in the manufacturing centers of the country, and the great mercantile centers the operations occur four or five times a year, goods are turned over repeatedly, the merchant is buying and selling and paying his notes several times a year, and the manufacturer is buying his raw materials and manufacturing them into products and selling them month by month all through the year; but in the agricultural districts the farmer of the West and the farmer of the South has to work a whole year, practically, to produce his crop. He needs a larger credit than he gets, and I think Congress should devise some way to afford to the agriculturist a broader credit and a greater credit than he has now, in order that he may not be compelled the moment he has raised his crop to dump it upon the market. I think it would be better for him to carry his crop a moderate length of time and market it gradually than to have it go into the hands of the middleman. The middleman has to be financed; the middleman has to have credit, and possibly we can just as well arrange to have that credit given to the producer. The consumer gets no benefit under the present situation, because the crops which go into the hands of the middleman, who is financed, who does have credit, only reach the consumer after the middleman's profits have been taken out of them.

So, if the Committee on Banking and Currency takes favorable action on the bill which I have introduced, I shall perhaps ask the Senate before this session closes, and I hope this month, to pass an act which I believe will be a first step in the direction of extending greater credit to the agricultural interests.

This year, as a result of very profitable operations of the Federal reserve banking system, the United States will receive between sixty and seventy million dollars of profit. The Secretary of the Treasury has only two things which he can do with that money: He can either use it to purchase bonds in the market, thereby making a little reduction in the national debt, or he can deposit it with the gold reserve in the Treasury against greenbacks. Neither of those purposes is of great value at the present time. If that money can be turned over to the farm-loan banks in some proper way to be used by them to make personal advances, possibly through other banks, to farmers and stock raisers upon personal security, or warehouse receipts, or chattel mortgages, we will have made a beginning in extending credit to the farming interests of the country. I trust that the Banking and Currency Committee may take favorable action upon that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. THOMAS. Is that the substitute for section 2?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. THOMAS. I vote "no."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, instead of the rather detailed amendment to the first section which I had printed, I ask simply to add, after the word "agricultural" in the seventh line, page 2, the words "or other," so that it will read "agricultural or other products."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 7, after the word "agricultural," insert the words "and other," so that the clause will read:

> And that said corporation be at once rehabilitated with the view of assisting in the financing of the exportation of agricultural and other products to foreign markets.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have adopted as section 3 of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Add a new section, as follows:

> SEC. 3. That factor's paper with cotton or other staple agricultural products as collateral shall be eligible for rediscount in Federal reserve banks.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. A suggestion has been made which I think everyone will agree to. It is to amend the joint resolution by adding one word in the first whereas. That amendment should come later?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be in order later when the time comes to consider the preamble.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I move to strike out the second section.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: Would not the proper procedure be to ask for the taking of a separate vote on each section?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will rule the motion which has just been made out of order. The Chair does not believe a motion to strike out will lie in Committee of the Whole. The joint resolution is still in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, let me understand, please. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was offered as a substitute for the original section. As between those two the Senate has declared itself in favor of the substitute, but some of us are opposed even to the substitute, although we prefer the substitute to the original. It seems to me that we are clearly entitled to an expression of the Senate upon that subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair may be mistaken in his ruling.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that he can achieve his purpose when the joint resolution gets into the Senate by demanding a separate vote on each section.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does the Chair hold that an amendment in the nature of a substitute, after it has been adopted, can not be stricken from the bill? It undoubtedly can not be amended further, because the Senate has adopted that precise form of words; but I am a little in doubt whether we lose the right to strike out an amended section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question now, so that there will be no doubt, and the same result will be reached. The question now is upon section 2 as amended.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, on that question I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Are we to dispose of section 2 before we dispose of section 1?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is pending a substitute for both sections.

Mr. NORRIS. We have agreed to a substitute for section 2.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; there is pending the substitute of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER]. I thought he offered one.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not know that the Chair had put that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado asks for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. This is a direct vote? An affirmative vote will retain it; a negative vote will strike it out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; section 2, as amended by the substitute of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that the question is on adopting the second section as amended?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the pending question, and the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. LODGE. That proceeding is novel to me. It seems to me a motion to strike out is clearly in order. A motion to strike out, which I think is the proper motion, would, of course, develop the same result.

Mr. NORRIS. No one has made a point of order against that motion. I am opposed to the motion, but to be fair I concede that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has a perfect right to make it. I hope it will be defeated, but no one has made a point of order against the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Allow the Chair to state his position. It is simply that a motion to strike out will not lie as in Committee of the Whole, the substitute just having been adopted.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not agree with the Chair, but in order to expedite the matter, will not the Senator from Ohio reserve his motion and make it when we get into the Senate?

UMI

Mr. POMERENE. I can do that, but I think I am entitled to a vote on it as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator is, but he would have to appeal from the ruling of the Chair, and that would take time.

Mr. POMERENE. It seems to me we can decide the question by taking a vote upon it at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I understand the situation, the Senator from Nebraska offered a substitute for section 2 and the Senate voted the substitute in. Then under the rule the question is, Will the Senate agree to section 2 as amended, and that is what is before the Senate now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is before the Senate now and, on the demand of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. FLETCHER. I submit that the question is entirely right as the Chair has stated it, and if we will vote we will get the question decided now whether we shall agree to the substitute or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to section 2 of the joint resolution as amended. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HENDERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], who is absent from the city. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded,

Mr. HARRISON. The senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is unavoidably absent. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. If present and not paired, the senior Senator from Mississippi would vote "yea."

Mr. SWANSON. The senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SHEPPARD. The senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. RANSDELL. The junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. GLASS (after having voted in the negative). I am reminded that I have a pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. In his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. POMERENE (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], dependent upon certain conditions. At times I am, under the pair, permitted to vote, and at other times not. After conferring with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] I feel that perhaps I should transfer my pair to the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] and vote "yea."

Mr. EDGE (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. In his absence I transfer my pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. If present, he would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]; the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] is paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]; and the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] is paired with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] is detained by illness.

Mr. FLETCHER (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL]. In view of the transfer just made by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] I am at liberty to vote. I will therefore allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—47.

So section 2 as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I propose the substitute which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed substitute will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

SECTION 1. That in the judgment of the Congress the War Finance Corporation should resume its operations.

SEC. 2. That the Federal Reserve Board should fully cooperate with such renewed activities of the War Finance Corporation.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I hope that the proposed substitute will not be agreed to. We have had extended hearings before the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman. The governor of the Federal Reserve Board has stated specifically that if we would direct him to revive this corporation he would be glad to do so. I can see no reason why at this late hour the proposed substitute should be adopted. I hope, therefore, that the friends of the measure will vote it down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when the joint resolution was under consideration, I think on Saturday, I indicated a purpose to submit some observations in regard to it. I gave assurance to my good friend the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] that I would not interpose any objection to the passage of the joint resolution to-day. We have reached an hour now when I know Senators are very anxious to depart from the Chamber. What I have to say would take perhaps an hour or an hour and a half. I can discuss some features of the joint resolution at some other time and also the other matters to which I desire to direct attention, and for the purpose of keeping my implied promise to my friend from North Dakota I shall pretermit any discussion at this time. Perhaps to-morrow or at an early date I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate, when I shall discuss inferentially the joint resolution and other matters to which I desire to call attention.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

Mr. WARREN. I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the joint resolution to the first whereas of the preamble. It enumerates the inability of farmers to dispose of their corn, wheat, cotton, and live stock. I ask him to let the word "wool" follow the word "cotton."

Mr. GRONNA. As far as I am personally concerned, I accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The preamble as amended was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution directing the War Finance Corporation to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, and for other purposes."

Mr. WADSWORTH. In view of the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, it seems to me that the title should be amended by striking out the words "in the agricultural sections of the country."

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from New York why he wants the words to which he has referred stricken out?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I understood that an amendment had just been adopted which would make this measure applicable to all kinds of undertakings in addition to agriculture.

Mr. GRONNA. That is correct, but that was not included in the preamble, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The preamble has nothing to do with the title. I merely make the suggestion in the interest of consistency.

Mr. LODGE. The title is all right now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have not taken a single minute of the time of the Senate in the debate on the joint resolution which has just been passed, for the reason that I was anxious to have it disposed of. I have a telegram here with reference to the measure which I wish to ask to have inserted in the RECORD. It is a telegram from J. G. Crites, a gentleman whom I know very well, a very prominent citizen of my State, and I ask to have it printed in the RECORD in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegram referred to is as follows:

HELENA, MONT., December 10, 1920.

Senator ASLE J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

Due to decline in prices of farm products, our farmers are on the verge of bankruptcy and will be unable to plant another crop unless provided with immediate financial assistance, which our banks are unable to extend. As a farmers' organization with over 2,000 stockholders, we respectfully implore you to use all honorable means to revive the War Finance Board, making its provisions sufficiently elastic to permit of its financing needy farmers and their organizations.

MONTANA GRAIN GROWERS.
J. G. CRITES, General Manager.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that certain pages from the hearings, pages 60, 61, and 62, and part of page 63, be printed in the RECORD, being a portion of the statement of Gov. Harding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. HARDING. Yes. We had a conference here on the 8th of May last, when the situation seemed to be getting out of hand. We had raised the rates as high as we wanted to go. There was indisposition on the part of the agricultural interests to sell their products, either because they thought they were going higher or because of the railroad situation. There was no selling movement to amount to anything, and there seemed to be a revival of the borrowing spirit, and we did not want this to resume the pace it had gone before, because we had to prepare for crop moving in the fall. A conference was held between the board and the Federal Advisory Council, which is a statutory body authorized to advise the board on general conditions, and class A directors of the Federal reserve banks. A carefully prepared statement was read to that conference, which was afterwards made public.

That statement if read from one end to the other contains nothing that anyone can take exception to. It merely called attention to certain facts which existed and to certain dangerous tendencies. It called attention to the necessity for providing funds to move the crop in the fall, and it pointed out that if the extension of credit should proceed at the rate it had gone for a few months preceding, the Federal Reserve System would be unable to function effectively, and a great many banks might be obliged to restrict necessary credits. Banks generally were cautioned to pursue a more careful policy in extending credits and were asked to look over their loans to see what purpose they were for; whether they were for speculative purposes, for the holding of commodities which could and ought to be sold. The statement was very moderate in tone. It pointed out that in some cases it might be necessary for a bank to pay some attention to the essentiality of the purpose for which a loan was asked, and that in cases where it found it necessary to discriminate it should do so, being careful always to take care of the essential enterprises of the community and not to do anything that would result in any general hardship, but that if it had an opportunity of collecting a long-standing loan that it had really no business to carry, it ought to do so. Banks were told that in granting new accommodations they should favor those that were essential, instead of cutting them down and loaning on nonessential propositions. As to essential or nonessential loans, we distinctly stated that the Federal Reserve Board was not in position to give any advice to the banks, but that the individual banker was in better position than anyone else to determine the essential or nonessential character of the loans offered to him.

Representative BYRNES of South Carolina. Were those bulletins all printed?

Mr. HARDING. A statement was given to the press.

Representative BYRNES of South Carolina. Now, as a result of that, the intent of the board certainly seemed to be misunderstood, and that the officials were told——

Mr. HARDING (interposing). I do not think the intent of the board was misunderstood so much as it was deliberately misrepresented.

Representative BYRNES of South Carolina. Well, the effect of deliberately misrepresenting it was to cause the banks to curtail credits. Isn't that the condition to which you have referred in the district in which Senator NORRIS lives—that they received their information from the officials, who are deliberately misrepresenting the board?

Mr. HARDING. I do not think that is true, because the volume is greater now than it was last May.

Senator NORRIS. What do they have to pay? You raised the rate, did you not? Would not that alone prevent these bankers from making loans?

Mr. HARDING. I don't think so.

Senator NORRIS. Does not the rate have anything to do with it?

Mr. HARDING. May I ask what the legal rate of interest is in Nebraska?

Senator NORRIS. Seven per cent.

Mr. HARDING. And in Kansas?

Representative TINCHER. Six per cent.

Mr. HARDING. And in Wyoming? Nobody here seems to know. Are any special contracts authorized out there?

Senator NORRIS. Yes; up to 10 per cent.

Mr. HARDING. The Kansas City district rate is 6 per cent. Any bank can borrow an amount equal to one and one-half times the sum of its paid-in contribution to the capital of the Federal reserve bank, plus its reserve balance at a 6 per cent rate.

Senator NORRIS. That is a high rate, is it not; a rediscount rate?

Mr. HARDING. The rediscount rates are relative. It is not a high rate. The Bank of England rate is 7 per cent.

Senator NORRIS. What was the normal rate, before you increased it?

Mr. HARDING. In 1915 we had a 3 per cent rate and did not do any business at that rate, because nobody wanted to borrow money.

Senator NORRIS. And then you raised it?

Mr. HARDING. We raised it from time to time; yes, sir.

Senator NORRIS. Do you mean to say the banks would not pay 3 per cent but were glad to pay more?

Mr. HARDING. I do not know how glad they are, but in 1915 they had no occasion to borrow money; they did not want to borrow money at any price.

Senator NORRIS. It was not a question of rates then; they did not need the money?

Mr. HARDING. I do not think the rate cuts much figure in restraining a bank which is obliged to borrow, but prevents others from overlending merely for the sake of profit.

Senator NORRIS. Is not the power given to the Federal Reserve Board particularly with a view of having them curtail their credits? Is not that the real object of it?

Mr. HARDING. The act says, in section 14, that the Federal reserve banks may establish, from time to time, rediscount rates, subject to the review and determination of the Federal Reserve Board, which rates shall be fixed with a view to accommodating commerce and business. In section 13 there is a provision defining what kind of paper may be eligible for rediscount by Federal reserve banks. Broadly speaking, a provision is made for the eligibility of bills and notes which are issued or drawn, or the proceeds of which have been used or are to be used for agricultural, commercial, or industrial purposes. It goes on to say, however, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed as preventing the discount of such paper, defined as eligible above, and that notes issued or drawn for the purpose of carrying merely investments, or issued or drawn for the purpose of buying or trading in stocks, bonds, or other investment securities, except bonds and notes of the Government of the United States shall not be eligible for rediscount by a Federal reserve bank. That is something that complicates the whole situation. At the time that act was passed the United States had a debt of something less than a billion dollars, and most of that was pledged as security for national bank notes. Now, since the war, the United States has a total indebtedness of approximately $25,000,000,000, and every bond, note, and certificate issued by the Government in borrowing that vast amount is acceptable as security for notes running as long as 90 days, or as security for member banks' notes running not longer than 15 days, and notes so secured are eligible for rediscount at a Federal reserve bank.

Now, you can see what would happen if we were to attempt to put in any artificial rate. Federal reserve bank discount rates must be based upon the current rates for credit. The experience of the Bank of England has been that it must always fix the official bank rates slightly higher than the current rate. That is the case over there to-day. The official rate of the Bank of England is 7 per cent, and the current rate is about 5½ per cent.

The Federal Reserve Board adopted a policy in order to assist in the war financing which was economically unsound. I say this frankly. Congress authorized certain loans. It authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to determine the rates at which the loans should be issued. The Secretary of the Treasury asked the advice of experts and then fixed the rates of interest to be borne by the several issues of bonds, notes, and certificates. During the time we were actually at war, something like $18,000,000,000 of bonds were sold to the people, an amount certainly in excess of the normal investment power of the American people in such a short time, and the only way in which those loans could be financed was through the instrumentality of the banks. The only way the banks could undertake to do it was to get some assistance from the Federal reserve banks and at a low rate. The low rate of interest borne by these bonds was fixed with a view of holding down the expenses of the Government as far as possible. Anyway, that is something the Federal Reserve Board has no responsibility for. In order to make possible the floating of these bonds we fixed a rate less than their coupon rate. Some member banks announced that for a period of six months there would be a rate of 4¼ per cent on notes secured by Government obligations. The result was there was no loss to subscribing banks pending the distribution of the bonds to the public. There were successive bond issues. The principal reason why discount rates were not increased earlier than they were in 1919 was on account of Treasury financing.

Representative LAZARO. Would it not be easier for the farmer to borrow on his agricultural products from his member bank, if he had his products stored in a United States bonded warehouse where his products would be weighed and licensed by grades?

Mr. HARDING. I think it would; yes, sir.

SUSPENSION OF ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I did not yield the floor for debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Washington to make a request.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make the request because it is necessary, if any action at all is taken upon the matter which I am about to bring to the attention of the Senate, to have it done at once. From the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the bill (S. 4565) to extend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the year 1920, I report it back with an amendment and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. If it leads to no debate, I shall not object.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator from Washington a question before I give consent.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the matter presented by the Senator from Washington in the nature of a bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is.

Mr. KENYON. I suggest that if that measure is taken up for consideration, and then the Senate adjourns before it is concluded, the unfinished business will be supplanted. Under those circumstances, I feel obliged to object.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I imagine there will be no difficulty about having the unfinished business laid aside temporarily for this particular purpose until the bill can be disposed of.

Mr. KENYON. The unfinished business was temporarily laid aside for the joint resolution which has just passed the Senate, and I understand that the unfinished business is now before the Senate again. If the Senator secures the consideration of the measure in which he is interested while the unfinished business is pending, and the Senate should adjourn before the consideration of the measure is concluded, the unfinished business would be supplanted.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will ask to have the bill withdrawn if it can not be disposed of at once without debate.

Mr. KENYON. With the understanding that it will not supplant the unfinished business, I shall not object.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question before I consent to the consideration of the bill at this time. I have not had a chance to read the report of the committee. Does it exclude placer locations?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; it does not, with the exception of locations of oil shale. That is the only exception.

Mr. SMOOT. Those are placer locations.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They are not all placer locations.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I said that I yielded if there was no debate. There is evidently going to be debate, and I shall be obliged, therefore, to make the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts will withhold the motion for a moment, the measure reported by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] is very important, and, as he has said, it has got to be passed at once, within a day or two, if any relief is to be afforded. I think, with a slight amendment, we can dispose of it, without any debate, in two minutes.

Mr. LODGE. Very well; if there is no debate I will withhold the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4565) to extend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the year 1920, which had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the period within which work may be performed or improvements made for the year 1920 upon mining claims, as required under section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, is hereby extended to and including the 1st day of July, 1921; so that work done or improvements made upon any mining claim in the United States or Alaska on or before July 1, 1921, shall have the same effect as if the same had been performed within the calendar year of 1920: Provided, That this act shall not apply to or affect claims to oil shale: And provided further, That this act shall not in any way change or modify the requirements of existing law as to work to be done or improvements made upon mining claims for the year 1921.

Mr. SMOOT. I move to strike out the exception as to oil shale.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On behalf of the committee, as far as I can do so, I accept the amendment proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the first proviso, as follows:

Provided, That this act shall not apply to or affect claims to oil shale.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee as it has been amended.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to have the amendment as amended read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as amended will be stated.

The READING CLERK. As amended the amendment reported by the committee is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the period within which work may be performed or improvements made for the year 1920 upon mining claims, as required under section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, is hereby extended to and including the 1st day of July, 1921, so that work done or improvements made upon any mining claim in the United States or Alaska on or before July 1, 1921, shall have the same effect as if the same had been performed within the calendar year of 1920; Provided, That this act shall not in any way change or modify the requirements of existing law as to work to be done or improvements made upon mining claims for the year 1921.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill extending the time for the doing of annual assessment work on mining claims for the year 1920 to and including July 1, 1921."

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 14, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 13, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, in whom all our longings, hopes, and aspirations are centered, hallowed be Thy name. Without Thee we are nothing, with Thee we may accomplish wonders.

Forsake us not in this critical moment of our Nation's history and help us to rise nobly to the occasion, that we may reflect Thy glory in whatsoever we do and thus become instruments in Thy hands for the promotion of all good. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, December 11, 1920, was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks upon the immigration bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the immigration bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the immigration bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the immigration bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I have not objected to these requests, upon the general assumption that the gentlemen who made them will extend their own remarks in the RECORD and not insert the remarks of other people.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, my request was to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and the extension will be confined to them.

Mr. WINGO. I felt sure that the gentleman would, but thought at the same time I would call attention to it.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Mr. CAREW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. DOOLING, be excused indefinitely because of the sudden death of his son in California. If Mr. DOOLING were present, he would probably vote against the immigration bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that his colleague, Mr. DOOLING, be excused indefinitely on account of the death of his son. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. MONTAGUE, be excused to-day in order that he may attend the funeral of a friend. If he were present, I desire to state that he would vote for the immigration bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that his colleague, Mr. MONTAGUE, be excused for the day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday morning next, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, I may address the House for one hour on the subject of appropriations and revenues.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, he may address the House for one hour on the subject of appropriations and revenues. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INAUGURATION OF THE PRESIDENT ELECT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate concurrent resolution 34, providing for a joint committee to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President elect, and for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate concurrent resolution 34 and consider the same. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 34.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee, consisting of three Senators and three Representatives, to be appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, is authorized to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President elect of the United States on the 4th day of March next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

IMMIGRATION.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned on Saturday the previous question had been ordered on the immigration bill. The Chair had asked if a separate vote was demanded on any amendment, and a separate vote was demanded by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] on the so-called Mann amendment, reducing the time of the operation of the law. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the Siegel amendment, extending the exemption in the bill to brothers and sisters.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands a separate vote on the Siegel amendment, specified. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the other amendments? If not, the Chair will put them en grosse. The question is on agreeing to the other amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the Mann amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 19, after the word "of," strike out the words "two years" and insert in lieu thereof "fourteen months."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BANKHEAD) there were—ayes 58, noes 67.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It is clear there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on agreeing to the so-called Mann amendment.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 182, nays 163, answered "present" 1, not voting 85, as follows:

Mr. SANFORD with Mr. GANDY.
Mr. RANSLEY with Mr. LANKFORD.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I am paired, and I answered "present." Had I voted, I would have voted "nay."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair on this bill with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. EDMONDS. He is not here. I wish to withdraw my vote of "nay" and answer "present."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that I was in the cloakroom when the roll was called. I wish to know if that comes within the rule?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. CRAMTON. May I be permitted to state that I would have voted "yea"?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my vote of "nay" and answer "present," having a pair with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that my colleague from Illinois, Mr. KING, is unavoidably absent. Had he been present, he would have voted "yea."

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. FIELDS, is absent to-day on account of attending the funeral of a friend, and he requests me to announce that had he been present he would have voted for the bill.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes in which to address the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I want to announce that the Ways and Means Committee have decided to begin hearings upon the revision of the tariff laws, and those hearings begin on January 6. And I wish to place in the RECORD a list of the dates that the committee will hear people on the various schedules in the law, beginning with "A" and continuing to "N," and then three days for those who wish to be heard on the articles contained in the free list; then two days allotted to hearings on administrative and miscellaneous matters; those hearings, as I have said, to begin on January 6 and to run until February 16, Sundays excepted.

And I wish to place in the RECORD a statement to that effect in order that the country may be informed and the people wishing to be heard may appear here on those various dates to be heard on articles contained in the various schedules. I want to say that the committee is also at the present time holding hearings upon the matter of the revision of our internal-revenue laws. We began those hearings proper this morning, and will hold hearings every day until the holiday recess.

But briefly I want to call the attention of the House to the situation confronting Congress as to our income and expenditures for the next two years and a half, as reported by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield; yes, sir.

Mr. GARNER. Is it the intention of the committee to permit any one coming here to be heard on the revision of the internal-revenue laws?

Mr. FORDNEY. Really, I think, sir, we would like to confine the hearings to those of the greatest importance. I doubt if we will have sufficient time before the holiday recess to hear everybody who wants to be heard; for instance, I believe the motion-picture people want to be heard extensively.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the hearing on the internal-revenue law include hearings on the income-tax return, the form of the report? Does it cover that?

Mr. FORDNEY. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; the report that we are to make out.

Mr. FORDNEY. I hope so. I hope when we revise the present internal-revenue law the form of the income-tax return can be made very simple for each and every individual or corporation to make out their tax return, which is now really a Chinese puzzle.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESS. I have many letters asking for a revision to simplify this before the end of this session. Is that possible?

Mr. FORDNEY. I doubt if it is possible to have a revision of the form of those returns at this session of Congress.

Mr. FESS. That was the instruction I gave them.

Mr. FORDNEY. Now let me give you a brief statement, because my time is limited. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows the income for this fiscal year and for the succeeding fiscal year, produced revenues under existing law, of $5,799,000,000, while the estimates call for an expenditure of $7,914,000,000.

There are falling due Government obligations of $2,350,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness within the next 12 months, and on or before January 1, 1923, $800,000,000 of war-savings certificates, and on or before May 20, 1923, $4,250,000,000 of Treasury notes, making a total in round numbers of $7,500,000,000 falling due within the next two years and a half, and with an income of $4,000,000,000 estimated for the next fiscal year it can readily be seen that it is an impossibility to pay off these obligations in that time, and at the same time furnish sufficient revenues to meet the running expenses of the Government. Therefore it is my personal opinion—and I speak only for myself—that it would be wise for Congress to refund those Government obligations falling due with long-time bonds and reduce taxation to a point where our revenues will meet the annual running expenses of the Government. I do not believe that we can collect from the people sufficient money to pay our ordinary running expenses and materially reduce the Government obligations in that length of time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman said the hearings before his committee would continue until the holiday recess.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; on the internal-revenue law.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If there is to be no holiday recess, will the gentleman tell us when the hearings are to end?

Mr. FORDNEY. The hearings to-day are on the internal-revenue law. We have had Dr. Adams before us to point out certain things.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We are not to take the ordinary holiday recess. The House has determined that it would not.

Mr. FORDNEY. But you are going to recess on December 23 for three or four days.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, for three days. That is the time the gentleman refers to?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is what I wanted to know, when the hearings ended.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he expects to bring in these bills and pass them at this session of Congress?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, no. There is a stumblingblock up on Pennsylvania Avenue that prevents such action at this session.

Mr. SABATH. Where? I have not heard of any.

Mr. CAREW. You do not think you will have these bills prepared at that time, do you?

Mr. SABATH. It is not intended to pass them at this session of Congress?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; it is not intended by the committee to pass any of these laws at this session of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert this statement in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to insert the statement referred to in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Following is the statement referred to:

[Press notice.]

Following a conference this morning of the majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means, Chairman FORDNEY announced that hearings on a general revision of the tariff would begin on January 6, 1921, and continue daily thereafter, with the exception of Sundays, for a period of six weeks.

The following days have been assigned for hearings on the various schedules. The hearings will be conducted in the Ways and Means Committee room, in the House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Schedule A (chemical oils and paints), January 6, 7, 8.
Schedule B (earths, earthenware, glassware), January 10, 11.
Schedule C (metals and manufactures of), January 12, 13, 14.
Schedule D (wood and manufactures of), January 15, 17.
Schedule E (sugar, molasses, and manufactures of), January 18, 19.
Schedule F (tobacco and manufactures of), January 20.
Schedule G (agricultural products and provisions), January 21, 22, 24.
Schedule H (spirits, wines, and other beverages), January 25.
Schedule I (cotton manufactures), January 26, 27.
Schedule J (flax, hemp, and jute, manufactures of), January 28, 29.
Schedule K (wool and manufactures of), January 31, February 1, 2.
Schedule L (silks and silk goods), February 3, 4.
Schedule M (papers and books), February 5, 7.
Schedule N (sundries), February 8, 9, 10.
Free list, February 11, 12, 14.
Administrative and miscellaneous, February 15, 16.

Mr. FORDNEY emphasized the importance of giving wide publicity in the press and trade journals of the dates assigned for the various schedules, for it will be necessary, he explained, for persons desiring to be heard to apply to the clerk of the committee previous to the day set for the hearing in order to be assigned a place on the proper daily calendar.

It is the plan of the committee to conclude the hearings and complete necessary printing incident thereto prior to the adjournment of the short session, March 4, so that the actual work on the drafting of a bill can be commenced without delay under the new administration. It is a foregone conclusion that Mr. Harding will call Congress in extra session shortly after the inauguration, and, in the opinion of the chairman and other members of the committee, the final enactment of a tariff measure at the special session could not be accomplished if hearings were to be delayed until the new Congress is convened. To substantiate this the chairman pointed to the fact that in 1908 hearings were commenced November 10 and the bill was not finally enacted until August 5, 1909, the elapsed time being five days short of nine months. In 1913 tariff hearings were begun January 6 and the bill was enacted October 3, three days less than nine months' time being required.

SUSPENDING THE OPERATION OF WAR LAWS.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas submits a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules submits the following resolution:

House resolution 609.

"Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider in the House the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 382) 'declaring that certain acts of Congress, joint resolutions, and proclamations shall be construed as if the war had ended and the present or existing emergency expired'; that there shall be not to exceed two hours of debate, to be equally divided between those for and against the joint resolution; that during said debate amendments may be offered, to be voted upon in the order in which they are offered at the conclusion of such debate, at which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and pending amendments to final passage, without intervening motion except one motion to recommit."

With committee amendments, as follows:

In line 9, after the word "debate," insert the words "and immediately upon its conclusion."

In line 10, strike out the words "they are."

In line 10, after the word "offered," insert a period.

In lines 10 and 11, strike out the words "at the conclusion of such debate, at which time," and insert in lieu thereof the word "Thereupon."

In line 12, strike out the word "pending."

The committee recommends that the resolution with these amendments be agreed to, so that as amended the resolution will read:

"Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider in the House the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 382) 'declaring that certain acts of Congress, joint resolutions, and proclamations shall be construed as if the war had ended and the present or existing emergency expired'; that there shall be not to exceed two hours of debate, to be equally divided between those for and against the joint resolution; that during said debate and immediately upon its conclusion amendments may be offered, to be voted upon in the order in which offered. Thereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments to final passage, without intervening motion except one motion to recommit."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] desire to discuss the resolution?

Mr. GARRETT. I thought I might have a few words to say, not very many. I have no requests for time on the resolution; that is, I have not at present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will say that it is not my purpose to take up very much time, and I have no requests for time on the resolution itself.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I prefer to make a brief statement, and then will yield for a question.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? May I ask about the form of the resolution?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. First, the resolution provides that it shall be in order to consider it in the House immediately after the adoption of this resolution. This is a House Calendar proposition. How will it come before the House then?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] will call it up immediately upon the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then it provides that when the general debate ceases amendments may be offered?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Or during the debate.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. That is the question I wanted to ask.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understood, as the resolution was amended, that it provided for offering amendments at the end of the debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. During the debate or at the conclusion. If one has been denied the right to offer amendments during the debate, he may offer them at the conclusion of the debate.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What I wanted to get at was the construction. The gentleman speaks about gentlemen wanting to offer amendments at the conclusion of the debate. When an amendment is offered shall it be voted upon at once, or shall all amendments be offered and voted upon together?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Voted upon in the order in which they are offered.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That does not answer the question. After the first amendment is offered, can any other amendment be offered then, to be voted upon, or must all amendments be offered before any amendment is voted upon?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think that will be for the Chair to decide.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, I understand that; but I ask the gentleman's construction of it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. My construction would be that the amendments offered during debate shall be voted on in the order in which they are offered, and then amendments offered at the conclusion of debate shall be voted upon as they are offered and in the order in which they are offered.

Mr. WALSH. Voted on during the debate?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; at the conclusion of the debate.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is better to have the thing settled in advance, and then there can be no dispute about it.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman mean that at the conclusion of the debate gentlemen who have not been recognized during the debate may offer amendments?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. May offer amendments, which will be voted on without debate.

Mr. WINGO. But they may be recognized for the purpose of offering amendments to be voted on without debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That was the purpose of offering the resolution in that way.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Does the rule provide for the reading of the bill and then for the offering of amendments?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The rule does not provide that the bill shall be read, but the bill must, of course, be read, and then the amendments offered at the conclusion of the reading.

Mr. GARD. The order of procedure, then, will be, first, debate, then the reading of the bill, then the offering of amendments.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

This rule brings before the House for the earliest action possible the resolution that failed of passage in the closing hours of the last session of Congress. Both Houses passed substantially this same resolution. It failed of becoming a law because the President did not have time to investigate and sign the resolution before the Congress adjourned.

The purpose now in bringing the matter before the House is to get the resolution to the President at as early a date as possible. The only difference in the resolution now and then is the addition of, I think, the War Finance Corporation act to the acts that were excepted from the provisions of the resolution as it passed in the last session of Congress.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. Can the gentleman inform me whether the resolution includes also the repeal of the espionage law and the war-time prohibition law?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They are not mentioned.

Mr. SABATH. Neither of those is mentioned?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Neither of them is mentioned in the exceptions. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Did I understand the gentleman from Kansas to say that the reason why this resolution failed in the last session was that there was not time enough for the Executive to investigate it before signing it?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I made that statement, and I assume that that is correct, or that it would have been signed.

Mr. WALSH. The War Department investigated it for 12 days.

Mr. WINGO. I notice that the resolution does not by name except the Pittman Act. Is it the intention of the Republicans to repeal the Pittman Act by this resolution?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is a matter that can be discussed when the amendments are being considered.

Mr. WINGO. I ask for information and not in a spirit of controversy. I assume that a gentleman occupying the important position which is occupied by the gentleman from Kansas knows whether his side intends to repeal the Pittman Act.

Mr. BLANTON. The resolution does repeal it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The matter is not now under discussion. I am simply stating briefly the purpose of the rule.

I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee. [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I think the history of this joint resolution is this: When it was first proposed in the House to declare a state of peace, so to speak, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] offered as a substitute for that a proposition to repeal the various war laws, and that was voted down in the House. I was not in the city at that time. Subsequently, the matter was brought in as a de novo proposition, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] being in charge of the bill, and it passed the House with only three votes against it as I now remember it. I happened to be one of those three voting in that way, for the reason that I did not feel sufficiently informed as to the effect that this wholesale repeal or declaration, or whatever it might be called, would have, and it had not been explained to a point where I felt that it was safe to commit myself to a vote in favor of it, and so I voted against it. It went to the Senate and was there amended, or else we had to make some amendment by a joint resolution on the following day. Perhaps the latter is the correct statement. It went to the President just before adjournment and did not receive the President's signature, so that it failed to become a law.

Now, it is proposed again in substantially the same form as it finally passed, including the correction that was made by joint resolution on the following day, and I think also including one other matter at this time. That is the proposition that is before the House.

Mr. TEMPLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. TEMPLE. There is a little history of the joint resolution prior to the point at which the gentleman's statement begins. The language on the first page and on the second page is identical with the resolution that came from the Foreign Affairs Committee providing for the termination of the war, so that this resolution antedates the proposal of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], to which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] refers.

Mr. GARRETT. I thank the gentleman for that statement. I was not here at the time the original resolution was being considered, and hence did not know the exact form in which it came.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The resolution under consideration excepts from its operation the Lever Food Control Act?

Mr. GARRETT. The original resolution did.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do not understand the resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs made that exception.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not know about that.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am inclined to question the gentleman's memory with regard to the Flood resolution excepting the Lever Food Control Act.

Mr. GARRETT. I may be in error about that.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is an important point.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman may be correct. I was not present at that time, being absent on account of illness in my family. But this is the proposition before the House. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that the rule provides that this time shall be controlled one half by those in favor and one half by those opposed. I do not know whether anyone is in a position to control the time against this resolution or not, because I do not know whether there is anyone who is going to oppose it. I merely suggest that it will save some confusion if there could be an agreement about that either before or after the adoption of this resolution. The gentleman from Kansas can be considering that, and I will now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, it may be remembered by those who have kept up with this particular legislation that repeatedly on the floor of this House I have advocated and voted for the repeal of all war laws and to stay their further application. It is a most extraordinary situation that here, two years after actual war has ceased, long after our armies have been disbanded, we have remaining in full force and effect all of the war laws, with their very onerous and oppressive provisions, considered to be necessary at the time of actual war.

This resolution does not purpose to remedy that situation so far as the most important of the war laws is concerned. I refer to the food control act of August 10, 1917. It leaves that still in full force and effect, the most onerous and oppressive of all the war laws.

I remember some of the operations of that act. I remember how the Government took possession of the fuel-production industry and also assumed to regulate the disposition of the products of the farm, and how it dealt with food in all its aspects. I remember that it went far beyond American tradition, and beyond the reasonable requirements, in my opinion, of war conditions. I had hoped that when the time came we would get rid of those war laws, and that the food control act would be the first one singled out for slaughter. But I find it expressly excepted from this resolution.

I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this resolution leaves, in effect, section 4 of the food control act, under which the Department of Justice was able under the forms of law to strangle the efforts of the coal miners to better their condition. The Government took its hand off of the price-fixing of fuel, and from controlling the disposition of fuel, but it returned to place its hand on the men who toil under ground, who undertook to better their condition after the peaceful and lawful manner and way by a labor combination as they had done before the war.

I call the attention of the House to the fact that this resolution by express exception makes it possible for the Department of Justice to intervene in any strike that may occur in this country among the workers connected with the production or transportation of food or fuel. It is yet quite possible for the Attorney General, as I said, for illustration, when the original act was being considered, to intervene in the case of two farm hands who might agree together to strike for 14 hours a day instead of 16, as they had been working. It is unlawful for them to agree to that.

All mining strikes are unlawful. All transportation strikes are unlawful according to the position of the Department of Justice. I wonder if the House is willing to stand on record as opposed to strikes in time of peace by men connected with these industries. If so, we should do it openly and plainly, and not by subterfuge, and not under a plea of ignorance. That is what we are doing. I shall endeavor by offering an amendment to give the House an opportunity to express itself directly on that issue.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] seems to deprecate the fact that this Congress was wise enough to leave upon the statute books of this country a law that would protect the rights of the American citizen during the crucial period of the last 24 months.

What were the conditions which he recites? The coal miners, some of whom the record shows, for eight hours of work a day, were receiving $350 a month——

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I can not yield, because I have got something to say in this five minutes. Some of these miners were receiving $350, $400, and even $500 a month. The Washington Post, the leading morning newspaper of this Nation's Capital, to-day tells you that a miner received $75 for one day's work. They waited until the wintertime came, when they knew the people must have coal, and then they struck. They had the right to quit work if they wanted to, but they did not stop there. They said to every other able-bodied citizen of the United States who wanted to work and who wanted to mine coal so that the women and children of this country would not freeze to death last winter—they said to them, "We won't work ourselves and you shall not work." They assaulted them with brickbats and clubs and even threatened them with guns and dynamite for attempting to do honest work in their native land. What was the condition? What were they attempting to do, with winter coming on? They were attempting to cause millions of helpless women and innocent little children in this land to be subjected to the danger of freezing to death. I thank God that this Congress had sense enough and wisdom enough, with all of its tendencies to truckling in the past, to keep on the statute books a law by which the Attorney General and the President of the United States could protect the people. I am willing to have that law stand on the statute books. I differ with my colleague from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], and I want to tell my friends on the Republican side that the American people are with them in keeping that law here for their protection. I want to tell you that if we do not look more to the rights of the people of the United States in general, we will not be performing our full duty. I do not carry in my pocket the card that makes me represent any particular class. I am not representing merely the people of the seventeenth district of Texas in this Congress. I am looking to the interest of all of the 105,000,000 people in this country, and when it comes to their interest I am going to cast my vote for their interest.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Where does the gentleman get his authority for the statement that a coal miner receives $500 a month?

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to ask permission to put into the RECORD the names of the miners themselves who receive that much; also the mines where they work and the employing mine owners from whom they drew that pay.

I might call attention to the fact that after the gentleman from Indiana had been representing the interest of these organizations in this body zealously and patriotically for years and years, and in his State legislature for years and years—having never voted against their interests and their demands—simply because he voted for the American people in the return of the railroads his labor organizations hounded him to death in his district, but I am very glad that he was strong enough to stand up and fight them and to defeat them to a finish. I congratulate him.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. What has that to do with the price of coal or labor?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to put the data to which I referred in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I insert in the RECORD the following excerpts from the speech of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODS], made during the first session of this Congress, to wit:

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. I give the statement, which has been furnished me, as to wages earned for the months indicated for the miners named at the Borderland Coal Corporation mines at Borderland, W. Va.

This is not a union field, but my understanding is that prices corresponding to the union scale are paid. Mining conditions are not exceptional, and the miners are not paid higher, or at least not materially so, and the mining conditions are materially no better for the miner than generally prevail in that field. Miners are charged $2 per month per room for frame houses, most of which have bathrooms attached and are sewered, and $3 per month per room for brick houses. They pay for their own powder, which runs from $2 to $9; smithing bills, 50 cents per month; furnish their own tools, consisting of shovel, pick, coal auger, and perhaps an iron bar. They are not charged for timber or propping. Single men pay 75 cents for medical attention, and married men, with families, $1.25 per month.

It may be that a few of those listed below are contract miners; that is, they employ a helper and receive pay for the coal the miner and the helper both mine. The coal is cut at the footing by the company with cutting machines. The miner works as many hours as he chooses and is paid by the ton or car. Their average day is from seven to eight hours, but, of course, during the period shown by the following statement there were quite a number of days in which the miners were not working owing to car shortage. These cases may be exceptional, but are sufficient to show what can be earned by the steady miner. The list is as follows:

The net is after deducting store account, scrip account, powder, rent, lights, coal, smithing, doctor's fee, insurance, and in some instances cash and war-campaign fund. These men are not starving.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments to the resolution. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk reported the amendments severally and they were severally agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up House joint resolution 382, declaring that certain acts of Congress, joint resolutions, and proclamations shall be construed as if the war had ended and the present or existing emergency had expired.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

House joint resolution 382.

Resolved, etc., That in the interpretation of any provision relating to the date of the termination of the present war or of the present or existing emergency in any acts of Congress, joint resolutions, or proclamations of the President containing provisions contingent upon the date of the termination of the war or of the present or existing emergency, or on the existence of a state of war, the date when this resolution becomes effective shall be construed and treated as the date of the termination of the war or of the present or existing emergency, notwithstanding any provision in any act of Congress or joint resolution providing any other mode of determining the date of such determination. And any act of Congress or any provision of any such act, that by its terms is in force only during the existence of a state of war or during a state of war and a limited period of time thereafter, shall be construed and administered as if the present war terminated on the date when this resolution becomes effective, any provision of such law to the contrary notwithstanding; excepting, however, from the operation and effect of this resolution the following acts and proclamations, to wit: The act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved August 10, 1917, the amendment thereto entitled "The food-control and District of Columbia rents act," approved October 22, 1919, the act known as the trading with the enemy act, approved October 6, 1917, and the first, second, third, and fourth Liberty bond acts, the supplement to the second Liberty bond act, and the Victory Liberty loan act, and the act entitled an "Act to prevent in time of war departure from and entry into the United States contrary to the public safety," approved May 22, 1918; also the proclamations issued under the authority conferred by the acts herein excepted from the effect and operation of this resolution.

With the following amendment:

Page 2, line 22, after the word "act" and the semicolon, insert the words "the War Finance Corporation act as amended by the act approved March 3, 1919."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FESS). The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman begins, will he yield for a brief statement?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. I stated a while ago that it seemed to me it would be well in view of the peculiar situation that exists to agree on some control of the time. I do not care to control the time, because I must go to a committee meeting in a few moments. In view of the fact that this rule authorizes the presentation of amendments during the general debate, it occurs to me that it might expedite matters if the gentleman from Minnesota and some one here could agree on a control of the time, and then these two gentlemen can yield to Members under the agreement for the purpose of offering amendments, if any are to be offered. If that appeals to the gentleman from Minnesota, I suggest that it be done.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I am quite willing to have that arrangement made.

Mr. GARRETT. Then I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] may control one hour of the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] may control one-half of the time, which would be one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire whether it is necessary to offer amendments during this general debate, and whether Members to whom the gentleman from Ohio may yield will have the right to offer amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that any Member who has the floor can offer amendments during the debate, but that at the close of the debate, anyone getting the floor can also offer amendments.

Mr. GARRETT. If the Chair would permit, there will be this difference: If the gentleman from Ohio should control the time and should yield to the gentleman from Alabama during the course of the debate, say five minutes, with permission to offer an amendment, he would have the opportunity to discuss that amendment during those five minutes, whereas if the amendment is not offered until the conclusion of the debate there would be no opportunity to discuss the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee has stated the position correctly.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee has asked that I control one-half of the time, but I note that the ranking Democrat on the committee, Mr. THOMAS, of Kentucky, is in the room, and I would prefer to have him control the time.

Mr. GARRETT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I change the request to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] may control one-half of the time, which would be one hour. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for one hour.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I presume it is not necessary to devote very much time to the discussion of this resolution, as it is an old friend. It has gone through the House on two occasions and has gone through the Senate on two occasions. The change that has been made is so slight that I do not think I am misstating it by saying that it has gone through both the House and the Senate twice before.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD. I would like to know on what two occasions this resolution has gone through the House.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It went through as a part of the original peace resolution, and at the end of the last session of Congress as a separate resolution.

Mr. FLOOD. Is it not a fact that last April, when the peace resolution was pending in the House, in a motion to recommit, I offered a resolution practically the same as this resolution, with the exception of the exceptions, and that that resolution was voted down?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is true.

Mr. TEMPLE. If the gentleman will yield for a moment, the peace resolution which was offered at that time had as the second section the identical language of this resolution on the first page and part of the second. The gentleman from Virginia proposed a substitute for that and the substitute was voted down. This was what was voted on in the Volstead proposition.

Mr. FLOOD. My substitute was what this is except with the exceptions you make.

Mr. TEMPLE. This is the identical language for which the gentleman's substitute was offered.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Does the resolution in fact repeal the espionage law?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; this resolution does not repeal anything. It simply suspends all war laws barring those excepted, and if it is passed it will have the same effect as a peace treaty would have save as to the excepted acts.

Mr. SABATH. With some exceptions?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. If it does not repeal in effect it suspends the espionage law?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It terminates the operative force of a number of provisions of that law. Now, the espionage act is an omnibus act and contains many provisions that are intended to be permanent law and which you would not want to repeal, but that portion of the act to which objection has been made will be suspended by the passage of this resolution.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will yield.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman be kind enough during the course of his remarks, if he thinks it of sufficient importance, to explain what provisions, if any, of the trading with the enemy act will not be suspended? I have special reference to this clause of the trading with the enemy act referring to the custodianship of alien property.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I assume that the gentleman knows more about the trading with the enemy act than I do, because he is a member of the committee that reported it.

Mr. DEWALT. That might be a violent assumption, but what I am trying to get is information upon the subject as to whether or not the language of the trading with the enemy act is to be suspended or repealed, or only special portions thereof repealed, and I have special reference to the provisions of the act regarding the custodianship of alien property.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This does not affect the trading with the enemy act; that act is expressly excepted.

Mr. DEWALT. Then that feature would be in effect?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It would remain in effect, because this does not affect it. It is excepted from the operation of this resolution.

Mr. DEWALT. Has the committee—I ask merely for information, not out of curiosity—inquired specifically whether or not it would be wise to repeal some portions of the trading with the enemy act and still have some of them remain in force, especially referring to the custodianship of alien property?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It has not. It is generally understood that it is necessary to retain at least some portions of it, because a good deal of our trade with Germany and other enemy countries is carried on under the provisions of that act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I want to ask the gentleman this question. When the War Finance Corporation act was passed I was not a Member of this body. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has included in this act the one I have reference to, particularly the one that is under consideration by the Senate. There is a resolution now pending in the Senate proposing to revive the War Finance Board. Is that the same as the War Finance Corporation act here?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is the same. We are offering an amendment to this resolution so as to except that act from the operation of this resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The gentleman has an amendment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. An amendment offered by the committee.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. SABATH. May I inquire of the gentleman why the committee has excepted from this resolution the act entitled "An act to provide for the national security and defense," namely, the act of August 10, 1917? What possible reason could they give for not including that in this resolution?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That act contains a number of provisions in reference to profiteering, provisions that are much broader and more comprehensive than anything we can pass under peace-time powers, and for that reason we thought it ought to remain in force especially during this time, when there has been so much complaint about profiteering, and profiteering certainly does exist to a very great extent.

Mr. SABATH. That is the only reason?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is the reason why we have excepted it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is the language in all of these acts providing for a declaration of the termination of war identical or does it vary?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; it varies. There are different forms of expression. There are upon the table by the side of the gentleman a compilation of these various acts, showing the various expressions used in the different acts. If anybody is interested in seeing just what statutes are suspended, they can get a copy of that report. It is a Senate report. My understanding is it was compiled by the Congressional Library and contains a very large number of acts that are affected, not only acts that were passed at this time—that is, during this war—but acts that have been passed years gone and that are only operative when there is war.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Generally speaking, however, in the main the more important ones are terminated only when the President shall declare that a treaty has been ratified; is not that the case?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am interested in the exception the committee has made in the act known as the trading with the enemy act. How will that exception affect the commercial relations between America, Germany, and Austria, for instance?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Leave it undisturbed.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am quite sure the committee has made a very thorough investigation of this bill before presenting it to the House; but will not that in many directions give our competitors in Canada, or in England, or in other parts of the world, an advantage in central European trade?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not think so. It has nothing to do with that trade.

Mr. BRITTEN. The trading with the enemy act prevented trading with the enemy. We are carrying on certain commerce with the enemy now.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We are trading with the enemy now as though there was not any war.

Mr. BRITTEN. What is the reason for leaving it in the bill?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Because it is under the provisions of this law that regulations are made under which that trade is carried on. If you repeal it, the war would exist technically, and you would not be able to deal with them without a treaty. Under the regulations prescribed by the Treasury Department trading is going on.

Mr. FLOOD. On a permit from the President.

Mr. BRITTEN. So there are no restrictions now?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I would not care to say as to that. We do not want to repeal it until we get something in place of it.

Mr. BRITTEN. Can the gentleman tell the House just what restrictions are still in existence as affecting trade between this country and central Europe?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I can not. My understanding is that the trade is carried on freely, so far as England, Germany, Austria, and other countries are concerned.

Mr. BRITTEN. If that is correct, why is it necessary to except——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is a necessity for excepting it, because it is carried on under the provisions of this act.

Mr. FLOOD. The President issues his permit under the provisions of this act, and he might revoke it. If this act is repealed, a permit would be revoked.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; and he would not have the power to issue permits.

Mr. BRITTEN. You are leaving the trading with the enemy entirely in the hands of the President?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is not much danger. That is the best we can do.

Mr. CONNALLY. How does this resolution differ in text from the one we passed a short time ago?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is only a slight change. Turn to page 2, at the end of the sentence in lines 3 and 4, and you will find it has been changed just a trifle so as to avoid a repetition of language. Then from line 4 down to the word "excepting," in line 10, there is some new language added. It is simply added for the purpose of expressing more clearly the purpose had in the first part of the resolution. The first part, as I construe it, refers to acts that have been passed specifically with reference to this war, and the new language is added to cover old statutes that were not passed with reference to this war, but any war, and which have been on the statute books for many years. The added language is simply to carry out the purpose of the resolution and does not change its meaning in any way.

Mr. FLOOD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD. Is not this the difference between this resolution and the resolution passed by Congress in the latter part of May: That the resolution passed then repealed the war resolutions and was declared to be a peace resolution, and this repeal of the war measure was simply one section of the——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Oh, no. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. The resolution we passed in the month of May last was almost identical with this. The only act that it did not affect at that time is the one we offer to put in now by amendment, the one in reference to the War Finance Corporation act. At that time we did not except the War Finance Corporation act. Otherwise it was the same thing.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would like the gentleman from Minnesota to yield to me for the purpose of letting me offer an amendment at this time, which ought to be before the House.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield for the purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND of Indiana: On page 2, line 12, after the words "to wit," strike out all of said line, and lines 13, 14, 15, and 16, to and including the word "thereto," and insert in lieu thereof the following: In line 16, before the word "entitled," the words "title 2 of the act."

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman from Minnesota want me to use time now, or does the gentleman from Indiana wish to discuss his amendment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. He offers it now and will discuss it later on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this joint resolution is very similar, I find, to the resolution which came into the House first on June 3, 1920, and which was passed on June 4, 1920, by both the House and the Senate, the difference being in the exceptions to the present bill. The matter first came up on the 3d of April, 1920, when a resolution seeking to declare peace with the Imperial Government of Germany was offered in this House, in which section 2 was the same as the language of House joint resolution 382, at least the same in effect, and that resolution, seeking to declare peace without the formality of a treaty, having been defeated, then there was substituted on the 3d of June through the Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] then acting as its temporary chairman, this particular measure, which has for its purpose the determination of so-called war legislation.

I suspect that practically everyone wants war legislation repealed. To me it has always seemed a monstrous thing that two years after the armistice was signed; two years after the men of the American Army achieved most remarkable victories on the field of battle; two years after they had established for all time our principles, embodied them in the civilization of the world; two years from all these things that are associated and affiliated with war we are still technically at war. Everybody knows that immediately on the signing of the armistice the Central Powers were rendered impotent and unable to proceed further with armed force, and everybody hoped—the people of the United States especially—that these laws, some of them necessarily drastic, but war laws, relating to war conditions, would be repealed.

And so the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] on the 4th of May, 1920, had prepared a list of those different enactments which are called war legislation, and they appear in the RECORD of that date; and in the discussion of the technical position of the resolution they were considered, and considered also with the proposition made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] to recommit the bill and report it back with an amendment that it do pass, carrying the provision practically as it is embodied in House joint resolution 382.

When the House came to vote on this bill on the 3d day of June, 1920, there were only three dissenting votes against what is practically this resolution, so that there can be no question in the minds of Members of this House that what they are striving to do is to do what I am sure the people of the United States want and have wanted for a long, long time, and that is to repeal the unnecessary war legislation.

There are, however, exceptions in this House joint resolution, and to them I desire briefly to call the attention of the committee, for the information of the committee, so that if necessary there may be proper amendments offered to the resolution. The first exception is what is known as the Lever Act. To this exception an amendment has now been offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND], which seeks, I believe, to eliminate the act except by retaining title 2 of the so-called Lever Act. Is that correct?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Title 2 of the amendment to the Lever Act.

Mr. GARD. In my time will the gentleman advise me just what that is?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Title 2 of the amendment of the Lever Act contains the District of Columbia rent clause. Therefore I did not take that out of the law, but struck out title 1, which contains food and fuel.

Mr. GARD. Do I understand that the gentleman's amendment proposes something other than what is carried here on lines 16 and 17—the amendment thereto, entitled "The food control and District of Columbia rent act"?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. If I should include only the Lever Act in striking out the exception there, I would not repeal the amendment to the Lever Act. Therefore, desiring to repeal the amendment to the Lever Act, I specifically reserve title 2, which is the rent law, which will not be repealed under my amendment.

Mr. GARD. What under the Lever Act does the gentleman want to repeal?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The entire act, which is all of title 1.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would the gentleman's amendment include the profiteering section?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. It includes all the Lever Act and its amendments.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does that include the antiprofiteering section?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I do not know whether that includes the antiprofiteering section or not. If it is contained in it, I desire to repeal it if it is not necessary to have it remain in the Lever Act.

Mr. GARD. The so-called Lever Act is the first exception. Associated with that is the so-called food-control and District of Columbia rent act. Then there is the act known as the "Trading with the enemy act."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes; gladly.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I would like to ask for information why the gentleman thinks, if he does think it, that the Lever Act should remain in force? What is the object in retaining it?

Mr. GARD. Personally, I will say that I do not believe in the retention of the Lever Act. My contention is that at this time the war is long and definitely over, and that the people of the United States want to return to the paths of peace and carry on their business and conduct themselves in a peaceful way without the interruption or direction or prohibition of drastic war statutes. That is my own idea.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman on that. I was trying to get the committee's idea of what is the necessity for it.

Mr. GARD. The chairman of the committee, in the limited time in which he discussed the bill, said that his reason for retaining it was to retain the machinery to punish the profiteer.

Mr. JONES of Texas. He was willing to retain the entire act so as to have that retained?

Mr. GARD. He so expressed himself. But I do not desire to speak for the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I said the only opposition to it is to that part of it.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Oh, you have never reached the bottom of the opposition.

Mr. GARD. The so-called trading with the enemy act is one to which I would call the attention of the committee in the most sensible way, because I take it that the United States at this time and in the months to come is seriously to be engaged in the business of exporting its products, and in so far as the retention of war statutes now is concerned, it seems to me that it is the duty of this continuing legislative body to so enact legislation that we may have, for all intents and purposes, the right to export without the embarrassment and the harassment of war statutes. The trading with the enemy act provides in effect that there can be no trading with the enemy in the late war with the Central Powers until there be a license or proclamation, I believe, by the President of the United States.

The only things which I can see which are salutary in the retention of the trading with the enemy act is that provision which concerns the custody of the property held by the Alien Property Custodian and the protection against wholesale merchandise dumping. There may be others, because I am not as familiar with this act in its entirety as I probably should be; but I do realize that there are certain elements of property, real or personal, still in the control of the Alien Property Custodian, and of course a certain part of this act necessarily should be retained a reasonable time, or until those matters could be definitely settled.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. LONGWORTH. My colleague realizes, does he not, that the trading with the enemy act is now the sole bar to the wholesale dumping into the American market of German goods, notably dyestuffs, coal-tar products, and so forth, and the only safeguard absolutely to the existence of the new chemical industry in this country?

Mr. GARD. I am glad to have the gentleman's word for it. I am sure I should not subscribe to anything which would bring about a result adverse to American interests.

Mr. LONGWORTH. There can be no question about the result, I will say to my colleague.

Mr. GARD. The act, however, in its entirety is one associated with war and the continuance of war, and I have suggested that it be so modified at least as to provide for the exportation of our products without necessary license and without hindrance.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. What effect does this repeal have on the espionage law that we passed, in reference to statements made concerning our form of government? Does it repeal any of the provisions of the espionage act?

Mr. GARD. I presume so. I presume it repeals such provisions of the act as are associated with statements made in time of war. There are some general provisions in the espionage act, there are some general postal provisions, some provisions not associated with the phrase "end of the war" or "termination of the emergency" which I understand would not be repealed. I believe it is safe to say that in so far as anything actually concerned with a war status, any actual war legislation of which the espionage act took cognizance, I suspect that this House joint resolution is at least designed to afford a remedy there, but I leave it to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], chairman of the committee, to state.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That act repeals the portion of the espionage law to which there is objection. There are a number of provisions in the espionage act that are intended to be permanent law.

Mr. GARD. That is what I say. There are certain provisions which are intended to be permanent law, and certain provisions which are associated only with time of war. Those associated with time of war are supposed to be concluded by this proposed resolution.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Especially the amendment that was passed later, as an amendment to the espionage act, with reference to seditious language. That would be completely suspended, because I think that was in force only during the war, and that is the provision to which nearly all the objection has been made.

Mr. McKEOWN. After the passage of this act men will not be permitted as they were before the war to go out and use language the purpose of which is to bring our Government into contempt and officials into disgrace, as was done before the war by these soap-box orators. I do not want to repeal anything that would prevent that crowd from using language that would tend to cause insurrection against our Government. We have got lots of them in our country, and I want to know whether this act is going to allow them greater freedom.

Mr. GARD. Was not the gentleman mistaken when he said there was nothing to prevent——

Mr. McKEOWN. What I mean is that I do not want to permit them to do that.

Mr. GARD. I do not occupy the same position as the gentleman on that. I am decidedly in favor of all elements of free speech and of free press, and I do not consider that the so-called soap-box orator in this country has been injurious to our sane consideration of events or will be injurious in the future. My own idea is that it is far more injurious to the body politic to attempt to muzzle or prevent speech than it is to hear a little bit of that which we may even at times lightly characterize as "hot air."

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BARBOUR. Does this resolution repeal in its entirety what is known as the soldiers' and sailors' moratorium act?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. In its entirety?

Mr. GARD. There is no exception as I understand.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There may be some provisions that will remain in force, but those provisions which were intended to end with the conclusion of the war will be ended by the passage of this resolution.

Mr. BARBOUR. It will not be necessary to file an affidavit when bringing a suit that the person against whom the suit is brought is not engaged in the military or naval service of the United States?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No. That provision will be repealed.

Mr. GARD. And then follow the exceptions to the first, second, third, and fourth Liberty loan acts, the supplement to the Liberty loan act and the Victory loan act. Everybody realizes that there is a necessity to retain the validity of the Liberty loan acts, because it is on those acts that the obligations of the Government have been established. It is necessary to retain them.

Then there was incorporated by the action of the committee the following language:

The War Finance Corporation act as amended by the act approved March 3, 1919.

Now, this is a matter that should be discussed. The committee should understand whether there be a necessity for the retention of the so-called War Finance Corporation act. The original act provided that it should cease its operations one year from the time of the declaration of peace, to be evidenced by the proclamation of the President. For myself I deem this to be an excellent feature, because I do not believe that the Government ought to go into the banking business, and I believe that the one year should be made to begin to run, and that if we continue this act as we do here there is no time when the so-called year in which the activities of the War Finance Corporation are to be concluded begin to run.

In the so-called Victory loan act there is a section 9 which provides that the War Finance Corporation act is amended by adding a title thereto, a new section to read as follows:

Section 21 and the following subdivisions empower the corporation in order to promote commerce with foreign nations with the expansion of credit to make advancements, etc., to provide for the assistance to corporations, banks, bankers, trust companies, and persons for the purpose of exportation of said products.

So if we do not retain all of the actual words of the law finance act by the retention of the so-called Victory loan act which it is necessary, we do retain the amendment on page 5 incorporated in new sections to the War Finance Corporation act. In other words, whether you retain all the language of the War Finance Corporation act or not the substantial feature of that act is retained when we say that we retain the Victory Liberty loan act, because that act particularly retains the amendment in section 9 which provides for the assistance in exportation.

I speak of this because I do not know that there has been any very extended discussion as to just what part of this so-called War Finance Corporation act should be retained, or whether any of it should be retained, in the light of the amendment to the Victory loan act. I would be pleased to hear from members of the committee as to the necessity or advisability of the retention of the entire act as the Judiciary Committee voted to so retain it.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I suppose what this bill does is to retain the War Finance Corporation act as amended in the act of March 3, 1919. Just what does the War Finance Corporation act contain?

Mr. GARD. The War Finance Corporation act as amended is a very long act, I am frank to say. I have the act in my hand. It is an act of some 11 or 12 pages, and the last amendment which was made was the amendment of March 3, 1919, by section 9 in the Victory loan act which provides this assistance in exportation.

So far as I know, there is no objection to the continuance of the war finance act, certainly no objection on my part to the retention of anything which would aid in our financial benefit to corporations and to the exportation of our products.

Mr. MADDEN. The only objection I can see to it is that it supplements the Federal reserve act by authorizing a new or outside corporation to issue securities upon which may be based the issue of further circulating medium.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think my colleague is alluding to the provision which authorizes the War Finance Corporation to loan directly to the banks for the purpose of financing exporters.

Mr. GARD. That is what I said.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is not a part of the Federal reserve act.

Mr. GARD. The so-called War Finance Corporation, so far as its active operation is concerned, was suspended on May 10, 1920. Since then they have been clearing up business, but there has been no active work under the act since May 10, 1920. So the question for consideration of this committee and this House now is, I take it, as to whether there be the necessity for the continuance of the war corporation act, especially in view of the fact that there is an amendment that is carried in the exempted Victory loan act.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the War Finance Corporation act also contain a provision for the capital issues committee?

Mr. GARD. I do not know, but my recollection is that it does.

Mr. WALSH. If it does, what is the necessity of continuing that legislation for the reestablishment of the jurisdiction of that particular branch of the War Finance Corporation?

Mr. GARD. I know of no need for the continuance of the so-called capital issues commission. In fact, my own idea about these matters is, as I said in the beginning, that I believe it to be the sincere desire of the people of the United States to be rid of these elements of war-time legislation in so far as they affect business and the conduct of the individual in time of peace, and to make that certain I am willing to support whatever measure carries that into effect. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, the suggestion made by the gentleman from Ohio that the language is perhaps not qutie accurate because of the fact that the War Finance Corporation act is embodied in one of the acts already excluded is, of course, well taken. However, I think that ought not to militate against the language which is used here, namely, that the War Finance Corporation act, as modified by the act of March 3, 1919, shall be excluded. That language by itself would be sufficient.

I presume we all know that an effort will be made to rehabilitate and put into active operation the War Finance Corporation act. But in what manner that is to be done we do not, as yet, know. It may be possible that without additional legislation it may be done. It may be that the best way is to have additional legislation enacted that will make the operation of the War Finance Corporation more efficacious for the purposes for which it was designed. But, in any event, it does not seem to me that it will make any particular difference. We are now considering as to whether or not the war legislation should be repealed, and we do repeal it in a general way, with some exceptions.

Those exceptions are stated. I think it is perfectly legitimate and desirable that they shall be specifically stated, so that there will be no misunderstanding regarding them. The amendment suggested by the committee specifically provides that the War Finance Corporation act and the amendment that was approved March 3, 1919, shall not be considered as being repealed by the passage of this act. There is, therefore, nothing more for us to consider except that. Do we want that excluded? Do we want it repealed? If it is excluded, it will not be repealed. That, I think, is an object which we all desire. Whatever legislation may be needed, if any should be needed, with regard to this War Finance Corporation act and its amendment we shall consider subsequently, if it is necessary to consider it.

UMI

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. If it is excepted, I ask if it will not be necessary to pass a resolution instructing the Treasury Department to enforce it?

Mr. TOWNER. I would not like to say that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I am asking for information.

Mr. TOWNER. I really do not know. Of course, if we could have everything that is desired and which the purpose of the act I think contemplated, there perhaps would be no necessity for additional legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. But as it is now it is discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. TOWNER. If the Secretary of the Treasury will act without further instructions——

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I am in favor of a resolution or whatever will make him act.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. Can the gentleman inform me whether or not it is a fact that the War Finance Corporation on the 1st of June practically wound up its affairs and settled its accounts with the Treasury Department, and, if so, if this legislation is to be used in the future, then additional appropriation or legislation would be necessary?

Mr. TOWNER. I can not answer that. My judgment is that is just simply ceased to operate. I do not have any information as to whether it has wound up its affairs or not. I would be rather inclined to the opinion that it has not, but that it has simply ceased to operate.

Mr. STEELE. It has ceased to operate, and, as I understand it, its revolving fund which it had in hand has been exhausted.

Mr. TOWNER. I do not know about that. I do not know that we have any authentic information in regard to it. At least I have not.

Mr. STEELE. It is more for information that I am asking the question, for I have been informed to that effect.

Mr. TOWNER. I could not give the gentleman the information he desires, because I do not know myself.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the amendment which I offered a moment ago, if passed by this body, will, with the passage of this resolution, repeal the Lever Act and the amendment to the same of 1919, except that part of the amendment which relates to rents in the District of Columbia, and which is contained in title 2 of the amendment. It has been suggested here to-day by the able chairman of the Judiciary Committee that in repealing the Lever Act we would repeal the profiteering statute. As far as wholesome results flowing from any profiteering statute, we had as well be without such a law as it certainly can not be contended by any gentleman in this House that profiteering has been prevented by law since the close of the war. If you will look at the price of shoes, of coal, of food, or if you will consider what the price of sugar and cotton has been at times since the close of the war, you will agree with me that the profiteer has not feared in the least the profiteering section of the Lever Act. I have not in this amendment asked the repeal of title 2 of the amendment approved October 22, 1919, for the reason that it deals with District of Columbia rents, under which a futile effort was made to regulate profiteering in rentals of real estate in the District of Columbia. The District Supreme Court has declared the law unconstitutional. I am not certain that this ends the litigation and therefore, since it does not properly come within the scope of the Lever Act, I have not asked for its repeal.

I want it clearly understood, gentlemen of the committee, that in voting for or against this amendment you vote for or against the repeal of the Lever Act as a whole. I voted for the Lever Act during the war, and I believed then, and I believe now, that it was wholesome legislation and necessary as a war measure. I have never advocated during the war that it be enforced against some classes of people and not against others. I want to state here without any partisan bias or prejudice that the present administration's enforcement of the law has not been fair and impartial. I believe there can be no doubt in the minds of fair men, who will take the pains to investigate the question, that the administration, when this law was up for passage, promised the leaders of organized labor that it was not their intentions that the act should apply to labor, and if it did, that it would not be enforced against them. I want to frankly state to you that if it was not intended to be enforced against labor, labor should have been exempted in the bill itself, and had I been responsible for the attitude of the administration toward the enforcement of the Lever Act in time of war no man or set of men could have obtained a promise from me that any class of men, whether they be coal miners, railroaders, or what not, would have been exempted in event they violated its provisions. But I am complaining of an administration that goes so far as to promise to a given class immunity from prosecution, even during the war when the life of the Nation is at stake, and then breaks the faith to the extent of prosecuting this same class of men long after the war is over and war needs have ceased.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. After the people of the United States have punished the administration for not applying the law equally to everyone in the country, does not the gentleman think it is well to let the matter rest?

Mr YATES. It is judgment after death.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Many things as yet are unsaid about this administration that will possibly come to light.

I will call your attention to a few facts with reference to what certain Members of Congress believed as to the scope of the act at the time of its passage and as to the promise of men high up in administration circles as to its enforcement if it became a law.

Representative Lever, of South Carolina, as chairman of the Agriculture Committee, who was in charge of the bill on the floor of the House, made this specific statement:

> I am glad to face the issue squarely. If there were such a combination to strike for the purpose of bettering living conditions or increasing wages there is no purpose in this bill and there is no authority in this bill to prevent it.

Personally this statement did not mislead me, as I was indifferent as to whether it applied to labor in time of war or not. When I voted for the compulsory military service law, and thus took from the homes of the Nation their most beloved, I made up my mind that, regardless of my personal wishes or likes, I would stand for any kind of legislation regarded as absolutely essential to the winning of the war. But Members of Congress were deceived and labor was led to believe, if the law did contain an antistrike provision, that it would not be used as a weapon against them.

Mr. Herbert Hoover, in a memorandum prepared for Mr. Lever, June 22, 1917, at Washington, D. C., had the following to say:

> The labor representatives are very much exercised over the possible reading of the food-control bill to stretch to control of wages, and they suggest that an amendment may be made providing that the labor provisions of the Clayton Act should not be affected by the proposed bill. I understand that Mr. Keating proposed this amendment and it was defeated.
> It appears to me that there is no intention in the bill to interfere and I believe it might silence a great deal of criticism and opposition which might be raised in the Senate if this amendment could be undertaken. I do not wish to impose my views upon you, but simply to suggest that as it is not the intention of the bill to regulate wages, it might do no harm to satisfy this element in the community that they are immune from attack.
> Yours, faithfully, HERBERT HOOVER.

Mr. Lever, in an interview in the New York Times on May 20, 1917, had the following to say:

> Never was such a drastic bill drawn. The President has given his word that it is only a war measure and that it ceases to be in effect when the war is over. It is framed simply to safeguard the Nation's food supply for its own use and for whatever we can do for our allies while we are fighting the war out.

Parties interested in exempting labor wrote a letter to all Senators and Representatives urging that the following amendment be adopted:

> Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal, modify, or affect either section 6 or 20 of an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914.

Senator Hollis presented this amendment in the Senate and it was adopted. When the bill went to conference it was stricken out. August 6, 1917, Senator Hollis called the attention of the Senate to the danger of eliminating the amendment. He read the amendment, and then this colloquy took place. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Aug. 6, 1917, p. 6401):

> Mr. SHEPPARD. Does not the Senator think that, if necessary, such an amendment can be enacted subsequently as substantive and independent legislation?
> Mr. HOLLIS. I think it might, but I should dislike to undertake the contract of getting it through both Houses at this time. I think the situation may be so serious that the administration will have to take hold and insist on having it passed. If so, it will go through; otherwise I doubt if it could be put through.

On Monday, August 6, 1917, this statement regarding the right of labor to strike was made in the Senate. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Monday, Aug. 6, 1917, p. 6403):

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (Senator in charge of the bill). * * * Mr. President, there is not anything in the act, it seems to me, that would prevent labor organizations from peaceful picketing or the peaceful strike if they see fit to indulge in it; and while, as I said, I did not vote against the Senator's amendment, and I do not recall having been with the conferees when it was receded from, I would not have hesitated to do so in conference, because I think it unnecessary. It was insisted upon by the Senate conferees for quite a while and finally went out. I really do not know how many days it had been in conference before the Senate conferees finally receded. But, Mr. President, I have not any fear that in the administration of the food law anything would be attempted by the President or by the agencies which he has power to create under the act to prevent any labor or other organization from doing in a peaceful way all that they can now do under the Clayton law to protect themselves and their rights without any saving clause in the bill under consideration. It is not necessary in this bill in order to protect rights.

At a meeting of the Council of the National Defense held August 6, 1917, according to a statement by Samuel Gompers, the following persons were present: Secretary of the Navy Daniels, Secretary of Commerce Redfield, Secretary of Labor Wilson, Mr. Willard, Dr. Martin, Mr. Godfrey, Mr. Rosenwald, Mr. Coffin, and Mr. Gompers. The minutes of the meeting show:

Commissioner Gompers expressed concern over statements that had come to his attention in connection with the pending food bill, indicating that it was the intention of certain elements influential in its framing to prevent all strikes, and that it was intended that the enactment of the law should have that effect. Mr. Gompers stated that he brought the matter to the council for its very serious consideration. On motion of Secretary Redfield it was agreed that the matter should be brought by the acting chairman to the attention of the President.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, I quote to you from a speech of Samuel Gompers, made in Washington November 22, 1919:

After returning to my office August 6, 1917, I dictated to my secretary, among other things, this memoranda of the meeting:

"I stated that I had within a few minutes of the meeting been informed that the amendment offered by Senator Hollis to the food administration bill providing that nothing in the bill should be construed to be a repeal or modification of sections 6 and 20 (labor provisions of the Clayton Act) was defeated.

"The Council of National Defense and advisory commission adopted a motion that the acting chairman, Mr. Daniels, be empowered and requested to present the matter—that is, the Hollis amendment and the Lever statement—to the President at the Cabinet meeting to-morrow, Tuesday. Each member of the council expressed the hope and confidence that I need have no apprehension on that score. Mr. Willard arose and stated he was in hearty accord with me on my position upon the subject of the unwisdom of trying to make strikes unlawful.

"I should add that when I made my protest I also said: 'Gentlemen, I am not going to embellish what I am going to present to you or say an unnecessary word, nor am I going to argue it. I am merely presenting to you my protest, my apprehension, in as concise and plain a manner as I possibly can.'"

The same day (Aug. 6, 1917) I had a telephone conversation with Secretary of Agriculture Houston. My stenographer took down my part of the talk with the Secretary, as follows:

"Mr. GOMPERS. This morning while I was in attendance at the meeting of the advisory commission Assistant Secretary of Labor, Mr. Post, called me up and he stated that a Senator, whose name he did not mention, had made a similar statement to him in regard to the amendment of Senator Hollis—that is, that the labor provisions of the Clayton antitrust law should in no wise be repealed by reason of the enactment of the food bill, and the Senator wanted to know my understanding and judgment upon the question.

"I answered in two parts: One, that in my judgment it was not in good taste for either the Senate or the House to refuse to adopt just that proviso in order to safeguard the interests of the rights of the working people, and that there will be some considerable feeling on account of it. However, that since the Supreme Court of the United States in a recent decision had declared that no private individual or corporation could bring suit under the Sherman antitrust law, that it would devolve upon the Government if the Senator would make some such utterance in the Senate and base it upon the decision of the Supreme Court. I think it would be all right. In my judgment, of course, the needs of the country at the time require that the food bill be passed, and I shall not say a word about it."

Mr. Gompers in the same speech further said:

The telephone talks between Secretary of Labor Wilson and me were corroborated effectively August 8 when Senator Husting, with whom the Secretary had conversed, told of the statement made by the latter. Senator Husting's statement later in the Senate August 8 also clinches the fact that the President of the United States was quoted correctly when the claim was made that he had indorsed the statement of Attorney General Gregory by saying:

"That, after all, prosecution under the bill when it becomes law will depend upon the district attorneys, and that instructions could go forward and would from the Attorney General's office to the various district attorneys instructing them not to bring cases against workmen in contravention to the provisions of the Clayton law."

Mr. Gompers in his speech November 22, 1919, further said:

The next day, August 7, 1917, I had two telephone talks with Secretary of Labor Wilson, who called me up, one of them giving in detail a conference with President Wilson. Afterward, on that same day, I dictated this memorandum to my secretary:

"Secretary of Labor, Mr. Wilson, called me up, saying he was going to have a special interview with the President right away on the Lever bill. He said that after his examination of the provisions of the bill to which I called the attention of the Council of National Defense yesterday he was fully convinced that the interpretation which I placed upon the language was justified; that is, that it would make strikes unlawful and punishable by imprisonment for two years. He said he had made up his mind to try and present the matter direct to the President early this morning, and he had made arrangements for that purpose; that he would call me up after the conference with the President. At 1.15 this afternoon Secretary Wilson called me up and stated that he had the interview with the President and brought the matter to his attention. The President said that perhaps the language of the bill might be so construed as I stated to the Secretary of Labor, Mr. Wilson, and believed by him, but that yet it was with those who were handling products rather than those who were engaged in their production or distribution in the form of labor; that the situation with food products of the country was such that millions were being taken from the people every day unnecessarily and improperly, although there is not now a law to prevent it or to regulate it; that the need for the food-administration law is imperative, and that any effort now to have the bill recommitted to conference committee for the insertion of the amendment coming to be known as the Hollis amendment would delay the enactment of this, play into the hands of the speculators and exploiters; that, after all, the prosecution under the bill when it becomes law will depend upon the district attorneys, and that instructions could go forward, and would, from the Attorney General's office to the various district attorneys instructing them not to bring cases against workmen in contravention to the provisions of the Clayton law; that he believed it would be a wise thing to have the Hollis amendment presented and passed by the Congress as a separate measure after the food-administration bill has been passed and becomes law.

"I asked the Secretary whether we can count upon the assistance of the President in furtherance of such a bill. He said that the President would assist. Secretary Wilson then asked me whether I would help under these circumstances to remove any obstacle in the way of the enactment of the food-administration bill, and I said that I would.

"At 1.45 the Secretary called me up over the phone and stated that he was called up by Senator Husting in regard to the provisions of the food bill and the provisions in the bill which would make strikes unlawful. The Secretary stated he had talked with me and he had an interview with the President and the Senator expressed the view that he did not believe that the bill when enacted could be interpreted to apply to strikes of workmen, but that in any event the situation was such that the speculators had gotten ahead of the Government; that he believed it would be best for the bill to be enacted as it now stands and immediately pushed for passage, consisting of Senator Hollis's amendment. The Secretary told Senator Husting of the result of the talk with the President and with me, and that he believed that all objections would be removed to the passage of the bill, and he said he had already told him I would place no obstacle in the way of the passage of the bill with that assurance. He asked me whether that statement was correct as he had made to Senator Husting, and I informed him that it was."

During the debate in the Senate August 8, the following dialogue took place (p. 6481 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD):

Mr. HUSTING. * * * I voted for the Hollis amendment to the bill, which provided that the provisions of the bill should not be construed to prevent strikes or peaceful picketing or in any way amend or repeal the provisions of the Clayton Act. I would not favor the clause striking out this amendment if I thought it had that effect. I do not think it has that effect.

* * * * * * *

I was sufficiently interested, however, in the argument made by the Senator from New Hampshire, and by arguments already made upon the legal effect of striking out the Hollis amendment to inquire from those who will have the administration of this law in their hands as to what construction would be placed upon it by them in the event that it became a law in its present form.

I am authorized by the Secretary of Labor, Mr. Wilson, to say that the administration does not construe this bill as prohibiting strikes and peaceful picketing, and will not so construe the bill, and that the Department of Justice does not so construe the bill and will not so construe the bill.

* * * * * * *

Mr. REED. Will the Senator then say to us why the amendment which would have removed any necessity for construction, or any doubt, was stricken out?

Mr. HUSTING. I can not answer that question with authority, but I understand it was stricken out because it was not thought necessary or essential; that it has no effect whatever. I think it would have been wiser to have left it in, but it was stricken out, I understand, upon the argument that it could not legally be construed in that way and that it was surplusage or redundancy.

Mr. REED. Has the Senator talked with the Attorney General?

Mr. HUSTING. I will say that I have not. I have not talked with the Attorney General. However, I can say that the Secretary of Labor advised me that this was the opinion of the administration and the Department of Justice. He did not give it merely as a matter of belief on his part, but said that he was authorized to so state.

Mr. REED. Now, may I ask one further question? Suppose that a complaint should be filed in a court of the United States charging a violation of this act, and that the case was lodged in court, and the judge of the court should hold that under the charge made a violation of the law had occurred, is the Senator prepared to say to the country that the Attorney General has stated that under such circumstances as that he would nullify the law and undertake to control the court?

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I can not say anything further than what I have already said. I do not presume any United States district attorney will prosecute any person under this law contrary to the interpretation placed upon the law itself by a superior officer.

Mr. LEWIS. * * * I am advised * * * that the provisions we placed in the Federal Trade Commission act in the closing days of its consideration * * * to the effect that there shall not be prosecution of farmers' organizations or members thereof or of labor organizations or members thereof for any of the acts to which we particularly addressed ourselves as criminal concerning commercial bodies would exclude the prosecutions of which the Senator from New Hampshire had such a sincere fear.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, that is my belief. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Illinois that is my view of it; and not only is it my view, but, as I said before, it is the view of the administration, and I am advised is also the view of the Department of Justice and of every eminent and able attorney on the floor.

That a promise had been made that a separate bill embodying the amendment that the law should not "modify or amend or repeal the Clayton Act" is established in the following statement made in the Senate August 8 (p. 6482, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD):

Mr. HUSTING. * * * But it appears here from the debate that many Senators have taken the view that this measure does not modify or amend or repeal the Clayton Act. So the action of many Senators and their votes will be based upon the assumption that it does not so modify, amend, or repeal that act, and the fact that others do think so will have no other effect than to put their opinion against the opinion of those who believe otherwise. * * * If there is any division of opinion here upon the question of what effect this proposed legislation will have on the antitrust laws, let a bill be introduced embodying the Hollis amendment, and let it go through both Houses, as I think it will without much opposition, then all uncertainty will be swept away. But notwithstanding that this bill is not exactly as I would have it if I had the writing of it, it is necessary to pass this bill at once.

In the same speech made by Mr. Gompers, which I understand was delivered at a mass meeting held under the auspices of the Central Labor Union at Typographical Temple, Washington, D. C., November 22, 1919, he said:

Besides, letters from Congressmen were being received daily. These were all favorable to the contention of labor. One of the many that were significant was from Representative SYDNEY ANDERSON, member of the Committee on Agriculture, which prepared the bill. He said:

"It was, of course, never intended that any provision in the Lever bill should so operate as to repeal any part of the Clayton Act, and it was the opinion of those who drew the bill that it would not so operate."

Representative Joshua W. Alexander, chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, in answer said:

"As I read the bill, there is nothing in it which is in conflict with the provision mentioned in your letter. That was the opinion of the House at the time the bill was under consideration, and for that reason the Keating amendment was defeated."

The assurances of the President of the United States through Secretary of Labor Wilson, Attorney General Gregory, the Council of National Defense, Food Administrator Hoover, Representative Lever, and others were accepted as conclusive. They had all been corroborated in Senate speeches by Senators Husting, CHAMBERLAIN, Hollis, and others. Labor ceased to insist that the bill should be amended, and worked wholeheartedly for the passage of the measure. Not a doubt existed that the assurances of the Government officials would be carried out.

In a speech at the convention of the American Federation of Labor held at Buffalo, N. Y., November, 1917, Mr. Gompers says President Wilson delivered an address in which he said:

While we are fighting for freedom, we must see, among other things, that labor is free, and that means a number of interesting things. It means not only that we must do what we have declared our purpose to do—see that the conditions of labor are not rendered more onerous by the war—but also that we shall see to it that the instrumentalities by which the conditions of labor are improved are not blocked or checked. That we must do.

Thus it will be seen, I think, that it was not the intention, of the administration authorities, unless they were deceiving the leaders of labor, to change the provisions of the Clayton Act, exempting labor organizations from prosecutions even in time of war. I do not want to be misunderstood about this matter, I would have given no such promise, nor in time of war would I have exempted them, but having so promised it was certainly a clear breach of faith to use the law, passed under these conditions against the coal miner, after the war was over.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I would like to have 5 or 10 minutes more. Can the gentleman from Ohio yield me any time?

Mr. GARD. I have no more time to yield.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield five minutes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The gentleman from Texas, who insists that he is not only representing his district but the welfare of the whole Nation, speaks of miners who received $300, $400, and $500 per month. It seems that the men farthest away from the coal mines know the most about wages and conditions in mining districts. He has not taken into consideration the fact that some of these men who are reported to have earned these large sums in one month or one day may have had one or more boys, a father, or father-in-law on the same turn with him, and the money was all drawn under one name. I live among the coal miners, and I know that as long as they remain employees they are always poor men and rarely have anything laid aside for a rainy day. Occasionally when they get steady work and have favorable working conditions and a good car supply both in the mine and on the railroad they can make more than ordinary wages, but the mine is idle so many days from various reasons, and work is bad during certain parts of the year, and my friend from Texas would not then want to count in the skimpy pay rolls for these periods.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. No; I am sorry, but I can not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUDDLESTON rose.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I am sorry, I can not yield.

The miners struck in 1919 because they had a grievance that ought to have been listened to by some one. You did not need any Lever law during the war to control him. He voluntarily entered into the agreement with the operators at the request of the Fuel Commission to dig coal for 84 cents per ton and the price of coal for the operator was fixed at, I think, $2.85 per ton. When the war was over the operator ignored price fixing and doubled and sometimes trebled the price fixed for his coal. The consumer began to howl; the miner was blamed. The price of living kept going up, and yet under the Lever Act the miner's wage was fixed. The operator should have been compelled to have shared his profits with the coal miner. The only remedy the coal miner had was to strike, and then the Administration ruthlessly prosecuted him under a law that they had promised not to use against him, even in time of war. Strange as it may seem, gentlemen, notwithstanding the betrayal of labor by the administration, Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, supported this same administration in the late campaign. He had the right to give his individual support to them, but he should not have expected the organized toilers of the country to follow him back into the hands of those who had broken the faith so solemnly pledged.

Let us remember that during the war the miners' organization invested much of their funds in Liberty bonds. They patriotically stood for the country; no strike or threat of strike was heard, even when Government employees were striking. When the president of the miners' organization, John Lewis, gave out the statement with reference to the injunction and prosecution it rang with true patriotism. I do not have it at hand, but in substance he said that he would not fight his country and that the United Mine Workers of America was a law-abiding organization. And gentlemen of the House, permit me to say just here that I have always impressed upon the members of that organization, whom, as constituents, I have had the honor to represent, that the future power and strength of their organization depends upon their loyalty to country and their belief in obedience to law and the fundamental principles of our Government.

I can recall the day, Mr. Chairman, when the coal miners of the country for the most part were unorganized, and the wages they received and the conditions they worked under were pitiful, indeed. These men who go down into the dark caverns of the earth and daily risk their lives and limbs amidst the most terrible and terrifying surroundings have been and are now entitled to special consideration of the lawmaking bodies of this country. Had it not been for the power of their organization their homes would now be hovels of filth and illiteracy and a disgrace to this great and prosperous Nation. And had it not been for the friendly interests of the various legislative bodies and those charged with the enforcement of the law, the working conditions of the coal miner would to-day shock those who are interested enough to familiarize themselves with them. Until some agency of the Government takes it upon itself to provide adequate, fair, and sufficient agencies to bring about the settlement of disputes between employer and employee outside of Government employment, I do not believe I will ever bring myself to believe that antistrike legislation is either practicable or proper except in a time of war. I believe a study of the attempts made to adjust the differences between the miner and the operator in 1919 will convince any fair-minded man that a fair and equitable solution was never offered to the coal miner, nor do I believe at this hour that he has been given a wage commensurate with the increased cost of living or equitable in consideration of prices of coal.

In the majority report of the United States Bituminous Coal Commission to the President, submitted on March 10, 1920, the majority members, Mr. Robinson and Mr. Peale, contains the following paragraph, which is worthy of note:

We hope that there will be a decline in the cost of living in the next two years, but we realize that the miners have borne an increase (in cost of living) above their advance of wages, and consider the possible future decline in living costs as an offset for these losses.

The cost of living has advanced far in excess of the increase in the wages of the coal miner, and I am sure you will agree with me that there has been no appreciable reduction in cost of living up to this hour. Is it the intention of the administration to refuse to prosecute the profiteers in the necessities of life under the Lever Act and at the same time keep the law in existence to prevent the coal miner from getting justice from his employer and at the same time, through its constituted coal commission, refuse to recommend a wage equal to the increased cost of living?

My people, Mr. Chairman, have prayerfully hoped for a return to normal conditions. They have demanded that my legislative efforts be directed toward the repeal of war-time laws, of the discharge of useless war-time employees, and if this amendment carries it will empty some of our public buildings in Washington of a great number of employees who function under a war-time law, which, in my judgment, should have been repealed a long time ago. Some of my colleagues have said that if we were to include in this bill the repeal of the food and fuel act the President will veto it. He vetoed the budget system and the former act of this Congress repealing war-time laws, but this did not convince me that this Congress was in error in passing the legislation. We have our duty to perform according to our own lights, and the President of the United States must perform his in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience.

The Lever Act is a war-time law and can not be defended in a time of peace. To say that you want it to remain the law on account of profiteering is a mere subterfuge. It is cowardly to refuse to face the strike question on its merits. We are only at war theoretically. One of these days we will not only be actually at peace with the Central Powers but we will be legally and theoretically at peace with them. The Lever Act can not stand in the way of the economic rights and practices then. Why should this Government longer hide behind a law passed for war-time purposes only? Let us meet the issues squarely; right and justice will eventually triumph in this great Republic, and we will not be required to hang our hopes for orderly representative government upon false pretences and strained constructions and misapplications of the law. If the security of the Government of the fathers depends upon a state of war perpetually existing, we should find it out now.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall offer two amendments, one to strike out the exception of the Lever Food Control Act altogether and the other to leave that act in force except so far as it may have application to combinations of working people to better their wages and conditions or to protect existing wages and conditions.

The war has been over for two years. These war measures were passed hurriedly. They contain many illy considered provisions. The operation of all of them would be terminated more than a year ago except for the personal spleen, malice, obstinacy, pride, dunderheadedness ,and sheer malstatesmanship which has prevented the technical and legal termination of the war. These laws by their terms were limited to the war, which ought to have been settled a year or more ago.

The operation of all of these laws ought to be ended, and I would vote to terminate all of them, but I am specially interested in this Lever Food Control Act, and more particularly in section 4 thereof, because as a Member of Congress I was induced to vote for that law by false pretenses and false promises. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] has stated a good deal of the facts in connection with that matter, but there are other details as are well known to me which present a still stronger case of a pledge of national faith, a pledge that was grossly violated by the action which the Department of Justice took in connection with the miners' strike.

The food control act touches not merely the coal miners, but applies to railroad employees and every man connected with the production, distribution, transportation, or storage of food and fuel, natural gas, fertilizer, and other things, all necessaries of life. The governmental pledge of faith, so far as an honorable Government can pledge its faith, that this law was not intended to apply and would not be enforced against workers who in good faith agreed with each other to quit work in order to better their condition or to preserve their existing condition, was violated.

I was induced to support this law upon the faith of these false promises, and therefore I am specially interested in its termination. Some of the promises to which I refer were made here on the floor of the House, and I am sure if the gentlemen who made them were here to-day they would say that this law ought to be repealed because the spirit and purpose of it has been violated.

And I am furthermore interested in dealing with this law and terminating its possibilities for harm because of the fact that under it was perpetrated the greatest judicial atrocity in the history of American jurisprudence, the greatest abuse of judicial power and of administrative discretion. Under this law a farcical court proceeding was conducted which has done more to undermine the faith of a great many patriotic people of the United States in their Government than any other one thing that has occurred within a generation. Enough of such governmental blunders would destroy the faith of the people in their institutions. They would tend to destroy our country. I love our country and I want to make it impossible for such atrocities to be committed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to send my amendments forward and have them read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments by Mr. HUDDLESTON: Page 2, line 12, after the words "to wit," strike out all down to the words "October 22, 1919," where same appear in line 18, page 2. Second amendment, page 3, line 3, at the end of the resolution, insert the following proviso: "Provided, however, That this resolution shall apply to and affect in all respects as though there were no exceptions herein subdivisions A, B, C, and D of section 4 of said act, approved August 10, 1917, as amended, the same being entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the amendments.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ].

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, during the war Congress enacted into law more than 20 measures designed to aid the Government in the prosecution of the war. Some of these laws are permanent in nature, others terminate at certain dates after the conclusion of the war, whilst others are for the duration of the war. Of this latter class is the law commonly known as the Lever Act. It was designed to regulate the price, transportation, and distribution of food and fuel. At the request of the President and the Attorney General Congress amended the original act, in order to afford to the Government greater power in its effort to reduce the cost of living and to punish profiteers. In the light of experience we now know that very little good and much harm has come from this legislation.

The joint resolution under consideration does not undertake to repeal any law, but does provide that in the interpretation of any provision relating to the termination of the war or of the present existing emergency in acts of Congress the date of such termination of the war shall be deemed to be the very day on which the resolution becomes effective.

The measure now before us is designed to take the place of a presidential proclamation declaring the war ended so far, and so far only, as relates to emergency legislation. The resolution as originally prepared and as reported from the House Committee on the Judiciary exempts from its operation the Lever law. In other words, if the resolution shall pass in its present form, the Lever law will remain on the statute books.

The records of the Judiciary Committee will show a motion made by me to strike out the exemption referred to in order that the Lever law might be repealed. This motion failed by a vote of 8 to 6. A Member has now renewed the motion and I rise to give support to that motion. Although the war with the Germans has been ended for more than two years, yet we are still technically at war. This anomalous situation is due to the want of action on the part of the President, who has not seen fit to declare the war ended. What the President will do with the resolution should Congress send it to him for his approval I do not know. I feel, however, that we should discharge our duty as we understand it to be, and whatever consequences may flow from the action or want of action on the part of the Executive can not be laid at our door.

To my mind, the resolution ought to comprehend the Lever Act. The cost of administering the Lever law is tremendous. Thousands of agents of the Department of Justice have been going over the country engaged in looking up facts and in fruitless effort to prosecute profiteers. The people of nearly all classes have been harassed and annoyed. Very little, if any, relief has been afforded. The only law applicable to the cases that were intended to be remedied by this act is the natural law of supply and demand. An artificial law, such as the Lever Act, passed as a war measure, has no place on our statute books in time of peace.

During the campaign, on the stump, we promised the people relief from these war laws. Are we going to fulfill our promise?

We promised the people we would cut down the expense of Government. Are we going to keep that promise? If so, there is no better time to begin than right now, and no better subject to operate on than the Lever Act, thereby relieving the people of the cost of the salaries and expenses of thousands of employees, and unnecessary annoyance.

We are facing a deficit in the Treasury of two and a half billions of dollars. The administration is borrowing money at 6 per cent interest. The interest on Liberty and Victory loan bonds amounts to a billion dollars a year. The cost of maintaining the 20,000 men at Coblenz guarding the bridgehead is about $350,000 per day. The Secretary of War has recruited an army far in excess of the number intended by Congress.

In these circumstances I shall feel it my duty to vote for the amendment. The utter futility of the Lever law was demonstrated in the case of the Indianapolis injunction, which was not obeyed in spirit, perhaps not in letter. Instead of serving to palliate the situation, it only served to irritate those involved and to aggravate and prolong the struggle, all at enormous expense to the Government and the people.

The time is now ripe, the hour has arrived, when the membership of this House should, as with one voice, vote to repeal not only the war measures covered by the resolution but the greatest offender of all—the Lever Act. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I trust the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] will not be adopted. I think the Lever Act and the District of Columbia rent act should be continued in force. It was said the original Lever Act was not intended to cover labor. I believe that was because no penalty was provided in section 4, under which the prosecutions of labor were had. Later, at the demand of the Attorney General before the Committee on Agriculture, a penalty was attached to section 4. The committee complied with his request reluctantly. It became a law as he had requested, and was approved by the President October 22, 1919. It is said that profiteering has not been checked under this law. There was some checking of profiteering while the licensing system under the Lever Act was in force, and in my humble judgment the licensing system of section 5 of that act should have been continued. Under that system those who imported, manufactured, and distributed necessaries of life—food products and others—were controlled, and retailers were also controlled, although by the provisions of the bill retailers were expressly exempted from the licensing section. But retailers were reached in this way: Licenses were issued to manufacturers, wholesalers, and to jobbers, and each license contained a provision that those large dealers should not do business with retailers who did not play fair—that is, those who were guilty of profiteering, for example.

In that way control was had over large dealers and small alike, and the execution of the law was in a large measure effective. Unfortunately, as I believe, the President, by proclamation, set aside the licensing. When the Attorney General was before the Committee on Agriculture asking that a penalty be provided in section 4, he was urged to reestablish a licensing system which had been so effective. He was opposed to it. He wished to have a penalty provided in section 4, so his only way of proceeding against profiteers or those who in any way had violated or were considered violators of the food control act might be arrested and prosecuted. It was pointed out by the committee to the Attorney General at the time that these occasional arrests and prosecutions, although they might be effective in particular cases, would be few and far between, and that he would make very little progress in checking profiteering or in correcting business abuses. But we all know the circumstances under which the Attorney General's office was functioning at that time. As was unkindly charged then, and has been charged since, there seemed to be an effort by that department to attract attention by arrests and prosecutions instead of proceeding in the quiet and dignified way that had been so effective under the licensing system. If this law is retained on the books, the licensing system can be reestablished, and, in my humble judgment, can be made effective, and is the only means that can be effectively employed. The Congress should not, as proposed by these amendments, repeal the only law under which an attempt at least can be made to check or prevent profiteering. The law should be permitted to remain as it is, notice to all who buy or sell food products or fuel that profiteering is unlawful, and as a means by which an intelligent, active administration will be able—as I believe it will be able—to help business and at the same time protect consumers against extortion and evil practices.

I should hate to see the District rent law repealed. It will expire by operation of law, without a proclamation of the President or action of Congress, in October, 1921.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I probably will not take the entire time which has been allotted to me.

I want to explain just one feature of this proposition, and that is the feature exempting from repeal the War Finance Corporation act. I shall not undertake to explain the act creating the corporation. I believe it was generally understood among Members of the House that the purpose of that organization was to facilitate export commerce, and especially to render assistance to those desiring to export to Europe, and more particularly to those countries that are not in the best financial condition. Recently there has come a very earnest and general demand on the part of agricultural exporters to have the activities of this organization revived.

Some time ago, as is I suppose understood, the War Finance Corporation ceased to operate and its available capital was covered into the Treasury. At this particular time a resolution is pending in the Senate and a similar resolution has been introduced in the House directing the Secretary of the Treasury to revive and put into operation this corporation. I offered the amendment in the Committee on the Judiciary to include this act among the exemptions. It seems to me that it is important that we should hold this exemption in this resolution now, both because the act ought to be left in effect and because we ought now to express the judgment of the House that the activities of the War Finance Corporation should be speedily resumed. An effort is being made now to have the Secretary of the Treasury revive this corporation and put it into operation.

If we, in the enactment of this legislation, repeal the law creating the corporation, it would be a legislative suggestion to the Secretary of the Treasury that it is the judgment of the Congress that that corporation ought not to be put in active operation. Personally, I wish there was some way we could get a record vote on this proposition. Anything like an expression of unanimous judgment on the part of the House, which I am sure we could get, might not be disregarded by the Secretary of the Treasury. In that way we might get quicker action than if we have to wait the passage of the resolution through the regular legislative channels.

That, gentlemen, is the only statement that I have to make about this proposition. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GARD. How much time does the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back two minutes. How much time did the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. GARD. Ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from Texas yields back seven minutes. He used three minutes.

Mr. GARD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, it will give me great pleasure to support this resolution. I think it is a wise measure, a measure in the interest of the business of the country, and one that ought to have been passed some time ago.

In the interest of truth and the correct history of this legislation I want to call the attention of the House to a few facts. A provision similar to this resolution was embraced in what was known as the Porter peace resolution, which passed the House on April 9 of this year. On that day I offered a substitute for the Porter resolution, not for any section in it, but for the whole resolution, which was in substance the same as the pending resolution. It omitted the provisions of the Porter resolution declaring peace and simply repealed the war legislation.

Those of us on this side of the aisle who spoke in favor of my substitute called the attention of the House to the fact that the peace resolution was unconstitutional and that the House was assuming functions and powers that did not belong to it, but were confided by the Constitution to the executive department of the Government. We pointed out that there was a growing need in the country and an insistent demand for the repeal of war legislation, and that if the House passed the substitute which I offered, it would soon become a law. The substitute lost by a vote of 222 to 171. My recollection is that all of the majority Members except two voted against it. That substitute was the first occasion upon which a resolution was offered and voted upon repealing war legislation. The Democrats voted for the substitute almost solidly.

The Porter resolution, which contained a provision similar to the pending resolution, was then passed by the House, but the main purpose of the Porter resolution was not to repeal war legislation—that was a mere incident—but to declare peace by joint resolution of Congress, a thing Congress did not have the constitutional power to do.

This matter again came before the House on May 21, when we had under consideration the Knox resolution, which, in an amended form, had the same purposes as the Porter resolution. The Democrats again took the position that it was very important to repeal war laws and that a resolution doing that should not be encumbered and destroyed by being put in as a section of an unconstitutional and abortive resolution declaring peace by Congress. Our advice was disregarded, and the Knox resolution passed the House and went to the President and was vetoed, as everyone who had studied the question knew it would be.

Again an attempt was made on the 28th of May to pass this resolution over the President's veto, but it failed. On the 1st of June for the first time a resolution was brought in by that side of the House repealing the war legislation. This resolution was the same in effect as the one I had brought before the House on April 9. If the Republicans had voted for my resolution, this legislation would have been repealed nearly two months before the resolution which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] introduced could have been voted upon. That resolution passed the House on the 3d of June and passed the Senate with amendments on the 4th of June, and later on the 4th of June the Senate amendments were agreed to by the House, but it got to the President too late to be acted upon by him, as Congress adjourned at 4 p. m. on June 5. The result was that it did not become a law.

I am glad that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] has introduced his resolution again. If he had followed the suggestions made by the Democrats, this resolution or its substance would have become law eight months ago. But they encumbered this resolution with unconstitutional provisions relating to a declaration of peace, and so the country has been living under these burdensome laws for the past eight months, which have greatly depressed and distressed agriculture and every other business interest in the country.

The responsibility for this is upon the Republican Party. That party should have voted for my resolution or it should have stayed here until the Volstead resolution became law and not adjourned Congress on June 5 with all of the burdensome war laws upon the statute books. [Applause.]

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MCKEOWN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, unfortunately sometimes I have an awkward way of expressing my thoughts. In the general debate, in reply to a question, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] said that he did not think that during peace times the right of free speech should be interfered with. I do not think the right of free speech should be interfered with when it is within the meaning of the words "free speech," as intended and used in the Constitution, but I want here and now to voice my sentiments by saying I am opposed to permitting these men who before this war went through this country, back in the rural districts, where there could be no surveillance, where there was no surveillance, and ridiculed and abused our Government and our form of government. I do not want to throw any needless protection around the officials who enforce the law. The chief trouble with the war-time legislation was not with the law itself, but the manner in which the law was enforced in many places. Officials in some instances going beyond the law and employing high-handed methods, and thus brought the law into disrespect. But I say if the repeal of the war-time legislation is going to permit our going back to the days when I heard men in the open streets absolutely talk about our flag as if it were a rag, and abuse our form of government under the license of free speech—I say, sirs, under the Constitution the right to use free speech should not give the right to destroy the Government or attempt to destroy it, and I am opposed to the repeal of any legislation that will permit men of this character to go unrestrained and unchecked. Many of them have escaped just punishment.

Many of them have gotten out of the penitentiaries, and they will return to the forum again and abuse this Government. Many of them are not foreigners. Some of them native-born Americans, and I for one want to go on record as saying that I am opposed to any legislation that will permit them again to return to their habits of speech in which they indulged before the war.

Gentlemen, you talk about the miners and the men who control the mines, and about the repeal of the laws regulating profiteering. I want to tell you now the thing, in my judgment, that is the matter with America. There are two classes. One class are the avaricious and greedy, who want to take more than a fair share of profit. The others are the men who are loafing on the job. A square day's work for a square day's pay is what the United States needs now. [Applause.] My friends, you talk about repealing this profiteering law. Why, you know that the conditions that exist in this country are these: The men who live on the farms, the men who produce the food of this country, who answered to the call of the country when they were asked to produce the food to feed our soldiers and our allies, were compelled to pay enormous prices for the things that went to make up their necessary equipment on the farms. When the war ended suddenly by the armistice the war contractor found his contracts broken or his deliveries stopped. He came to Congress and we paid him his losses. We passed a law to make up the amount that he would stand to lose. But here are the cattlemen and the wheat men and the cotton men who produced the food and clothing. When they appealed to the Government to help them in their losses, you said that would be paternalism and that they were not entitled to any consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WALSH: page 2, line 22, after the word "act," where it first occurs, insert the words "title 1 of."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I think if we are going to continue this war activity it should be confined to the particular part of the legislation that it is sought to use in helping to finance the agricultural interests in marketing their crops abroad. Now, if we do not exempt the War Finance Corporation from the operation of this act they will still have a year in which to function under the act as amended. Title 2 provides for a capital issues committee to supervise and extend jurisdiction over the issuance of stocks and the flotation of bonds of corporations. Now, as it seems to me, there is no necessity of providing that and permitting the men who are appointed to that committee to draw their salaries and exercise their jurisdiction on the business of the country, which has nothing whatever to do with the financing of the crops of the farmers. I believe that if we are going to exempt a part of the act we should exempt that part which it is sought to use for the particular purpose required.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Should not title 3 be exempted as well?

Mr. WALSH. Title 3 is the definitions.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Title 3 contains the provision for punishment for violations of the act.

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection to modifying my amendment by adding the words "and 3," so that it will read "titles 1 and 3."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman modifies his amendment as suggested.

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the gentleman in my time if there is any particular need of continuing title 2, in his judgment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I have not read it very carefully, but my impression is that title 2 never would be revived.

Mr. WALSH. It is the part of the act which permits the men already appointed to continue to draw their salaries of $7,500 a year. It would seem to me that if it could not be revived, then there is no objection to saying that it is not revived and that it shall not resume operations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with reference to the desirability of permitting the resumption of operations by the War Finance Corporation, I appreciate the fact that in most sections of the country the agricultural interests are suffering from a condition which perhaps needs relief, but I am wondering when we are going to get back to normal. If we continue these war powers and this war legislation, it only helps to keep prices up on the artificial plane which was created as a result of the war. As I have stated, this War Finance Corporation will continue for a year if it is not exempted from the operations of this act. How long is it thought that this will be necessary if we exempt it from the provisions of the act? How many crops have we got to finance and what credit extended over what period of time will have to be arranged for the agricultural interests or any other interests that may come under the provisions of this law? The committee had no information on that subject, and I believe it is a matter that ought to be handled by the appropriate committee of the House, and if it is an agricultural problem, the Agricultural Committee should report in a bill or resolution taking care of it.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. If I have any time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Do you not consider it more than an agricultural problem? Agriculture being denied its market, there is a cancellation of orders from all over the agricultural belt, the cotton belt, the lumber belt, and the wheat belt until it reaches the manufacturer.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana would have us believe that the miners have not been making $350 a month or $500 a month where they were industrious and would work. Let me give him some names and addresses of miners' wages. The Washington Post for Sunday, July 11, 1920, makes the following statement:

[From the Washington Post, Sunday, July 11, 1920.]

MINER MAKES $602 MONTH—ANOTHER DRAWS $264 FOR TWO WEEKS' WORK AT BLACKFIELD, MD.

CUMBERLAND, MD., July 10, 1920.

Joe Witoski, a Russian Pole, in the employ of the Atlantic Coal Co. at Blackfield, drew $602.67 for a single month's pay for digging coal. The pay for the first half of June was $329.04, and the last half $273.63, making a total of $602.67.

This afternoon Pat Flynn, at Meyersdale, drew $264 for two weeks' work in the mines of the Highland Coal Co., operated by Roy Bros.

In this morning's Washington Post is the following:

[From the Washington Post, Monday, Dec. 13, 1920.]

MINER EARNS $75 IN A DAY—MARYLAND COAL DIGGER DREW $382 IN FIRST TWO WEEKS IN NOVEMBER.

CUMBERLAND, MD., Dec. 12.

What is believed to be a record wage for a day's work was made last week by Dan Lytle, of Ohio. Lytle, employed at Kendall Mine No. 1, of the Anderson Coal Co., mined 33.17 tons of coal in one day. The wage rate is $2 a ton, with yardage additional, giving the man $75 for one day's work.

In the first two weeks of November he drew $382. Coal at the mine is shot.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not just yet, I have some facts I want to put in the RECORD. The gentleman is of the opinion that because I live 2,000 miles from Washington I am far removed from coal mines and coal miners. I have coal mines in my district and I have some coal miners as constituents. I want to say to my colleague from Indiana that if the truth was known fully as many members of organized labor voted for me in the last election and in the last primaries in my district as voted for him in his district. The best element of the miners and the best element of organized labor in my district stand for law and order. They believe in the law of the land. They believe in law enforcement, and they do not believe in any administration officers telling one class of people in this country we will pass laws in the Congress of the United States, but we will not make that law applicable to you; we will make it applicable to everybody else in the United States except you and yours. The best element of organized labor in my district believes that the law of the land should be applicable equally between the citizenship of this country without exception in any kind. [Applause.]

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment, I have not put in all the facts which I have. My good friend from Indiana—and he is a stalwart strong Member of this House, as was demonstrated by the fact that the good people of Indiana sent him back here in the face of an awful fight against him by organized labor—I want to say to him that when he says that this law ought to be repealed because some administration officers promised organized labor that it would not apply to them, and when the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ] says that the law ought to be repealed because, forsooth, the miners of the country absolutely ignore it, absolutely defy it, absolutely violate it with impunity, and administration officers pay no attention to the violations—when they say all that I answer them with the assertion that that very action on the part of certain Democratic officials in this country has caused the people of the United States to visit punishment upon the whole Democratic Party. If you gentlemen on this side of the House, my Republican friends, if you attempt to make a law applicable to one class and not applicable to another, the people of the United States are going to visit punishment upon you just as they did upon us. You have got to make laws applicable alike to all the people. [Applause.]

He says that the time is coming when you have got to settle the strike question. I agree with him. He has judgment and good foresight; he sees what is coming, but you have got to settle it right, you have got to settle it properly. You can not say when the people put a Congressman out of office that he can go out with a shotgun and keep his successor from taking his seat. You can not say that; you have got to say that when a man quits work he has a right to quit, and that when he quits work he has no right to tell anybody else that he shall not take his job. We have got to establish what is known as the American open shop here in Congress, here in Washington, here in the United States, and even in the great State of Indiana. [Applause.]

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PELL].

Mr. PELL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, this bill seems to me to be the beginning of the end of a real political disgrace. The work that we are doing to-day we should have done long ago. Of that I am convinced, as are all of us. The war has been over for two years, and yet we find that with almost 90 per cent of the life of this Congress over, we are now just beginning the work for which we were elected.

I am not much of a partisan, but I believe that we should have begun a year ago this process of repealing, not a certain portion of these acts but the whole system of laws which were devised on account of the war, and to have changed the system of finance. That should have been the first duty of this Congress. These laws were all passed on the assumption that the war was going to last a great deal longer than it did, and if this country had any intention of ever paying its debts it would be necessary to tax to the utmost and even to try to discourage certain luxury businesses in order to free labor for more urgent needs.

Now, it is quite obvious that very soon after the armistice was signed, as soon as it was clear that the war was not going to recommence, we should have changed to a system of taxation designed to encourage business. But that was not done. There was no change.

The United States was left to struggle under a system of taxes devised for conditions utterly different from those existing. For what reason was nothing done? The only reason is because it was thought that the indignant business community would visit its resentment on the Democratic Party which had passed these laws rather than on the Republican Party which had neglected to repeal them when conditions had changed and they were no longer necessary. That opinion is apparently justified by the last election. That kind of thing may be politics of a sort, but it is not statesmanship.

This view is evidently demonstrated by the fact that as soon as the election is over and the need of oppressing the people for partisan advantage is past we have this resolution—the first serious step toward reconstruction. You told us nothing could be done without a Republican President, and now in the last days of this Congress and with a Republican President not three months off you suddenly find that something is feasible.

I think you will find in the very near future that every Irishman in the country who has been promised that the Republican Party will free Ireland, every Englishman who has been promised that the United States will keep its hands off the Irish question, every Italian who has been promised that Italy would get Fiume, every Czech who has been promised that Fiume would go to Czechoslovakia, every laborer who has been promised that the unions would be put in the saddle, and every employer who has been promised that the unions would be thrust under their heels will come and ask that those promises be performed, and it will be a hard job to face, especially for a government by cabal with a policy of muddle.

I realize that it is a dangerous thing in politics to attempt any prophecy, but I am convinced that it will not be long before the laborer without a job, the business man without profits, the investor without dividends will have his fill of your Republican prosperity, and your policy of compromise, privilege, and regulation. It will not be long before the American people will not look on these eight years past as a time of stress, nor will they consider the day when an American dominated the councils of the world as a period of national shame.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I merely want to correct an impression which might have been conveyed by my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. He suggested to the House, as I understood him, that this amendment exempting the War Finance Board ought not to be included, because, forsooth, the committee that included this exemption did not fully understand the act. If that is true, even his argument destroys the point. We are not enacting that law, we are simply not proposing its repeal, in so far as this act is concerned. If, as my friend suggests, we do not understand the War Finance Corporation act, and do not understand the force of it, then we ought not to disturb it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What laws are we repealing by this resolution?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am talking about one now that we do not want to have repealed.

Mr. WALSH. We are not repealing any law by this resolution.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not want to repeal this one, and I do not want the Secretary of the Treasury or anyone to believe that in this great crisis in this country, when business is stagnated and it is the judgment of the bankers of this country and the business men of this country and the farmers of this country that the War Finance Board, if revived and put into operation, might be of help, that the House is in favor of repealing the act under which that board was created.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am much impressed by the arguments that have been made on both sides of this question. My friend from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] is sure that this so-called Lever Food Control Act is the greatest engine of oppression that any Congress ever inflicted upon the laboring man. On the other hand, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ] is certain it is the most futile piece of legislation ever enacted because it does not control anyone's actions. If one can believe both of these gentlemen, he will have to follow the logic of a Negro down home who was testifying in a court about an accident that happened on a stairway. He grew very much confused in his testimony. Finally the court, thinking he was not trying to tell the truth, said to him, "Rastus, tell the court just how that stairway runs, anyway." Rastus replied, "Well, boss, it's dis way: When you are downstairs it runs up, and when you are upstairs it runs down." [Laughter.] Whether this law did oppress the laboring man or not, I am sure I could not tell from the testimony offered here by those two gentlemen this afternoon, but I do want to say this, that I would never have voted for any law that put upon some executive the obligation of saying, "I recognize it is a law, but I will not enforce it." I would not have asked him so to do. I certainly hope no such situation exists. I can not conceive of an Attorney General of the United States saying, "I am going to instruct the district attorneys not to enforce the law." I would not trust anyone who would promise to violate a law, nor would I have voted for a measure superseded by a promise of some one to violate his oath of office. But let that go.

My friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who is always telling us why the Democratic Party was defeated in the recent unhappy election, says that that promise defeated us. The other day it was something else. To-morrow some other cause will be heard. Personally, I have a strong opinion about what defeated the Democratic Party. I think the people were in the same condition of those people for whom the Savior prayed when He said, "Forgive them, Father; they know not what they do." [Laughter.]

I am seriously interested in the exemption of the so-called War Finance Corporation. I heard it objected to a while ago because it was said it contained a provision for the capital issues committee. Because that provision is in the bill does not necessarily mean that it must be called back into existence. However, if it were, I take it there would not be very much trouble about regulating the issue of bonds, because nobody could sell them. The vital question is that the farmers and business men of this country are facing ruin. Markets must be found for our wheat, rice, cotton, and corn or the farmers are destroyed. The same situation faces the manufacturers and the business men. This War Finance Corporation has in the past afforded some relief; may we not hope it will do so again. At least I am not going to vote to close the last door of hope in the face of those whose toil supplies all of us with the food we eat and the clothes we wear. I shall vote to exempt the War Finance Corporation from repeal.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I should judge from the discussion that has taken place that there is no question about this resolution passing. One thing which seems to worry some gentlemen is the Lever Act, and there appears to be a desire on the part of some to amend the resolution in that respect. I want to call attention briefly to the situation as it exists in many sections of this country. I think it is true nearly everywhere in the farming communities—and that does not mean only the farmers, but the people living all through those communities—that they are suffering intensely because there has been and there still is a great deal of profiteering. When I drew the resolution originally I inserted the exception leaving the Lever Act in force, and I believe that if we undertake to put that out of business without putting something else in its place we will hear from the country in reference to it. We can not substitute anything that is anywhere near as effective, because under the war powers we can deal with local business and reach local trade, instead of only interstate and foreign commerce, which is practically the only power we have in peace time. I do not believe that during this period of reconstruction, when multitudes are suffering intensely, and believe that they are suffering because they are imposed on by profiteers, that we can afford to repeal the most effective remedy we have against profiteering.

My judgment is that we ought to exempt it and let it stay upon the statute books until we can get something else. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. Is not now the time to have the bill read?

The SPEAKER. The bill has been read.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I ask that the committee amendment be first considered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 22, after the word "act" insert "the War Finance Corporation act as amended by the act approved March 3, 1919."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment to the committee amendment that has been offered. Will not that be acted upon first? I offered an amendment to the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 2, line 22, after the word "act," where it first occurs, insert "titles 1 and 3 of."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment offered on the floor.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND of Indiana: Page 2, line 12, after the words "to wit," strike out all of said line and lines 13, 14, 15, and 16 to and including the word "thereto," and insert in lieu thereof the following: In line 16, before the word "entitled," the words "title 2 of the act."

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 45.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum of the House is not present.

The SPEAKER. It is clear no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 182, nays 134, not voting 115, as follows:

So the resolution was passed.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa with Mr. RIORDAN.

Mr. GOODALL with Mr. CALDWELL.

Mr. HOUGHTON with Mr. EAGLE.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana with Mr. EVANS of Nevada.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania with Mr. GALLAGHER.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, am I too late to vote?

The SPEAKER. Unless the gentleman was present he can not vote.

Mr. EAGLE. I was not.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

REORGANIZATION OF GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce to the House that to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal, I shall call up a rule for the consideration of a joint resolution creating a commission, introduced by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS], to investigate, consolidate, and reorganize the executive departments of the Government.

HOUSE MEMBERS OF INAUGURAL COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce as the House members of the inaugural committee Mr. CANNON, Mr. REAVIS, and Mr. RUCKER.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks on the resolution pending this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the resolution just passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have read a telegram from my colleague Mr. LANGLEY.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to have read a telegram from his colleague Mr. LANGLEY. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

ASHLAND, KY., December 13, 1920.

Felt so sure of a vote Saturday on the immigration bill that I made an engagement which I could not change so as to be present to-day. I regard the present flood of undesirable immigration a real menace to the country, and am earnestly for the Johnson bill. Will you not please have this message read to the House?

JOHN W. LANGLEY.

[Applause.]

SUSPENDING THE OPERATION OF WAR LAWS.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, in the absence for the moment of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, I move to reconsider the vote whereby House joint resolution 382 was passed, and move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to reconsider the vote on the joint resolution to repeal the war laws and to lay that motion on the table. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. EMERSON (at the request of Mr. RICKETTS), on account of illness in his family;

To Mr. SANDERS of Indiana (at the request of Mr. PURNELL), indefinitely, on account of illness;

To Mr. MORIN, on account of sickness; and

To Mr. RUBEY (at the request of Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri) for 10 days, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 14, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

203. A letter from the president of the United States Civil Service Commission, transmitting statement showing in detail what officers and employees of the commission have traveled on official business from Washington to points outside of the District of Columbia, fiscal year 1920; to the Committee on Appropriations.

204. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, transmitting statement of claims adjusted arising out of damage to private property from the operations of naval aircraft, fiscal year 1920; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

205. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting report for first four months of fiscal year 1921, showing average number of employees of the Naval Establishment receiving the increased compensation at the rate of $240 per annum and at each other rate; to the Committee on Appropriations.

206. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of proposed legislation extending the benefits of the naval appropriation act of June 4, 1920, to chief pharmacists and pharmacists in the United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

207. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting copy of proposed legislation needed for the efficient administration of the Lighthouse Service; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

208. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting request for early consideration of legislation upon the subject of marriage and divorce in the Canal Zone; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

209. A letter from the president of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, transmitting report of the death of Hon. George Black, member of the board of managers of that institution; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

210. A letter from the chairman of the executive committee of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, transmitting report of average number of employees of the committee receiving the increased compensation at the rate of $240 per annum for the first four months of the fiscal year 1921; to the Committee on Appropriations.

211. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting detailed statement of expenditures of the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture.

212. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting detailed statement of all receipts and expenditures under the war risk insurance act during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

213. A letter from the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting report of the commission regarding certain phases of the tobacco industry in accordance with House resolution 533; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

214. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting statement showing the name of each civilian engineer employed between July 1, 1919, and June 30, 1920, in the work of improving the rivers and harbors, etc.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

215. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of appropriation to pay claims for damages by naval vessels adjusted by the Navy Department (H. Doc. No. 917); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. RHODES, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 404) to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the year 1920, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1118), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15001) granting an increase of pension to Edmund Hishley, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CARTER: A bill (H. R. 15011) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to offer for sale remainder of the coal and asphalt deposits in segregated mineral land in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, State of Oklahoma; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. McCLINTIC: A bill (H. R. 15012) to provide for the creating of a national depositors' guaranty fund in each Federal reserve district, to be used for the protection of depositors in national banks and trust companies, and authorizing the Comptroller of the Currency to have supervision over the same; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 15013) to provide a preliminary survey of the Puyallup River, Wash., with a view to the control of its floods; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota: A bill (H. R. 15014) to prohibit for one year the importations of wheat and wheat flour, rye and rye flour, barley, flax, oats and oat products, cotton, wool, swine, cattle, sheep, and all other domestic live animals suitable for human food; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 14, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee continually amid the unrest of the world and the unrest of our own hearts seeking divine favor, looking for the light of divine revelation upon the duties and problems of the present time. We thank Thee that we are unsatisfied, that there is a goal and an inspiration within us that leads us to aspire for the highest and the best. We thank Thee for every indication that Thou art favorable to the highest and dost lead us to the best. Give us that devotion of spirit and that spiritual insight into the purposes of God that will enable us to work nobly and well in the sphere to which Thou dost call us this day. Let Thy blessing abide upon our work. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day, Saturday, December 11, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

EXPENDITURES, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a detailed statement of expenditures of the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

CONVENTION OF AMERICAN INSTRUCTORS OF THE DEAF.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the American Instructors of the Deaf, transmitting, pursuant to law, the proceedings of the twenty-second meeting of the convention, held at Mount Airy, Philadelphia, Pa., June 28 to July 3, 1920, which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 14461. An act to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes.

H. J. Res. 382. Joint resolution declaring that certain acts of Congress, joint resolutions, and proclamations shall be construed as if the war had ended and the present or existing emergency expired.

H. J. Res. 407. Joint resolution authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1920, on the 20th day of said month.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 34) providing for the appointment of a committee to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President elect of the United States on the 4th day of March next, and that the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. CANNON, Mr. REAVIS, and Mr. RUCKER as members of the committee on the part of the House.

INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT ELECT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Pursuant to the provision of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 34) providing for the appointment of a committee to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President elect of the United States on the 4th day of March next, the Chair appoints Mr. KNOX, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. OVERMAN members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

HOUSE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. R. 14461. An act to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

H. J. Res. 382. Joint resolution declaring that certain acts of Congress, joint resolutions, and proclamations shall be constructed as if the war had ended and the present or existing emergency expired, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PAY OF EMPLOYEES.

H. J. Res. 407. Joint resolution authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1920, on the 20th day of said month, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN subsequently said: From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 407) authorizing the payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1920, on the 20th day of said month, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSMITTAL OF EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In order that the Senate may be informed as to certain action taken by the Vice President outside of the Senate I am making this statement. At the Sixtieth Congress the Senate passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That no communication from heads of departments, commissioners, chiefs of bureaus or other executive officers, except when authorized or required by law, or when made in response to a resolution of the Senate, will be received by the Senate, unless such communication shall be transmitted to the Senate by the President.

The present occupant of the chair has held that the Senate passed that resolution in conformity to the clause of the Constitution of the United States which provides that among other duties of the President—

He shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient.

Certain solicitors of various departments of the Government have disagreed with the Vice President to the extent of saying that the resolution adopted in the Sixtieth Congress only applied to the Sixtieth Congress. Various departments and bureaus are constantly sending to the Vice President recommendations as to what the Congress should or should not do, without submitting the same to the President of the United States. I am holding that they have no right to do that, regardless of a resolution of the Senate of the United States; that the legislation of the United States of America originates in either the Senate or the House and that recommendations with reference to such legislation must come either from or through the President of the United States.

If the Senate is of the opinion that the ruling of the Vice President is wrong, there are a number of matters that can be handed down.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, as a matter of parliamentary information, do I understand that the resolution to which the Vice President refers applies to resolutions passed by the Senate and addressed to the head of a department?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly not. I read the resolution. It provides that nothing shall be received except through the President, unless in response to a resolution of the Senate or in accordance with law.

Mr. POINDEXTER. So that a resolution of the Senate addressed to the head of a particular department would be an exception to the general rule?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly. What the Chair has been ruling, and to which the solicitors of certain departments of the Government are objecting, is that unless the Senate calls for certain information, or unless the law provides that he shall give the information to Congress, if they want legislation here they shall have it submitted by the President of the United States. I think that is in accordance with the Constitution.

I call attention to it so that if Senators think the Chair is in error, the Chair may be corrected and hereafter hand these communications down. I have been sending them back.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I only desire to say, speaking as one Senator, for myself, that I think the Chair's ruling is absolutely correct.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McCUMBER presented a petition of the commission of the city of Fargo, N. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation giving power to the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix the price of coal, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. KNOX presented a memorial of Charlesville Grange, No. 698, Patrons of Husbandry, of Charlesville, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory universal military training, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of Washington Camp, No. 412, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Charlesville, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory universal military training, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of Bedford County, Pa., Pomona Grange, No. 24, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for a tax of 1 per cent on all real estate above the value of $10,000, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of The Neighbors, of Hatboro, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of maternity and infancy, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Club of York, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the public protection of maternity and infancy, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Crawford County, Pa., Pomona Grange, No. 26, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of maternity and infancy, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of Local Union No. 4716, United Mine Workers of America, of Lilly, Pa.; the Local Union No. 561, United Mine Workers of America, of Shamokin, Pa.; the Local Union No. 3519, United Mine Workers of America, of Bennington, Pa.; the Local Union No. 3772, United Mine Workers of America, of Kittanning, Pa.; and the Local Union No. 2295, United Mine Workers of America, of Curwenville, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the parole of Federal political prisoners, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland presented a petition of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Baltimore, Md., praying for the enactment of legislation extending the time for payment of Federal taxes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

CARE OF DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I present this case to the Senator from Utah: I am in receipt of a report made by the Joint Committee for Aid to Disabled Veterans, sent to me very much in the nature of a petition, and requesting that Congress authorize certain things to be done in the management of hospitals and in connection with the care of disabled veterans, and that certain amendments be made to existing statutes. The subject is one of immense interest to every man who served in the military forces of the United States and to citizens generally. Their request is that I present this matter to the Senate and ask that it be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I therefore ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What can the Chair do about the matter?

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go to a committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It can go to several committees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I present it, in any event, and ask that it be noted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The matter referred to by the Senator from New York, in the nature of a petition, will be received and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORT ON HOUSING CONDITIONS.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the select committee appointed by the Senate under Senate resolution 350 to inquire into the country's housing conditions and matters of fuel, transportation, and thrift as they relate to housing, submits a preliminary report (No. 666) thereon.

The committee has visited many of the principal cities of the country and has made a careful survey of conditions. It has found that there really exists a critical nation-wide housing shortage, brought about to a very material extent by interference of the Federal Government during the war. While helpful Federal action is necessary and should be taken, it should be in the nature of providing facilities rather than subsidies.

Profiteering has been rampant and must be eliminated, and the committee believes that actual costs of production may be reduced through improvement of national facilities, notably fuel and transportation. The committee believes that the activities of the Interstate Commerce Commission must be directed toward regulation of the railroads rather than of industry in general. Existing conditions in the production and distribution of fuel, a most important basic factor, must be corrected. Labor efficiency may be materially improved. Capital will invest in construction work when it becomes a paying proposition, unless driven away by taxation, which therefore becomes an important factor.

The committee is preparing and will soon submit and urge early favorable action upon measures in line with its recommendations, which are based upon careful study of the whole situation. Its present report is, in a sense, an introductory one. The committee has in course of preparation detailed statements on the various factors entering into present conditions, and more particularly for the preparation of the measures referred to.

I ask that the report be printed, with a report of Senators KENYON and EDGE, two members of the committee, which I file herewith.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably Senate resolution 392, authorizing the committee which has just reported to employ counsel. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 392) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution of the Senate, No. 350, agreed to April 17, 1920, authorizing a special committee of the Senate to investigate the existing situation in relation to the general construction of houses, manufacturing establishments, and buildings, and the effect thereof upon other industries and upon the public welfare, be, and the same is hereby, amended to empower said special committee to employ counsel, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there any objection?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I object to its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The resolution will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 4635) granting a pension to Charles F. Burleigh (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DIAL:

A bill (S. 4636) to amend section 5 of the United States cotton-futures act, approved August 11, 1916, as amended; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. FERNALD:

A bill (S. 4637) for the relief of Griffith L. Johnson (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 4638) to provide for the relief of certain officers of the Naval Reserve Force, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I introduce a bill sent by the Department of Commerce, to distribute the commissioned line and engineer officers of the Coast Guard in grades in the same proportions as provided by law for distribution in grades of commissioned line officers of the Navy, and for other purposes. It is to meet the views of the department. I introduce it so that it may be referred to the committee and have consideration.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 4639) to distribute the commissioned line and engineer officers of the Coast Guard in grades in the same proportions as provided by law for the distribution in grades of commissioned line officers of the Navy, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES of Washington. At the request of the Water Power Commission, I present a bill amending the water-power act, giving them authority to employ additional help, which they claim is absolutely necessary under the terms of the act as passed, to carry out the purposes of the act.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 4640) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to create a Federal Power Commission; to provide for the improvement of navigation, the development of water power, the use of the public lands in relation thereto; and to repeal section 18 of the river and harbor appropriation act approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1920; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. KENDRICK:

A bill (S. 4641) to provide for reimbursement for irrigation systems constructed on the Wind River Reservation, Wyo.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 4642) to increase the pensions of surviving soldiers of the various Indian wars (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 4643) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended by the act of July 11, 1919; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 4644) to provide for the establishment of Battell National Park, in the State of Vermont; to the Committee on Public Lands; and

A bill (S. 4645) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close upper Water Street between Twenty-first and Twenty-second Streets NW.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 4646) granting a pension to Maggie B. Sullivan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 4647) granting a pension to Laura Frazier; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 4648) to grant citizens of Washington and Kane Counties, Utah, the right to cut timber in the State of Arizona for agriculture, mining, and other domestic purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 223) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into an agreement to lease or to execute lease for hospitals acquired or to be constructed by the State of New York, or other States of the United States of America, for the care and treatment of beneficiaries of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 224) authorizing the President to invite foreign nations to take part in the Atlantic-Pacific Highways and Electrical Exposition at Portland, Oreg., in 1925; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REDUCTION OF NAVAL ARMAMENT—DISARMAMENT.

Mr. BORAH. I introduce a joint resolution which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 225) authorizing the President of the United States to advise the Governments of Great Britain and Japan that the Government of the United States is ready to take up with them the question of disarmament, etc., was read the first time by its title and the second time at length and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas a representative and official of the Japanese Government has advised the world that the Japanese Government could not consent even to consider a program of disarmament on account of the naval building program of the United States; and

Whereas by this statement the world is informed and expected to believe that Japan sincerely desires to support a program of disarmament, but can not in safety to herself do so on account of the attitude and building program of this Government; and

Whereas the only navies whose size and efficiency requires consideration on the part of this Government in determining the question of the size of our Navy are those of Great Britain and of Japan, two Governments long associated by an alliance; and

Whereas the United States is now and has ever been in favor of a practical program of disarmament: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States is requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to advise the Governments of Great Britain and Japan, respectively, that this Government will at once take up directly with their Governments and without waiting upon the action of any other nation the question of disarmament, with a view of quickly coming to an understanding by which the building naval programs of each of said Governments, to wit, that of Great Britain, Japan, and the United States, shall be reduced annually during the next five years 50 per cent of the present estimates or figures.

Second, that it is the sense of the Congress, in case such an understanding can be had, that it will conform its appropriation and building plans to such agreement.

Resolved further, That this proposition is suggested by the Congress of the United States to accomplish immediately a substantial reduction of the naval armaments of the world.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CORPORATIONS.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5416) to authorize corporations organized in the District of Columbia to change their names, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

I make this request for this reason: This bill has passed the House. I am advised that, perhaps at the previous session, a similar bill was considered by the District of Columbia Committee and passed by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

THE DADE MASSACRE.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, on the 28th of December, 1835, there occurred at a place about a mile and a half southwest of what is now Bushnell, Fla., one of the most disastrous battles in the history of our Army—the numbers involved on both sides considered. It was what is known as the Dade massacre, where an entire command of the Regular Army of the United States, except only three privates, was wiped out. The command was that of Maj. Francis L. Dade. The troops, composed of 8 officers and 101 noncommissioned officers and men, were proceeding from Tampa to Fort King, near Ocala, Fla., when a superior force of Indians, which was concealed in the palmettoes and grass near by, suddenly and unexpectedly attacked them; and although there were extraordinary courage and fortitude displayed on the part of the United States troops, they were slaughtered and only three privates out of the whole command escaped. Even that was almost miraculous, for they themselves were severely wounded and were supposed to have been killed.

There has been written an article on this subject by Mr. Fred Cubberly, a prominent attorney of Gainesville, Fla., and formerly United States district attorney for the northern district of Florida, who has visited the ground and studied the reports and the records and maps. I think it is due to the truth of history and for the preservation of our records that this article, entitled "The Dade Massacre," be printed as a public document, and I am offering a resolution providing that the paper, which is condensed and not very long, which, as I have stated, has been written by Mr. Cubberly, be printed as a public document, together with the maps and illustrations. These grounds ought to be made a national park and a suitable monument should be erected where this battle took place. I ask that the resolution may be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The resolution (S. Res. 406) submitted by Mr. FLETCHER was read and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved, That the accompanying paper, entitled, "The Dade Massacre," by Fred Cubberly, together with the accompanying maps and illustrations, be printed as a public document.

IMPORTATIONS OF WHEAT.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a short statement published in the Washington Star of last evening in regard to Canadian wheat importations into the United States. It relates to a most vital problem. I desire to call the attention of Senators to the pertinent fact that we passed a joint resolution yesterday seeking in some way to dispose of our surplus American wheat. I hope that some good will come of that measure, but I do not understand what good can come of it until we cease importing wheat from Canada. The article in the Star states:

Since December 1 the shipments have been remarkable. Within 24 hours 15 vessels laden with wheat left Fort William, Ontario, for United States ports.

In political circles in Ottawa there is no surprise at the unprecedented shipments. It is stated that "more than twenty times as much wheat has been sent from Fort William and Port Arthur, the principal Canadian points of shipment, to the United States, than was sent last year."

* * * * * * *

Reports a few days since indicate over 72,585,000 bushels of wheat received at elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur; 45,420,000 bushels have been shipped to the United States, and it is prophesied that there will be considerable in addition to this.

The 45,000,000 bushels already dispatched to Buffalo or other southern ports take no account of the enormous shipments that have gone forward since December 3, up to which date the records were available. Five million bushels still can be placed aboard vessels now lying in harbor, and before navigation closes Canada will have sent to the United States ports, through elevators here, about 56,000,000 bushels of wheat.

I call the attention of Senators to the fact that the wheat crop of 1920 in the United States is about 750,000,000 bushels. It will take at least 650,000,000 bushels of wheat for bread and seed for the American people. That will not leave more than 100,000,000 bushels of the American grain for export.

We are exporting, as I am informed, quite heavily at the present time, but if we could stop imports in a month the price of American wheat would be as high as it was a year ago, in my opinion, because there would be a shortage. If we can not do that, we shall have to take care of 200,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat in the United States, which will complicate matters. I present the article and ask that all of it may be printed in the RECORD, in the hope that it will reach the other House as well, which has original jurisdiction, or, at least claims it, in such matters.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator has read the substance of the article. At the last session of Congress it was decided that no more editorials from newspapers or magazines should be printed in the RECORD, and I ask the Senator now, in view of that fact, to withdraw his request.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, such articles are constantly printed in the RECORD. I could have read the whole article, but it is very short, and I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, so that it will not be claimed that any favoritism is being shown, I will now make it known that I intend to object to placing in the RECORD any editorial or articles from newspapers and magazines of any kind in accordance with the sentiment expressed by the Senate at the last session.

Mr. McCUMBER. As I remember, that objection was overruled, and during all of the last session, in the latter part of the session at least, there was not a single instance where anything presented was not allowed to go in. This is such an important matter that we will lose no time if the remainder of the article, in addition to what I have quoted, may go into the RECORD. I hope the Senator will not oppose my request.

Mr. SMOOT. I give notice that from now on I shall object to the printing in the RECORD of any matter from newspapers and magazines, and if such matter goes in it will only be after my objection has been overruled.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to give notice that very little attention will be paid to it.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be true.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has heard the same suggestion before. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

There being no objection, the article was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CANADIAN WHEAT IS RUSHED TO UNITED STATES—SHIPMENTS IN LARGE QUANTITIES DUE TO EXPECTED TARIFF LAW CHANGES.

[Special dispatch to The Star.]

OTTAWA, December 13.

Anticipating legislation at Washington which may either put an embargo on or considerably raise the tariff on Canadian wheat, enormous shipments are being made from Canadian points to United States points, particularly to Buffalo and Duluth.

Since December 1 the shipments have been remarkable. Within 24 hours 15 vessels laden with wheat left Fort William, Ontario, for United States ports.

In political circles in Ottawa there is no surprise at the unprecedented shipments. It is stated that "more than twenty times as much wheat has been sent from Fort William and Port Arthur, the principal Canadian points of shipment, to the United States than was sent last year."

OTTAWA NOT SURPRISED.

The heavy movements of wheat from Fort William to the United States have occasioned no surprise to Government officials here, in view of the approaching close of navigation, the possibility of a duty being imposed on Canadian wheat by the United States, and the fact that the wheat movement this year has been largely an over-the-border movement. This has been largely because the allied governments have not been in the market for Canadian wheat and the British market has absorbed but little of the Canadian product up to the present time. The heavy movement by rail from prairie points to the United States points, more particularly Duluth, was emphasized at a recent sitting of the railway board, when the request of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange for a ruling providing for the payment of the Canadian part of the international rate in Canadian instead of American currency was considered.

Reports a few days since indicate over 72,585,000 bushels of wheat received at elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur; 45,420,000 bushels have been shipped to the United States, and it is prophesied that there will be considerable in addition to this.

The 45,000,000 bushels already dispatched to Buffalo or other southern ports takes no count of the enormous shipments that have gone forward since December 3, up to which date the records were available. Five million bushels still can be placed aboard vessels now lying in harbor, and before navigation closes Canada will have sent to United States ports through elevators here about 56,000,000 bushels of wheat.

WATCHING WASHINGTON.

Canadian farmers and grain exporters are closely watching Washington. The Montreal Gazette comments as follows on the intentions of Mr. HARDING, Representative STEENERSON, and others:

"When the presidential election campaign was in progress in the United States and Republican speakers, Mr. HARDING included, were promising an upward revision of the customs tariff, one of the commodities mentioned specifically was wheat. That meant Canadian wheat. The Republican sweep which followed provides the opportunity for making good these promises, and there is no reason to believe that they will not be carried out. Competent judges of international trade conditions and movements in this country look for the imposition by the United States of a wheat duty amounting to 25 cents or thereabout. Their expectation is more than likely to be realized. Representative HALVOR STEENERSON of Minnesota, Republican, has already prepared to put before Congress bills which will provide, among other things, for a duty of 30 cents per bushel on wheat and $1.80 per barrel on flour."

MOVE MAY BE TOO LATE.

It is thought that any move at Washington will come too late for this year. Apparently Canada has been able to sell to the States on an even larger scale than this country sold to the allied Governments during the war. It is claimed in Toronto that there is nothing very unusual in the large shipments.

It was natural to suppose that, under existing circumstances, a considerable portion of it might be for sale to American dealers, but, on the other hand, it was to be remembered that in normal years two-thirds of Canada's export of wheat had been through United States ports. During the war this was not possible. Wheat shipped to Buffalo and other United States points, designed for export to Europe, might later be taken out of bond and sold to American buyers.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.). The morning business is closed.

ASSOCIATION OF PRODUCERS OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13931, a bill to authorize association of producers of agricultural products. It is the bill to which I referred briefly in my discussion of the joint resolution that we passed yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13931) to authorize association of producers of agricultural products, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, and that it may be read for amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator allow the bill to be read for the information of the Senate? Some of us are not familiar with it.

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That persons engaged in the production of agricultural products as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, or fruit growers may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock, in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce, such products of their members; and such producers may organize and operate such associations and make the necessary contracts and agreements to effect that purpose, any law to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, however, That such associations are operated for the mutual benefit of the members thereof, as such producers, and conform to one or both of the following requirements:

First. That no member of the association is allowed more than one vote because of the amount of stock or membership capital he may own therein, or,

Second. That the association does not pay dividends on stock or membership capital in excess of 8 per cent per annum.

SEC. 2. That if the Secretary of Agriculture shall have reason to believe that any such association restrains trade or lessens competition to such an extent that the price of any agricultural product is unduly enhanced by reason thereof, he shall serve upon such association a complaint stating his charge in that respect, to which complaint shall be attached, or contained therein, a notice of hearing, specifying a day and place not less than 30 days after the service thereof, requiring the association to show cause why an order should not be made directing it to cease and desist from so restraining trade or lessening competition in such article. An association so complained of may at the time and place so fixed show cause why such order should not be entered. The evidence given on such a hearing shall be reduced to writing and made a part of the record therein. If upon such hearing the Secretary of Agriculture shall be of the opinion that such association restrains trade or lessens competition to such an extent that the price of any agricultural product is, or is about to become, unduly enhanced thereby, he shall issue and cause to be served upon the association an order reciting the facts found by him directing such association to cease and desist therefrom. If such association fails or neglects for 30 days to obey such order, the Secretary of Agriculture shall file in the district court in which such association has its principal place of business a certified copy of the order and of all the records in the proceeding, together with a petition asking that the order be enforced, and shall give notice to the Attorney General and to said association of such filing. Such district court shall thereupon have jurisdiction to affirm, set aside, or modify said order, and may make rules as to pleadings and proceedings to be had in considering such order.

The facts found by the Secretary of Agriculture and recited as set forth in said order shall be prima facie evidence of such facts, but either party may adduce additional evidence. The Department of Justice shall have charge of the enforcement of such order. After the order is so filed in such district court and while pending for review the district court may issue a temporary writ of injunction forbidding such association from violating such order or any part thereof. The court may upon conclusion of its hearing enforce such order by a permanent injunction or other appropriate remedy. Service of such complaint and of all notices may be made upon such association by service upon any officer or agent thereof engaged in carrying on its business, and such service shall be binding upon such association, the officers, and members thereof: Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall apply to the organizations, or individual members thereof, described in section 6 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, known as the Clayton Act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret being absent from the Chamber when the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] made his request for consideration of this bill. The measure is so important and so few Senators have had an opportunity to examine it that I should have requested the Senator to defer its consideration until to-morrow, and if he had declined to accede to such request I should have objected to its consideration at this time.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator had made an objection I should have followed my request with a motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. The Senator, of course, could have made that motion, and I presume his motion would have prevailed, but I appeal to the Senator to let the discussion of this measure go over until to-morrow, merely for the purpose of permitting Senators an opportunity to acquaint themselves with its provisions and to obtain a clear perception of its purposes, and if enacted into law its consequences. I am not opposing the bill, because it may have such merits as to warrant its passage; but it is apparent from a casual examination of the bill that it modifies in a very material manner the Sherman antitrust law and seeks to prescribe a rule of conduct with reference to a large portion of our population, which is not to be applicable to other classes and portions of our citizenship. I have had time to examine, and that in a very hurried manner, only the House bill, and have not had the opportunity to examine the Senate bill. My understanding is that this bill seeks to legalize all forms of combination upon the part of agricultural producers—planters, ranchmen, dairymen, and fruit growers—for the purpose of enabling them to deal with their products in a collective manner and through the instrumentality of combinations and organizations. Not only that; it provides, as I interpret the measure, that they shall not only be permitted to combine for the purpose of marketing their products, but for the purpose of holding them for an indefinite period in order to secure higher prices, even though such action might constitute a monopoly or restrain trade or be destructive of competition.

Moreover, the bill provides that such associations may combine for the purpose of preparing their products for market, and also for the purpose of handling the same, and they may likewise "process" such products. The word "process," I presume, comprises all steps necessary to convert the raw materials into finished products. It would seem that a measure so important, which on its face relieves many of our population from the operation of existing law and legalizes what some might denominate as monopolies and combinations in restraint of trade, should receive the most serious consideration at the hands of this body. I am expressing no opinion as to the merits of this measure. Indeed, there is very much in the bill which appeals to my sympathetic consideration. It is a matter of common knowledge that combinations in restraint of trade and monopolies which have grown so powerful as to almost destroy competition have operated in our country for many years, notwithstanding the Sherman law, the Clayton Act, and the Federal trade law. It has been difficult to frame a law to meet our industrial and economic conditions and to curb profiteering and to prevent the formation of corporations which aimed at the destruction of competition and the maintenance of prices so high as to operate oppressively upon the people.

The farmers have been the victims of trusts and conspiracies to restrain trade and commerce. They, more than any other class, have suffered from unscientific, absurd, and repressive tariff measures which from time to time have been enacted by Congress. I have no hesitancy in saying that if combinations are to be permitted there is far greater reason why farmers should be permitted to organize for the handling of their products than any other class of producers. It is merely stating an axiom when I repeat that our prosperity rests upon agriculture. Jefferson, in his all-comprehensive political papers, pointed to the importance of agricultural development and evinced the utmost solicitude for the welfare of all who were engaged in agricultural pursuits. Important as manufacturing enterprises may be, they are not so vital to the welfare of the Nation as agriculture. Of course, it would be a narrow and incorrect position to assume that there is not a most intimate relationship between agricultural interests and manufacturing interests.

Our agricultural products are greatly in excess of the needs of the agriculturists, who must find markets for their products, both domestic and foreign. It is important that a domestic market should be developed for agricultural products, and therefore we are keenly interested in the development of manufacturing enterprises as well as all other industries that contribute to the material advancement of our country. I am entirely in sympathy with the proposition that the classes referred to in this bill should have fair opportunity to associate in order to "market" their products. If there is to be any class legislation, my inclinations would irresistibly lead me to extend preferential legislation to the agriculturists. However, class legislation is open to serious objection. This bill seems to be subject to the criticism that it is class legislation and seeks to extend benefits and immunities from the provisions of existing law to one class only of our citizens. There may be justification for such legislation, and yet I think we should have full opportunity to consider this question, and, as I suggested at the outset, determine just how far this measure goes, and in its operations just what results would be realized.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator allow me a question?

Mr. KING. Yes; certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senator if he thinks the action of the California Fruit Growers' Association, for instance, in advising the fruit growers to raise a kind of fruit which would be marketed at such a time as would not conflict with the fruit grown in Florida, would be guilty of an offense against the Sherman antitrust law; or if they advise, under the present situation, to withhold their products from market for better prices, or until the products have been sold in other sections of the country, would be a violation of any antitrust law?

Mr. KING. I think not.

Mr. McCUMBER. If that be true, then I can not see how this bill could in any way affect the question of the violation of the antitrust law.

Mr. KING. The Senator may place a different interpretation upon the bill before us than I do. The bill, as I construe it, goes further than the Senator's question would indicate. Certainly, there could be no impropriety in agriculturists doing the things pointed out in the Senator's inquiry. This measure, however, authorizes additional proceedings upon the part of the classes who are to secure its benefits; for instance, as I understand, the bill authorizes agriculturists to combine and to form corporations not only for the purpose of marketing their products, which are to enter into interstate and foreign commerce, but they may make contracts and agreements between themselves and between other corporations and combinations within the classes referred to, to "prepare" their products for market, and to "handle" them, and to "process" them. Under this authority it would seem that those forming the combinations and corporations and operating under agreements could withhold their products from market for an indefinite period. They could erect warehouses and store their products in order to force higher prices. They could form factories for the purpose of "processing" their products. They would be permitted to erect storehouses in which to keep their agricultural products, and warehouses within which to store the finished or "processed" products. These combinations or associations might take the form of monopolies, not only in production but in "processing," in handling, and in placing the product, raw or finished, upon the market. It would seem that the power of combination is unrestricted and subject only to the regulation, which is not very complete, of the Federal Trade Commission.

I suggest that under the first section of the bill the right seems to be given to such combinations and associations to fix prices for all products, whether raw or finished. There is nothing in the bill, it would seem, to prevent the classes referred to from erecting mills for the purpose of making flour and from withholding flour from the market for indefinite periods in order to enhance prices. I think it can be reasonably contended that this bill would authorize the manufacture of all sorts of products, from cereals to dehydrated and prepared and preserved fruits, as well as the productions of planters, ranchmen, and dairymen. The ranchmen produce meats. They would be permitted, it would seem, the right to build packing houses to care for their products, hold them in storage, fix prices, and form combinations that would be restrictive of trade and, possibly, destructive of competition. It seems obvious that the bill contemplates combinations and organizations to perform many of the things to which I have just referred, and it is presumed that such combinations would engage in such transactions as might restrain trade or lessen competition.

Accordingly, the bill provides, as amended by the Senate committee, that the Federal Trade Commission may investigate conditions where they have reason to believe that such combinations and associations restrain trade or lessen competition to such an extent that the price of any agricultural product is unduly enhanced by reason thereof. After certain proceedings are had, if violations of the provisions of the act are found, an injunction may issue to restrain further restraint of trade or interference with competition. It may be argued that this bill, therefore, legalizes combinations by the classes mentioned in the bill, that such combinations so legalized may restrain trade and lessen competition; providing, however, that the restraint of trade or the lessening of competition shall not unduly enhance the price of the product, and that if notwithstanding there should be such restraint of trade and lessened or destroyed competition no criminal punishment would result.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Just let me suggest to the Senator these questions: What is undue enhancement? What is a lessening of competition? How is the commission to determine these matters? Does not this involve the question of the determination of what are "reasonable profits," and does that not involve an examination of the capital invested, the questions of labor, and all cognate matters connected with the all-embracing question of production and distribution? I inquire, is there not danger in legalizing combinations in restraint of trade and organization to lessen or diminish competition? I further inquire whether this bill is not an attack upon our economic and industrial system? May it not be argued that this bill presages the entire repeal of the antitrust law, and the establishment of a huge bureaucracy under which all interstate business will be compelled to operate? If monopolies may be authorized and restraints of trade and the interruption of competitive forces be legalized by law, will it not be contended that a licensing system must logically follow; and, if a licensing system controlled by the Government is put into operation, will it not be earnestly insisted that all corporations engaged in interstate commerce must obtain Federal charters? Of course, it would follow, logically, that if Federal charters are to be granted to corporations the control of securities must be regulated by the General Government.

I venture to inquire whether or not this legislation may not pave the way for the Federal control of all lines of business interstate in character. Is that what is desired? Many have believed that there has been too much Government in private affairs and that the interests of the people would best be subserved if there were less paternalism and more individualism. This legislation is so important as to demand most serious consideration at our hands. We should consider the question as to the effect of class legislation. If ranchmen and dairymen are to be exempt from general statutes, and may form combinations, will not manufacturers and those engaged in mining and other enterprises claim like privileges? Will not legislation of this character lead to the complete overthrow of the Sherman antitrust law and all demands upon the part of the Government to prevent, through penal statutes, monopolies and conspiracies in restraint of trade and combinations to destroy competition?

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me, I do not like that section at all. I would have it out entirely, so that there would be no restraint whatever, because I think it is impossible for the agriculturists of the entire country, all of the food producers, so to combine as to prevent the sale of their products at a reasonable price. But the things which the Senator enumerated as things which might be contrary to the antitrust law are the very things which are being done and have been done for years by the California Fruit Growers' Association, and by certain dairy associations in the United States, and I have never known a time in which they have unduly enhanced the price of agricultural products.

Mr. KING. May I suggest to the Senator that I am advised a prosecution is now pending against the raisin combination which was formed in the State of California? I understand the facts to be, in brief, that the producers of grapes formed an association by means of which they control all of the grapes of California. They control the raisin crop, and they have advanced the price more than 300 per cent. They have a monopoly of the raisin industry, and so powerful is this monopoly that it fixes prices and holds the country, so far as raisins are concerned, in its grasp. Complaints have been made by the victimized public, and its activities have brought it under the eye of the Federal Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], but I wanted to get a clear and explicit statement from the Senator as to whether he thought that an advice given by all the farmers' organizations that they hold their wheat until it reaches $1.90 a bushel before they should sell would be against the Sherman antitrust law?

Mr. KING. I do not think so.

Mr. McCUMBER. If they obeyed it, it would not be contrary to the antitrust law.

Mr. KING. But let me ask the Senator whether, if what I have stated concerning the rasin organization should be literally true, he would justify its course?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think I would. I do not know the facts, but I know that for a number of years they did not even get living prices for their raisins, and if they should get good prices for a year or two I certainly should not object to it. I do not think that it is against the antitrust law if they attempt to raise the price to an extent that would cover some of the previous years' losses. But I do not know the facts in the case.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I am not on the committee having this bill in charge, and I do not thoroughly understand the purpose of the bill. I would like to have some explanation of it before we vote on it.

I do not know, from reading the bill over, whether it is a bill intended to further restrain the agricultural interests of the country from making combinations, or whether it is an attempt to liberalize the provisions of existing law. As I understand it, under the interpretation of the Supreme Court of the United States, the so-called Sherman law only restrains combinations where they attempt, by the combination, to so enhance prices that it creates a monopoly. The mere question of the forming of an organization does not create a monopoly, but subsequent to their organization it is the action of that body, as interpreted by the rule of reason, which Chief Justice White applied in one of the trust cases.

I do not see anything in the provisions of this bill which does not continue to apply the rule of reason to these organizations. I may be wrong. I am not on the committee having the bill in charge, and the object of my statement is to try to get light. After providing for a hearing before the Secretary of Agriculture, as the bill provides, and before the Federal Trade Commission, as an amendment of the committee will provide, it says:

> If upon such hearing the Federal Trade Commission shall be of the opinion that such association restrains trade or lessens competition to such an extent that the price of any agricultural product is, or is about to become, unduly enhanced thereby, it shall issue and cause to be served upon the association an order reciting the facts found by it, directing such association to cease and desist therefrom.

Where the distinction is between that clause and the interpretation of the Supreme Court in the antitrust cases I do not see, because the antitrust law, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, is bound down by the rule of reason, as Chief Justice White applied it in one of the leading cases, and it seems to me it was not the fact of a combination or an organization that was the important part in an antitrust case. It is a question as to whether the action of that combination is so much in restraint of trade that it has the effect of enhancing prices and is injurious.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I merely wish to submit this question, Does not the Senator think that the rule of reason, as announced by Chief Justice White, is involved in the very language of the bill providing that the price of products shall not be unduly enhanced by reason of this arrangement?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator refers to the first clause of the bill, which provides that under this act the price of agricultural products shall not be unduly enhanced. If they are not unduly enhanced by the organization, I do not see, to save my life, where they are in violation of the Sherman antitrust law. Then to make sure that it does not affect that law, I see that the committee proposes this amendment as a substitute for a provision which is already in the bill:

> Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize the creation of, or attempt to create, a monopoly, or to exempt any association organized hereunder from any proceedings instituted under the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, on account of unfair methods of competition in commerce.

In other words, the so-called Clayton Act, which supplemented the Sherman Act.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. In addition to the antitrust law to which the Senator has referred, we passed the Federal Trade Commission law. That goes further in one respect and covers one point that the antitrust law does not cover. That point is what we call unfair methods of competition. The object of this provision is to preserve that part of the law which we passed creating the Federal Trade Commission. The rest of the bill is substantially in harmony with the decisions of the court in the antitrust cases. The only difference is that here in the first instance a hearing is had before the Secretary of Agriculture or the Trade Commission, as the case may be. They pass upon the question, but that may not settle it. If the parties affected decline to obey the decision of the Trade Commission or the Secretary of Agriculture, they can go into court. The district court has jurisdiction and its jurisdiction will be as great as it would if a complaint were made under the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me, I am trying to get light on the question. I understand from the bill and from the Senator's statement that there is nothing in the bill which affects the position of these interests in reference to the Sherman antitrust law, that their position is practically identically the same whether the bill passes or not, but that the bill provides a new method of enforcing the law.

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is all it does?

Mr. NELSON. To a large extent.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If that is the case, I see no objection to it.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me further, we have in two instances that I can recall excepted organizations from the effect of the Sherman antitrust law. In the so-called Clayton law we excepted the labor organizations and in the so-called Edge Act which we passed we gave immunity to the corporations that were to engage in foreign trade.

The object of the bill is to allow the various farmers' organizations throughout the country to operate freely, without being directly embarrrassed by or having the Department of Justice hold up to them the Sherman antitrust law. Instead of giving them a free hand, as you might say, we provide in the second section that if they go to extremes, if they aim to enhance prices unduly or to create a monopoly, then the matter can be heard before the Secretary of Agriculture or the Federal Trade Commission, as the case may be, and after the Trade Commission or the Secretary has made a decision in the case it can be brought up in the district court of the United States and litigated.

Mr. TOWNSEND. How can it be brought into court?

Mr. NELSON. It can be brought by the association. If the association feel that they are aggrieved by the decision of the Secretary of Agriculture or the Trade Commission, they can bring the case into the district court. If the Secretary of Agriculture or the Trade Commission issues an order and states that they must desist from doing certain things that tend to create a monopoly, and they decline to obey the order, he or it goes into the district court to enforce the order. It is analagous to proceedings which we have under the interstate commerce law. If the railroads are dissatisfied with the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission, they can bring the matter into the district court and have it litigated.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In other words, as I understand the provisions of the bill and the Senator's explanation, the bill does not materially change the principles involved in the Sherman antitrust law as interpreted by the Supreme Court of the United States, but does affect the method of enforcing the law.

Mr. NELSON. I think the Senator is correct. In its principles it does not change the antitrust law.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Minnesota permit an inquiry?

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield the floor. I merely rose for the purpose of getting information.

Mr. KING. I wish to ask the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], if the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] will pardon me, if his last answer is quite accurate? It was, "In its principles it does not change the Sherman antitrust law." If this bill does not exempt the classes mentioned in the bill from the operations of the Sherman antitrust law, is there objection to including in the bill a reference to the Sherman antitrust law? I have just seen the proposed committee amendment, wherein it is stated that the Clayton law is not repealed. If the Senator's contention is correct, can there be objection to a further provision that the Sherman Act shall not be repealed?

Mr. NELSON. I do not think that is necessary, in view of the provisions of the bill in section 2.

Mr. KING. Then, the Senator thinks, if I understand him—and I am asking this question merely for the purpose of getting the Senator's point of view—that the Sherman antitrust law, in so far as it is operative, and I am not sure what remains in view of the decisions of the Supreme Court, will not affect organizations which the bill contemplates will be effectuated?

Mr. NELSON. Not unless the organization proceeds to create a monopoly or proceeds to unduly and unreasonably enhance prices. That is the rule laid down in section 2 of the bill. If the organization keeps within the pale of that rule, it is immune from prosecution under the antitrust law.

Mr. KING. Suppose this bill becomes a law and organizations were formed under it and there was a conspiracy in restraint of trade upon the part of some or all of them to monopolize a part of the trade or commerce among the several States. Does the Senator think that the Sherman antitrust law would be operative and would reach such organizations?

Mr. NELSON. I think so.

Mr. KING. And that the conspiracy might be punished?

Mr. NELSON. I have not any doubt about it.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that the Senator is in error and that no such construction of this measure is possible.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator having charge of the bill whether he believes that under its provisions the cotton growers' association and the wheat growers' association and the dairymen's association and the fruit growers' association could combine?

Mr. NELSON. I did not catch the Senator's question.

Mr. THOMAS. I will try to state it in a different way. Assume that under the bill the wheat growers of Minnesota and the Northwest form an association; in the South there is a cotton growers' association, also formed under the law; in Colorado a fruit growers' association, and elsewhere a dairymen's association. Those are separate associations. Now, under the provisions of the bill, if we enact it into law, can those associations combine into one association?

Mr. NELSON. I do not think so. I do not think that would be a fair construction of the language.

Mr. BORAH. I did not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. THOMAS. The question was whether various associations could combine into one association.

Mr. NELSON. This is the question the Senator from Colorado propounds. There is an association of farmers in Minnesota in respect to the agricultural crops of Minnesota, wheat, we will say. There is an association in Georgia in respect to cotton. These are independent associations. The Senator's question, as I understand it, is whether these two associations, under the provisions of the bill, can combine.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; could they combine into one huge association?

Mr. NELSON. No; I say they could not. The language of the bill does not warrant that.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not find anything in the language of the bill that prohibits it.

Mr. NELSON. I do not think any fair construction of the language of the bill would embrace it. The language is:

> That persons engaged in the production of agricultural products as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, or fruit growers may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise.

They may act together, but when you go further and ask whether those associations can combine, I do not think that is within the scope of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I hope the Senator is correct; but, inasmuch as there are no prohibitive clauses, I am very much afraid that will be one consequence of it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. May I ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] if those associations combine for the purpose of having a selling agent to place their products in Europe, would it be objectionable?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know. That is another proposition. We passed a law during Democratic control of the Congress, as I remember, which suspends or sets aside the operation of all antitrust laws when it comes to associations engaged in international trade and foreign commerce. I have always had the idea that if those combinations were a menace and an injury to us as a Nation, they would be equally dangerous as an international agency.

Mr. KELLOGG. What objection could there be to combinations or associations of farmers for the purpose of having selling agents and better market facilities in the principal cities of the country?

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator is now assuming that I am opposed to the bill. I am asking the question which presents itself to my mind as one of the consequences possible that would bring the matter into disrepute in public opinion.

I will say, if the Senator from Minnesota will permit me for a moment——

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. I have been greatly impressed with the usefulness and benefits of the fruit growers' associations in California. It has seemed to me their very success—and perhaps that is the principal reason why the Nonpartisan League has never been able to effectuate any sort of hold in the agricultural and horticultural sections of California—and, I think, the efficiency of the citrus growers' association, taking that as an example, is due to the fact that it acts independently of the raisin producers' association or of the olive growers' association, and so forth. That their distinctive energies, in other words, apply wholly and fully to one product is the secret of their great success. If they were to combine, as they could combine under a bill of this sort, I think they would cease to be popular on the one hand and I am inclined to think that their usefulness would be contracted upon the other.

I can understand how a wheat growers' association could officiate and function under any permissive law that would benefit the wheat market, but I am inclined to think that, if in connection with that the southern cotton growers' association should form a combination with it, and then the fruit growers' association would come in, we would be face to face with an association control of agricultural products, and that then there would be a question of monopoly.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I had always supposed there was no doubt that this bill was intended to modify the Sherman antitrust law as to associations of agricultural producers; in fact, that is the argument which has been made in favor of it, so far as the letters which I have received are concerned. If I am mistaken about that, then I have been misled. However, I want to ask the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] a question. Suppose that associations of farmers—the individual associations referred to by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]—should do things which were in contravention of the Sherman antitrust law, could they be prosecuted under that law notwithstanding the fact that we should pass this bill? Would this bill protect them in any way? Does it give them any relief from the Sherman antitrust law?

Mr. KELLOGG. I think it does give them relief from the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. THOMAS. I think, of course, that is what is intended; but since the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States which imported into the phraseology of the Sherman antitrust law a word which was expressly excluded from it prior to its passage, I have been unable to perceive that it has proven very efficient.

Mr. BORAH. I am rather inclined to agree with the Senator from Colorado. I am very much of the opinion that nobody need be taken from under the Sherman law, for everybody has already been taken out.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no objection to this bill, Mr. President, that I did not urge when the Clayton law was before this body for consideration. I thought then, as I think now, that if we are to have antitrust legislation it should be effective, or at least that it should be so drawn as to tend toward efficiency. I did not think then, and I have never thought since, that we could pass an act which is penal and possibly criminal in its character and expect it to succeed when we exempted two great classes of the American people from its operations. We did that, and this bill is along that same line. I do not see that it changes that situation at all.

We have under the present law a prohibition against everybody and everything except organized workmen and organized farmers. They are especially exempted from the operation of the law, and, so far as that law is concerned, they do as they please. We have gone along three, four, or five years under the operation of that law, with the result that we have just as many monopolies engaged in other pursuits as we had before, plus these privileged classes, who, independently of this measure, can, I think, if they see fit, effectuate their organizations and under that law reach the same result. We are here now concerned, however, in legislating to meet an emergency. As I have heretofore said, both the public and Congress are laboring under a greater or lesser degree of hysteria, and we are therefore apt to do things which the judgment and the verdict of time will not thoroughly approve.

I have no doubt this measure will be followed by legislation placing embargoes upon Canadian wheat, Australian and South American wool, and a number of other products which are imported into this country. Of course, if we are going to embargo one or two of the imports which compete with something which is produced here, we can not very well deny the application of a similar prohibition upon other imports when those who feel that they are damaged by the volume which comes into this country ask for an embargo.

I can see in the immediate future when our Republican friends are in absolute power and pass a prohibitory protection law and then place an embargo upon all these imports, and when, in addition to that, the commercial treaties are revoked, as provided in the Jones navigation bill, that we shall become a nation of sellers; we shall promote our international commerce, and promote it very effectively and enlarge it enormously by insisting that we sell to all the world, but make it impossible for the world to sell anything to us.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just a word or two. I can not quite agree with the theory that the purpose of this bill is to relieve the farmers, the fruit growers, the dairymen, and so forth, of the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. BORAH. Then, what is the object of the bill?

Mr. STERLING. The object is—and I was just about to state it—to make certain that the Sherman antitrust law does not cover associations formed by those engaged in such agricultural industries.

Mr. BORAH. That is exactly what I had supposed.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; to make it certain. There are the fruit growers of California, for example; does the Senator from Idaho believe that they would be liable under the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law and that the Supreme Court would so hold?

Mr. BORAH. Undoubtedly if they should do the things which are prohibited by the Sherman antitrust law they would be liable under it, but this measure takes them from under it; it gives them a status of their own, fixes a different method of proceeding, and absolutely deprives the court, in the first instance, of examining into the question of whether or not they have violated the law.

Mr. President, I did not suppose there was a particle of doubt about that proposition, and the letters which I received were all to the effect that the fruit growers, the farmers, and others could not do business under the Sherman antitrust law. Therefore they wanted it modified.

Mr. STERLING. But they have done business as it is and under the Sherman antitrust law, and there have been no prosecutions, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. BORAH. There have been prosecutions, and they sent me a list of the prosecutions as a reason why they wanted to get from under the law. There have been a number of prosecutions.

Mr. STERLING. That is news to me, I may say. I did not know of any great number of prosecutions; I did not know of any prosecutions, in fact.

Mr. BORAH. When I said "a number," I did not mean a hundred or two hundred, but there have been prosecutions which have disturbed the fruit growers and the farmers. They therefore say, "We want definitely to get from under the Sherman antitrust law."

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho if there have been any prosecutions of California fruit growers or if any prosecution is now pending or if one has gone to the Supreme Court?

Mr. BORAH. I think so. Of course, Mr. President, in the first place, this matter, if the Senator will permit me, came before the Senate years ago in the nature of an exemption in specific terms of farmers and laborers from the Sherman antitrust law. That has been followed up, and now it is proposed not to exempt them and leave no remedy at all, but to exempt them and provide another tribunal before which they can have their hearings. If this measure does not exempt them from the Sherman antitrust law, the farmers themselves are being fooled, because that is what they want. I have a number of letters, to which I have replied on this very proposition, and which say, "We are in a different position from the Steel Trust and in a different position from this and that industry; we should never have been under the Sherman antitrust law; it was never intended that we should be under the Sherman antitrust law. Now, we want definitely to take ourselves from under the Sherman antitrust law." That is what we are now proposing to do.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, have not labor and horticultural and agricultural societies been taken from under the terms of the Sherman antitrust law by the so-called Clayton Act?

Mr. BORAH. They think that that exemption is too indefinite. The Senator from South Dakota stated the question exactly as it should be stated, and that is that they want definite and certain information that the Sherman antitrust law does not operate as to them; that it shall not operate as to them. That is the precise position of the farmers, of the laborers, of the fruit growers, and of others interested in this question. I do not say that that is an argument against the bill, but I do say that that is the effect of the bill.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly. Mr. President, my theory was simply this, as I have stated, that the real purpose of this bill was to make it certain that such associations could not be prosecuted under the Sherman antitrust law. It has never yet been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States that they are acting in violation of the Sherman antitrust law, and my proposition is merely that this measure is in the spirit exactly of the Sherman antitrust law as interpreted by the Supreme Court of the United States. The following language:

To such an extent that the price of any agricultural product is unduly enhanced by reason thereof—brings it exactly within the "rule of reason" first announced by the court. It is not a combination in restraint of trade under the Sherman antitrust law unless the result of the combination is to unduly enhance the price of the product or create a monopoly.

The last provision, being an amendment proposed to the bill by the Judiciary Committee, is as follows:

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize the creation of, or attempt to create, a monopoly, or to exempt any association organized hereunder from any proceedings instituted under the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, on account of unfair methods of competition in commerce.

I think that refers to the Clayton Act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. KING. If the Senator's statement is accurate, namely, that the bill which is now before us for consideration only brings agricultural associations within the rule announced by the Supreme Court of the United States, and that they may form combinations, and yet, under the interpretation of the Supreme Court of the United States, would not be subject to prosecution, what is the necessity of the bill at all? If there is any necessity, why not state that this act is for the purpose of requiring combinations upon the part of farmers to conform to the "rule of reason" as it has been applied by the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. STERLING. We were informed by the Senator from Idaho a while ago, Mr. President, I will say in answer to the Senator from Utah, that prosecutions had been instituted against several such associations; that they are in a state of doubt and uncertainty in regard to the right to form such associations, and hence the necessity of some law that will keep within the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law and yet give them the assurance that they can go ahead and form the associations.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. KING. If the Supreme Court of the United States has announced a decision, it is obvious that that decision will prevail and govern the activities of the Department of Justice; and if the Supreme Court of the United States has decided, as the Senator says, that such organizations would not be subject to prosecution so long as they did not unreasonably restrain trade, why should they apprehend prosecution at the hands of the executive department of the Government? If they should be prosecuted, it is obvious, under the interpretation placed by the Senator upon the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States and upon the character of organizations contemplated by this bill, that they would come out of the court without any conviction. So what is the necessity of the legislation, if the Senator's contention is right?

Mr. STERLING. They may come out of the court without any conviction, but it may be a long while before the matter is decided.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Answering the question of the Senator from Utah, I want to say that a number of persons representing dairying associations have appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. We were told that they wanted this proposed law for the reason that they desired to avoid prosecution, when everybody should know that the members of the association were not violating the law. We were told that the dairymen's associations of Illinois and of Ohio and of Pennsylvania had been prosecuted. I do not say that they had been made to pay a fine or penalized, but they asked for legislation to make it absolutely sure that they would not be put to all this trouble and involved in all this litigation.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. STERLING. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. EDGE. Right in that line—I appreciate that it is somewhat out of order—suppose they were guilty of an infraction of the law, and, as interpreted by the amendment that has been added to the pending measure, that they had taken some action that would be a violation of the Clayton Act. Then does the Senator contend that they should not be prosecuted?

Mr. GRONNA. If they were guilty of any wrong, of course they should be prosecuted.

Mr. EDGE. How can that be ascertained without a legal inquiry?

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator from South Dakota permit me to answer the question?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator from New Jersey is at all familiar with farming conditions, he must know that by the very nature of things it is not a possible thing for any agricultural association either to enhance prices unduly or to create a monopoly. It is almost an impossibility to do that. Now, why should not these associations be permitted to do business and to organize and cooperate when it is not possible for them to become a monopoly? I do not know of any such association that has ever been held by the courts either to enhance prices unduly or to be a monopoly in trade.

I have not had time to examine the bill thoroughly. I do not know that I would understand it if I did study it, but I hope that this Congress will pass some legislation definitely and positively authorizing farmers to associate themselves into organizations and thereby improve marketing conditions. It is a question which must be solved, and it ought to be solved quickly, because, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] said yesterday, there is a great deal of unrest in the country, and if we pass the right sort of legislation it will do a great deal to eliminate the disturbance and the unrest which we are facing to-day.

I beg the pardon of the Senator for having interrupted him at such length.

Mr. STERLING. Just one word, Mr. President, partly in reply to the suggestion made by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with reference to the legal procedure under the terms of this bill. It follows substantially the same kind of procedure that is followed under the law by the Federal Trade Commission in other respects. Opportunity for a hearing in court is given. A complaint may be made that such an association by its work is unduly enhancing the price of products in which it is interested, and hearing is had upon that complaint.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I desire to call attention to the language in line 11, which follows shortly after the enacting clause:

That persons engaged in the production of agricultural products as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, or fruit growers may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock, in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce such products of their members; and such producers may organize and operate such associations and make the necessary contracts and agreements to effect that purpose, any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

I ask the Senator if he would be willing to have those words "any law to the contrary notwithstanding" stricken out; and if not, why not?

Mr. STERLING. I think not, Mr. President.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment suggested in the last paragraph.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Oh, I am perfectly aware of that amendment; but why is it necessary to have the clause I have mentioned in the bill, unless this is in direct contravention of the antitrust laws of the United States?

Mr. NELSON. It is not in direct contravention of the antitrust laws of the United States, and this amendment makes it perfectly clear:

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize the creation of, or attempt to create, a monopoly, or to exempt any association organized hereunder from any proceedings instituted under the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, on account of unfair methods of competition in commerce.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That being so, then why is it necessary to have in the bill "any law to the contrary notwithstanding"? Why not strike it out?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me an interruption?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If these organizations are subject now to the Sherman Antitrust Act, I, for one, want to say that they shall not be in the future. I am not at all frightened by that suggestion.

I do not want them subject to it. I want them given this privilege. I want them given this right and the consciousness of the fact that their proceeding is legal until this investigation is had and until some judge of the United States rules under the terms of this act that their conduct is improper. I do not know just what the Sherman Antitrust Act does, myself; and I do not know just what the decisions on that subject mean; and I supported this measure in the Judiciary Committee because I wanted to see these organizations freed from attack anywhere. I think them important and valuable; I think it is right that they should exist; and I am glad to take them out from under the Sherman antitrust law if they would be under it to-day.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I just want to say, in answer to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], that I think those words are put there out of abundance of caution, and I think they are rightly there. We do not want this state of things to exist, namely, that the mere forming of an association of this kind shall be deemed a violation of the Sherman antitrust law; and yet in certain quarters that interpretation will be put upon the law, and the object is to say to those who would put such an interpretation upon it that any law to the contrary notwithstanding, this, the bill we are now considering, shall be the law, and these associations may be formed without violating any law.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Will the Senator let me say that I believe thoroughly in the organization of farmers for the purpose of marketing their goods? I would be the last man in the world to object to any legal or legitimate process which they might adopt for that purpose; but I opposed this bill in committee because I thought it was a direct attempt on their part to avoid the consequences of the Sherman antitrust law, and I did not believe that they wanted that, and the farmers whose attention I have called to it have told me that they do not want it. I have in my correspondence a letter—I have not got it where I can produce it now—from a gentleman in California who tells me that he is the head of 20 farmers' organizations and that the farmers do not ask to be relieved from the operation of the Sherman antitrust law; that I was right in my contention regarding that matter. Now, if that is not the purpose I should like to see the words "any law to the contrary notwithstanding" stricken out. Then we would know what the bill means.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I absolutely approve of the frankness of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I do not, however, approve his viewpoint.

This bill can not be for any purpose in the world, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] infers, unless it is for the purpose of making clearer the exemption of the farmers from antitrust legislation. Personally, I think it is a mistake, a wrong policy and a wrong principle, to exempt from the provisions of trust legislation any class of citizens. I do not care whether they are farmers or whether they are manufacturers or whether they are bankers or what their vocation may be. The Sherman Act, in my judgment, is properly subject to considerable criticism. If we are going to continue making exemptions, making certain citizens immune as we have already done, or rather enlarge upon them, I think it far better to repeal the Sherman Act or Clayton Act or whatever the various amendments to it may be termed. The principle of class legislation, class distinction, in my judgment is a principle that can lead to nothing in the world but confusion, and it is contrary to the very Constitution under which we live.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the Senator applied that very principle in the bill that is known as the Edge bill.

Mr. EDGE. I am going to refer to that, and I am very glad the Senator reminded me of it in case I possibly should have forgotten it. I recall that the Senator from Minnesota, in his early remarks on this measure, referred to the so-called Edge bill—I am entirely ready to assume any responsibility that that title may imply—as containing an exemption from the provisions of the Clayton Act. I must say, with due deference to the Senator's experience and greater knowledge than I have of legislative matters, that the so-called Edge bill specifically provided that every action under it should be in every way subject to the provisions of the Clayton Act. That amendment was adopted by the Senate without division, and the so-called Edge Act in no way contravenes any provision of the Sherman law or the Clayton Act.

Mr. NELSON. It contravenes the Trade Commission law.

Mr. EDGE. If the Senator means by that the so-called Webb-Pomerene Act, which was enacted before I had the honor of being a Member of this body, which provided for certain combinations to do business abroad, followed by the act we are now discussing, which permitted the financing of those combinations abroad, that is correct; but that, as I understand, is entirely in regard to activities on the other side of the water, and not within the confines of the United States.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator admits, does he not, that that act does exempt those associations from the operations of the Sherman law as distinguished from the Clayton Act?

Mr. EDGE. When in operation abroad.

Mr. LENROOT. For export business.

Mr. EDGE. Yes; quite so. That policy was established by Congress several years ago, but is confined to foreign business.

Mr. President, I think the time has arrived when we should not exempt any classes from those acts which are supposed to control monopolies, or control activity in making prices, or anything of that character. I have been serving on a committee with the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and some others which has led us into some investigation of the coal situation of the country. I have been one of those on the floor of the Senate who have frankly opposed from principle governmental administration or governmental ownership of private business. I have not in any way changed my view; but in investigating the coal situation we discovered, as all of us practically know from our own personal experiences, that the price of coal at retail as compared with the actual admitted price of coal as mined at the mines at a profit is so outrageously out of all proportion—hard coal being mined and on the cars selling for $8.75 a ton, and the same coal being sold a month or two later in the large cities of the country at from $17 to $20 a ton—that I reached the conclusion that the Government inherently being responsible for the protection of its people, outside of any other responsibility, it was our duty, if that is not corrected by means now in existence, to go to any extreme that is possible under the Constitution to endeavor to settle a situation of that character.

I am merely mentioning that, somewhat apart from the general argument I am making, to try to demonstrate that I am in no way narrow upon the subject of governmental intervention. There are times when it may be necessary and should be invoked when situations such as that are uncovered. But to suddenly take out of general legislation one class and directly or indirectly invite them to make combinations, and then practically to provide how they are not subject to the same prosecutions as other men in business in other lines of industry, in my judgment simply encourages a condition in the country which is not for the best interests of the country. No citizen of the country should be immune from prosecution under the law, and I think a bill of this character, which, it has been admitted by some Senators, is for the sole purpose of making it clear that they are exempted, should not receive the support of this body.

I have no argument at all with those Senators who believe that agricultural associations should be outside of the purview of the act. They have a perfect right to that contention, as frankly expressed by the Senator from Georgia. Personally I think it is the wrong policy, and, of course, having that view, have expressed it from that standpoint.

We have associations of agriculturists in New Jersey and I believe they can serve a useful purpose, as the association of every other class of industry in the country can; the association of druggists, the association of retail merchants, the association of wholesale merchants, and other associations, for mutual interest and mutual aid in the development of their activities. But this aims to go a step further and say that this particular class of citizens can not even be prosecuted unless in some unknown way we can prove in advance that they have formed a monopoly. It is impossible to tell whether they are forming a monopoly unless you have them haled before the courts in order to find out just what has been their activities. If they are innocent, they have nothing to fear; some of them may not be so innocent as inferred, and in fixing prices may be forming monopolies covered by the law; and why should not the courts have an opportunity to pass upon that without exemption, which seems to me makes it almost impossible to bring them before a court of justice?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not think there is any question about the contention of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] that the addition of the language "any law to the contrary notwithstanding" would have the effect of exempting these associations from criminal prosecution under the antitrust laws. I think it would undoubtedly have that effect, and it is an effect I do not object to it having. But while this provision would exempt these associations from criminal prosecution, another section of the bill would subject them to administrative and judicial investigation, and if it should be disclosed that their practical operations produced results violative of the purpose and the object of the Sherman antitrust law, they would be liable to suspension or dissolution.

The organization of associations for the purposes designated in the first section of the bill would in itself probably constitute an agreement in restraint of trade and render these associations liable to prosecution under the Sherman Antitrust Act; but under the interpretation of that act by the court they would not be liable to its punitive provisions unless it were shown that their operations actually resulted in unduly advancing prices or restricting trade under the rule of reason laid down by the courts.

While this bill would relieve these associations from criminal prosecution, it safeguards the public against the very evils the antitrust laws are intended to prevent and suppress, and it provides in specific terms, if their operations eventuate in unreasonably enhancing prices to the injury of the public, that they shall be investigated and restrained. So that while the bill would provide for a technical exemption in their favor, it carefully safeguards the interests of the people by providing a means by which, if they do the evil at which the antitrust laws are aimed, they may be put out of business.

Mr. President, in this connection I want to make some general observations with reference to the antitrust law. I do not think it can be truly said that the criminal prosecutions we have had under that law have been at all satisfactory and effective. Under the construction of the Supreme Court, applying the rule of reason, the convictions are so difficult, and prosecutions have been infrequent, in part at least, for that reason, and as a result there has been but little relief from the evils of monopoly from that source.

Notwithstanding our antitrust laws, the country was honeycombed with trusts before the war. Nearly every big industry in the country, outside of agriculture, was conducted through corporated organization, and many of them were operating in flagrant violation of our antitrust laws. There were a few prosecutions, a few civil suits, a few criminal prosecutions, the court ordered a few of these illegal combinations dissolved, but permitted them to be reorganized under conditions which in some instances allowed them to function illegally more effectively than before they were dissolved.

When the war came and the conditions which resulted encouraged the multiplication of these combinations until practically all of the industrial activities of the country except agriculture is to-day in corporate combinations, and I fear a dangerously large number of them are monopolistic.

I can not see that the Sherman antitrust law is effectively protecting the public against the evils at which it was aimed. I am not advocating the repeal of that law, but I say that if the principles of limitation in profits, wisely and equitably fixed, and administrative investigation and judicial review involved in this bill were applied to the great corporations of the country, it might prove more effective in protecting the public against trust evils than the present antitrust laws have proven in actual results produced in its application to past and present conditions.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I just want to say to the Senator that I introduced a bill to apply that same principle to all corporations.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am glad to hear that. I will be pleased to examine and study its provisions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 3944) to create a Federal live-stock commission, to define its powers and duties, and to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live stock and live-stock products, and for other purposes.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. KING. I object.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I was interrupted in my line of thought. I only want to say that I believe that the measure will afford the farmers of the country, in the present and in any future conditions that may exist, very great relief. I think it will be very beneficial to them. I think the benefits that will accrue to the farmers by reason of the organization of associations for the purpose of marketing their products in an orderly way and in a safe way will not only be beneficial to the farmers, but I think that benefit will be reflected in all branches of business.

ATMOSPHERIC NITROGEN.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to take this occasion to serve notice on the Senate that when the unfinished business has been disposed of I shall try to get before the Senate the bill (S. 3390) to provide further for the national defense; to establish a self-sustaining Federal agency for the manufacture, production, and development of the products of atmospheric nitrogen for military, experimental, and other purposes; to provide research laboratories and experimental plants for the development of fixed-nitrogen production, and for other purposes.

I merely wish to say in this connection that the bill carries no appropriation, and in this emergency it is of vital importance to the agricultural interests of the country. All that is needed to complete the plan is the sale of the excess of that product now on hand which this plan, if completed, will supplement. I hope that the bill can be acted upon before the Senate takes a holiday recess.

GOVERNMENT OFFICES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am going to take this opportunity to present to the Senate the report of the Public Buildings Commission:

"REPORT OF THE PUBLIC BUILDINGS COMMISSION.

"The Public Buildings Commission believes that a report of its activities since its creation will be of interest to Congress at this time.

"The legislative act approved March 1, 1919, provides that the 'Commission shall have the absolute control of and the allotment of all space in the several public buildings owned or buildings leased by the United States in the District of Columbia,' with certain exceptions. The commission is composed of seven members—two Senators, two Members of the House of Representatives, the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, and the Supervising Architect or the Acting Supervising Architect of the Treasury. Ten thousand dollars was appropriated for the expenses of the commission.

"The work of the commission has been conducted with the following objects primarily in view:

"First. To save the Government as much money as possible in rental charges, by moving activities from rented to Government-owned space wherever feasible.

"Second. To settle office-space disputes among the departments. (The commission is glad to say these have been few in number.)

"Third. To provide, so far as circumstances would permit, suitable and adequate space for each department of the Government.

"Immediately upon its organization the commission undertook and completed a very comprehensive survey of all office space occupied by the Government in this city, both rented and Government-owned. This survey gave such information as the name and location of each building occupied by the Government, gross space occupied, the number of employees housed therein, space used for files, space used by employees, average number of square feet per employee, and other data of like nature, which enabled the commission to get a very clear view of the situation in each building. Taking 60 square feet per employee as a basis, it was not difficult to single out the overcrowded buildings and those which were too sparsely occupied. Illustrating the haphazard manner in which these buildings were being used, it might be added that the commission found one building so crowded that each employee was occupying an average of only 11 square feet. Other buildings ran as high as 200 square feet per employee.

"The survey showed the necessity for a number of moves and readjustments of space and these were immediately ordered by the commission. The result was the release of a considerable number of rented buildings and a more even distribution of the space in Government-owned buildings.

"A comparison of the rentals paid by the various departments on June 1, 1919, when the commission completed its first survey and the present, will no doubt be of interest:

Department.	Annual rentals June 1, 1919.	Annual rentals Dec. 1, 1920.
Agriculture	$190,910.00	$143,360.00
Alien Property Custodian	31,200.00	31,200.00
Board of Mediation and Conciliation	2,460.00	2,460.00
Bureau of Efficiency
Civil Service Commission	16,875.00	16,875.00
Commerce	66,900.00	65,500.00
Council of National Defense
Court of Claims
Employees' Compensation Commission	3,600.00
Federal Board for Vocational Education	6,400.00
Federal Trade Commission	12,600.00
Grain Corporation (Food Administration)
Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board
Interior	23,090.00
International Boundary Commission	2,040.00	2,688.00
International Joint Commission	1,724.40	3,000.00
Interstate Commerce Commission	72,058.04	87,058.04
Justice	36,000.00	36,000.00
Labor	58,363.60	24,000.00
National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics
Navy	1,224.00
Panama Canal Office	7,500.00	7,500.00
Post Office
Public Buildings and Grounds
Railroad Administration	86,985.00	(1)
Shipping Board	210,105.56	86,279.40
State	5,000.00
Superintendent State, War, and Navy Buildings
Tariff Commission	11,000.00	10,200.00
Treasury	174,839.00	159,106.08
War	81,867.08	25,425.00
Zone Finance Office	18,550.00	14,333.28
Zone Supply Office	11,380.00	11,380.00
Total	1,134,581.68	733,364.80

[1] Rentals for buildings occupied by the Railroad Administration are now being paid by funds derived from the operation of the railroads.

"The difference between these two totals shows a saving in rental charges to the Government of $401,216.88, to which should be added the $86,279.40 rental now being paid by the Shipping Board, making a total saving of $487,496.28. The reason for adding this amount to the total is that arrangements have been made for the entire personnel of the Shipping Board to occupy the Navy Building, and as soon as the necessary details can be worked out the move will be made.

"THE TEMPORARY BUILDINGS.

"There are now in this city 15 temporary nonfireproof buildings which were built by the Government during the war. This does not include the Navy Building, the Munitions Building, and Building E, at Sixth and B Streets, which are temporary but fireproof. It has been against the policy of the commission to place permanent departments of the Government in these inflammable structures whenever it could be avoided. It has in a few instances, however, been unavoidable. This reluctance on the part of the commission to place permanent activities in these buildings will account for the fact that in some of them are to be found considerable areas of unused space. This is particularly true of units A and B, at Sixth and B Streets. Some might argue that departments of the Government occupying rented space should be moved immediately into this unoccupied space. Take the Department of Labor for example. It is occupying a splendid building at Seventeenth and G Streets, rented it is true, but at the very reasonable figure of 28 cents per square foot. Would it be the part of wisdom to direct this department to vacate the building and move into one of those inflammable structures when they have a very distinct bargain in their rental charges? Other examples of a similar nature are: The Civil Service Commission, paying 35 cents per square foot; the Department of Commerce, 35 cents per square foot; the Interstate Commerce Commission, 36 cents per square foot; the Department of Justice, 32 cents per square foot; and the Panama Canal office, 37 cents per square foot. The commission believes that in cases like these, where the departments are adequately housed at a very reasonable figure, they should continue to occupy their present quarters until they can be provided for in permanent Government-owned structures. It will be necessary to raze two of the temporary buildings during the coming year, as the owners of the ground upon which they are located decline to renew the lease. They are the Corcoran Courts Building, on New York Avenue, near Seventeenth Street, and the Council of National Defense Building, at Eighteenth and D Streets. The commission has already provided space elsewhere for the occupants of these buildings and their demolition will cause no inconvenience to the service.

"With reference to the remaining temporary buildings, the commission believes they also should be razed at the earliest practicable date, or as soon as their retention is no longer a matter of necessity. They were built to last only a very short time, and as the years go by the expense of maintaining them will continue to mount.

"EXPENDITURES.

"As stated in another part of this report, an appropriation of $10,000 was placed at the disposal of the commission. Of this amount there still remained to the credit of the commission on September 30 last, when the last report was made to the auditor, an unexpended balance of $5,502.58. Thus the commission has expended during the first 19 months of its existence the sum of $4,497.42. The following statement will show how the funds have been spent:

Personal services (including salary of the secretary)	$3,837.12
Printing	130.75
Car tickets	40.63
Office supplies	227.05
Automobile repairs	252.05
Telephone	9.82
Total	4,497.42

During the reading of the report,

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The figures given are from June 1 up to December 1?

Mr. SMOOT. June 1 and December 1.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Has the Senator figured how it would be if it should run up to June 1 next?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no. It is on an annual basis, so that it makes no difference. These are the rents paid annually on June 1, 1919, and the rents paid annually on December 1, 1920, showing a saving of $401,216.88.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Does the report compare the same lengths of time?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. In other words, we have taken Government activities out of rented buildings in the District of Columbia and placed them in Government-owned buildings, and thereby saved to the Government $401,216.88. I will say to the Senator that that saving will continue from now on.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion right there? I had occasion recently to be down near Sixth and B Streets, where I found one building that had, I think, three floors, all empty. I stepped it off, and the building was a little over 300 feet one way and over 450 feet the other way, fully equipped with every convenience and capable, as it seemed to me, of taking care of a tremendous lot of employees. It would be a splendid place, much better than some of these rented places, and I was wondering why that was empty while the Government was paying rent elsewhere.

That rather made me look into it a little further, and I took the time to go into several other buildings. I found vast amounts of unoccupied space. That particular building is Building B. I went over into Building F. They had some boxes in some of them. I asked what they were going to do with it, and they said they thought they would make a warehouse out of it. The heating apparatus alone in these buildings is very expensive. They are most excellent offices for many of the departments of the Government that are winding up the war affairs of the Government, and it seems to me that we might well utilize these buildings as offices, and cut down the great amount of rent that we are paying.

I just wanted to call the attention of the Senator to this. I know how he feels about it. He has been very active in this matter and has done splendid work in looking it up and cutting down these rentals, and I wished to give him the benefit of my experience and observation.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps, Mr. President, so long as the reading of the report has been broken in upon, I might as well answer the inquiry of the Senator at this time, although I should like to have the report printed in the RECORD consecutively, so that anyone who desires to examine it may do so without going through all of the remarks of Senators.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the report be printed in full, and the colloquy come in at the end.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to say to the Senator from Tennessee that the commission is well aware of the situation as to Building B at Sixth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue. Those buildings are all temporary; they are very poorly built; the foundations were not constructed to last over four or five years; they are not fireproof; and we desire to remove them just as quickly as it is possible to do so. We have been using them for storage purposes, but that is extremely dangerous. I should hesitate to order Government papers into them.

Another thing, if Building B, being the center one, ever should catch on fire, all of the adjacent property would be destroyed. We wish to demolish Building B just as quickly as it may possibly be done. There would then be a break between those buildings, which, perhaps, would enable us to control a fire, if one should occur, in one of the other buildings; but with that building standing there it would be an impossibility to do so.

We have to-day in those buildings some records which are most valuable, which could not be replaced, and we have not any storage space into which they can be moved. In fact, I might add here that the commission has under consideration a building plan which we are going to recommend to Congress just as soon as we can get it perfected.

The first thing that the Government of the United States needs in the way of buildings is a structure for storage purposes, where it can store its papers, which are of incalculable value, in a fireproof building. If we had such a building there is hardly a department of the Government to-day which could not use for employees space which is now occupied for storage purposes. When the time comes that we shall have such storage space into which we may move the files and papers of the Government into a storage building which will be fireproof and contrally located, then it will not become necessary to erect buildings for the accommodation of employees in the District of Columbia for a long time to come.

I wish to say to the Senator that we know that the building to which he refers is practically empty, and we do not desire to put any more people into it; but just as soon as the few employees of the Navy Department who are now there are removed we are going to tear the building down.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does seem to me, however, that, considering the possibility of fire, it is just as dangerous for the building to be empty as for it to be occupied.

Another thought also occurred to me. The buildings which are being rented by the Government are in most instances not fireproof, and the Government papers which are in such rented buildings are just as subject to fire as they would be in the other buildings. My experience is that the temporary buildings located in the section referred to are rather better and more suitable for governmental purposes than are the buildings which are being rented, some of the latter being old residences.

I think the Senator's suggestion about having a fireproof warehouse is an excellent one, and that we ought to have such a structure and that the papers of the Government ought to be preserved; but until we get such a building I see no use of the Government tearing down buildings that are so admirably adapted for office buildings of the kind which are needed and paying out rent for buildings which belong to private parties and which are not fireproof.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, perhaps I can explain the matter in this way: For buildings for the Interstate Commerce Commission we are paying in rent $87,000, in round figures, a year, and for buildings for the Treasury Department we are paying $150,000 in rent. The Treasury Department is occupying space in the Hooe Building, the Bond Building, and the Southern Railroad Building. Those buildings are fireproof, and it would be perfectly wicked on the part of the commission to order the Treasury Department and the Interstate Commerce Commission into Building B. We could not think of ordering them into that building with the papers which they have. The rents paid for the buildings they occupy constitute the greater part of the rent which we are paying. I would not take the responsibility of ordering either of those agencies into Building B upon any consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. But the Senator from Utah will recall that the Treasury Department now is occupying a building down there, which I understand is temporary in its nature, for its Internal Revenue Bureau, and I think that bureau has custody of papers almost as important as those of any other agency of the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator, if he will make examination, will find that the papers of that bureau are stored in other places. I will say to the Senator that we are now anticipating moving the Treasury Department out of one of those buildings and saving $40,000 a year, but we have got to make further preparation before we can do that.

Another thing in connection with retaining Building B, I will say to the Senator, is that it costs $200,000 for upkeep and expense of maintaining the building. I told the building custodian of the Treasury Department not to make an estimate for that $200,000 this year, because we were going to demolish Building B, and we shall save at least $200,000 the coming fiscal year for repairs and maintenance of the building.

Not only that, but the Architect of the Treasury Department notified me the other day that the authorities would not be responsible for the foundations of Building B if we put into it any number of Government employees longer than this year, because the foundations were constructed with no idea of its being preserved for a longer period of time.

I do not know whether the Senator from Tennessee went into Building E, which is not included in the 15 temporary nonfireproof buildings referred to in the report.

Mr. McKELLAR. I stumbled down there merely by accident, knowing that we were paying out somewhere between a half a million and a million dollars for rent for city property which was not fireproof and probably not as well equipped for the Government's purposes as the temporary buildings. So I walked through not only Building B but through Building F, which is in much the same condition. There are a few employees in Building F, as I recall, on the west side.

Mr. SMOOT. Some of these buildings of which I speak are temporary, but they are also fireproof.

We were compelled to pay during the war as high as $1.87 a square foot for space rented, but we have a contract for the building occupied by the Department of Labor under which the rental paid is 28 cents per square foot.

At the conclusion of the reading of the report,

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is the conclusion of the commission's report to the Senate. As I stated a moment ago when interrupted, the commission has under consideration to-day a plan for building in the future the structures needed by the Government in the District of Columbia. The time has arrived now when there should be some kind of a plan or policy adopted, and just as soon as a survey has been made and the program is agreed to by the commission, we expect to come to Congress with it. We are going to ask Congress what they think about it, and, if they approve it, I am quite sure that in the very near future the Government of the United States will not be paying one cent for rent in the District of Columbia. That is the aim of the commission. From the report it will be noticed that, with an expenditure of less than $5,000, the commission has saved in rents in the District alone nearly $500,000. And within the next three months I am quite sure that there will be added to that figure over $100,000 more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLETCHER in the chair). Does the Senator ask that any action be taken on this report, or simply that it be ordered printed?

Mr. SMOOT. All I desire is to have it in the RECORD as presented by me.

Mr. McKELLAR. The report will be printed in full in the RECORD?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to say a word about this report. I think it is a very excellent report, and I think the Senator's commission is entitled to thanks for the good work it has done.

As the Senator from Utah stated a few moments ago, I feel that there is more work that could be done along this line, because I think we are paying too much rent. I also indorse the idea that the Government should own its own buildings. I believe that an immense saving could be had to the Government as a result of constructing and owning its buildings. Of course, whether the present time is a favorable one for erecting buildings, in view of the high price of materials, I do not know; perhaps not.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is not.

Mr. McKELLAR. But in the early future, as soon as it can be done, public buildings should be constructed for the various departments, and they should be placed in locations that will be for the convenience not only of the departments themselves but of the legislative branch of the Government.

MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY—FEDERAL LIVE-STOCK COMMISSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3944) to create a Federal live-stock commission, to define its powers and duties, and to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live stock and live-stock products, and for other purposes.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire as to the record on this bill, whether or not the formal reading has been dispensed with? If not, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLETCHER in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa? If not, it will be so ordered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senator intends to offer the amendments, or has he already done so and had them printed in italics in the copy of the bill?

Mr. KENYON. The amendments were offered several days ago and adopted, and have been printed in italics.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They have been printed?

Mr. KENYON. I think there were one or two minor amendments that were not, through an oversight.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does the Senator say they have been adopted by the Senate? I do not think they were adopted.

Mr. KENYON. Oh, the amendments were adopted; yes. They were presented and adopted, and they have been printed in italics.

Mr. STERLING. Has the bill been printed showing the amendments?

Mr. KENYON. The amendments are printed in italics in the bill. There was another amendment with reference to striking out section 5.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I had not expected to discuss this bill this afternoon with any degree of thoroughness; but during the speech of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] the other day he was good enough to let me ask him one or two questions about the procedure by which the persons under the jurisdiction of the proposed live-stock commission might have a hearing and appeal from the decisions of the commission. The bill has been reprinted with the amendments that were adopted the other day, and that makes the pages run a little differently from the way they were in the old print. In just a moment I think I can find the part to which I refer. I called the attention of the Senator from Iowa to this language, and as I did so I admitted very freely that I had had very little experience in matters of this sort.

At the top of page 19 of the new print we find this language:

> No such order of the commission shall be modified or set aside by the circut court of appeals unless it is shown by the packer or operator that the order is unsupported by evidence.

As I recollect a colloquy which ensued, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and a moment later the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] gave me to understand that that was the usual language employed in a statute of this kind which grants power to a commission to make rules and regulations, and then proceeds to give an opportunity for those against whom the rules or regulations are issued to appeal; and I recollect quite well, I think, asking the Senator from Montana if the language used in the Federal Trade Commission act was similar to this and would have the same effect as this, and I was assured that it was. At least, that is my recollection of the reply.

I find, however, Mr. President, that the exact opposite is the case, and that this language constitutes, if I can read English and understand it, a complete reversal of the usual procedure in cases of this kind.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator is discussing the packer bill, as I understand?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes—not at any length, I may say. There is one point I want to clear up.

Mr. KING. I think it is so important that I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Heflin	McNary	Spencer
Borah	Kellogg	Moses	Sterling
Calder	Kendrick	Norris	Sutherland
Capper	Kenyon	Overman	Thomas
Dial	Keyes	Page	Townsend
Dillingham	King	Phipps	Trammell
Edge	Kirby	Poindexter	Underwood
Fall	Knox	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Fernald	La Follett	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.
Fletcher	Lenroot	Smith, Ariz.	Warren
France	Lodge	Smith, Md.	Watson
Gore	McCumber	Smith, S. C.
Harris	McKellar	Smoot

Mr. KING. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] and the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] are detained on account of service in the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names, and a quorum is present.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, referring again to the language used in the proposed act, near the top of page 19, let me read it again:

> No such order of the commission shall be modified or set aside by the circuit court of appeals unless it is shown by the packer or operator that the order is unsupported by evidence—

And so forth.

I find upon examination, Mr. President, since the colloquy which occurred the other day, that the language of the Federal Trade Commission act, which was referred to in that colloquy, is quite different and proceeds, I believe, upon an entirely different principle. Section 5 of that act reads as follows:

> Upon such filing of the application—> and transcript the court shall cause notice thereof to be served upon such person, partnership, or corporation, and thereupon shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein, and shall have power to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such transcript a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside the order of the commission. The findings of the commission as to the facts, if supported by testimony, shall be conclusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the proceeding before the commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper.

That is, for a hearing—

I submit, Mr. President, that this procedure which I have just read is entirely different from the one proposed in the bill; for under this bill, whenever the commission has reached a finding, the person affected may appeal to the circuit court of appeals. No opportunity is given at that point for the submission of new testimony or any requirement imposed upon the representatives of the commission to present conclusive testimony in support of their findings. The entire burden is thrown upon the defendant to prove that the findings of the commission are unsupported by evidence, thus throwing the burden of proof upon him. The Federal Trade Commission act does not do this. I doubt if any other act granting powers to Federal commissions or departments or bureaus proceeds upon the theory contained in this bill, and I think it is an exceedingly important departure, and a very unwise departure, from accepted practice.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not remember now what the laws in the other cases referred to provide for, but is it not fair to assume that the object here sought is that, as far as the facts are concerned, the commission acts like a jury, and the law seeks to avoid a new trial on the same facts; that, as far as the facts are concerned, it makes the findings of the commission, if based on evidence, final, the same as an appellate court would say in passing on the verdict of a jury?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, that might be acceptable if that were the whole story; but this proposed live-stock commission is to issue regulations governing devices and practices in commerce, which will have the effect and force of law, a power far greater than that given to the Federal Trade Commission. The Federal Trade Commission, under its powers, presents evidence of alleged facts to the court, and the court decides whether that evidence supports the contention of the commission that a law set forth in the act itself has been violated. This pending bill equips the commission with power to issue binding regulations, setting forth in detail what is unlawful as a device or a practice in business. It then proceeds to try the man or concern alleged to have violated its regulations. It tries the man for violating the law which it has legislated into existence. Then, when the man appeals to the circuit court of appeals, this bill puts the entire burden of proof upon him to show that the commission did not have the evidence to back up the findings with respect to its own regulations. That is quite a proposition in a free country.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York if the language of the bill does not even go further?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does further on. I would be glad to have a lawyer point it out, because I have been disturbed about this.

Mr. STERLING. The burden of proof is on the packer or operator. The bill provides that—

> No such order of the commission shall be modified or set aside by the circuit court of appeals unless it is shown by the packer or operator that the order is unsupported by evidence.

Is not the burden of proof on him not only to show that it is against the weight of the evidence but that there is no evidence whatever, not even a scintilla of evidence, in support of the order? It is broad, general language "unsupported by evidence"; that is, by any evidence whatsoever.

Mr. NORRIS. Is not that the same as the verdict of a jury in an appellate court?

Mr. STERLING. No. There may be some evidence to support the verdict of a jury, but we may say the weight of the evidence is the other way and it is contrary to the preponderance of the evidence. You put the burden of proof on the packer to show that there is no evidence whatever, not a scintilla of evidence, Mr. President.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not want to break in on the argument of the Senator, because I have argued it heretofore and I am interested in hearing the Senator's views. But the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] is familiar with the decisions of the Supreme Court as to the holdings of the Interstate Commerce Commission, where they hold exactly that if there is any evidence to support the commission's holding, it is sufficient.

By the Federal Trade Commission act the findings of the commission as to the facts, if supported by testimony, shall be conclusive. I am not going to break into the argument of the Senator from New York, because I am anxious to hear him.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, my contention has been that this is a reversal of the usual practice and constitutes a very profound change, and it is of more significance and more importance in this situation, because this bill gives to a Federal agency, a commission, power to legislate. The Federal Trade Commission act does not give the Federal Trade Commission any power to legislate.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not want to keep interrupting, but, of course, if it gives the commission the power to legislate, to make law, then it is unconstitutional. That is a bone of contention, I understand. We say it does not delegate legislative power, but merely administrative power. If it does delegate the power to make law, it is unconstitutional.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It delegates to the commission the power to issue regulations which shall have the effect of law, and a man can be haled into court by the commission for violating them.

Mr. KENYON. The Supreme Court has time and again said, and very recently, that the delegation of administrative power to make rules and regulations is not a delegation of power to legislate or to make law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. KING. The action of the Supreme Court, however, as I understand the Senator, validates those regulations, gives them the force of penal statutes, so that any infraction of those orders would constitute a penal offense.

Mr. KENYON. What I had in mind was the decision of the Supreme Court, the clearest one, I think, in the Grimaud case, in 220 United States.

Mr. KING. There is another case, the Utah case.

Mr. KENYON. The Clarke case, I expect the Senator refers to. In the Grimaud case the Secretary of Agriculture was given certain power under the meat-inspection act. He made his rules and regulations, and a violation of them was made a criminal offense. That is sustained by the Supreme Court as not being a delegation of legislative power. We have not done that here. We have not made the violation of these rules and regulations a criminal offense. It goes on through the review by the court, and after the court shall have sustained the rules and regulations, then subsequent violations can be dealt with.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, the effect is to make the orders of this commission statutes, and to give them the effect of statutes.

Mr. KENYON. No; not at all.

Mr. KING. In the ultimate result they have the same effect as if they were statutes.

Mr. KENYON. Not any more than the finding of the Secretary of Agriculture in the Grimaud case. If you consider that making them statutes, it is practically the same thing. Of course, the line of demarkation between administrative power and legislative power is sometimes pretty indefinite; it is pretty hard to distinguish. We all know that. We have tried to formulate this provision on the theory that it is merely an administrative power, not a legislative power. But I apprehend that it is a fair subject for discussion.

Mr. KING. The point I wanted to make, if the Senator from New York will pardon me, was that under this bill the regulations and orders promulgated by the commission in the last analysis would have the same effect as if they had been enacted by Congress into law, because their infraction, after the court's scrutiny, would constitute a penal offense, and a violator of those orders would be subject to fine and imprisonment, or both, as the court might determine.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. WATSON. Did I understand the Senator from Iowa to say that the bill, in the respect which we are now discussing, follows the provision of the interstate commerce act?

Mr. KENYON. No; I did not say that. I said the Supreme Court had held, without the interstate commerce act so providing, that if the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission had any evidence to support it, it was sufficient. The Supreme Court itself has laid down that rule. But the Federal Trade Commission act does provide that it will be conclusive if supported by evidence.

Mr. STERLING. Could the Senator from Iowa refer us to the decision? I would like to see the exact language of the Supreme Court in that connection. I do not now recall it.

Mr. KENYON. I will call the Senator's attention to it. I think if the Senator from South Dakota will look near the end of the talk I made the other day, which was perhaps a little too extended, he will find the decisions cited. I attempted to cite them.

Mr. STERLING. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Undoubtedly other statutes, clothing departments and commissions with power, have moved in this direction; that is, in the direction of the delegation of legislative power. Some have been successful and some have not. I think that tendency in modern legislation is one which should give us some concern, and just because we have gone a little way in a previous statute is no reason why we should in haste decide to go very much further in a succeeding statute.

I call attention to page 12 of the bill to illustrate the power to legislate under this proposed law. Section 14 reads:

> No operator shall engage in any unfair or unjustly discriminatory practice or device in commerce.

There is in another part of the bill the power, of course, given to the commission to prescribe rules and regulations for the carrying out of the provisions of the act. Therefore the commission can issue regulations stating what practices are discriminatory, and those regulations are to apply to a vast industry in all its ramifications, complicated to as high a degree as any other industry in which human beings are engaged.

Then section 14 proceeds, in line 8:

> Or charge, collect, receive, or demand any unreasonable charge or rate for any service in commerce performed in connection with the business of such operator.

I may say that the term "operator," as used in the bill, really means the stockyards or concerns operating or owning stockyards.

Now, if the commission is to be clothed with the power to say what is an unreasonable rate or charge to make in all the dozens and dozens of stockyards all over the United States in the handling of literally millions of cattle, sheep, swine, horses, mules, and goats, it in effect will have the right to state what is a maximum reasonable charge or rate, and therefore it will fix prices. That certainly is legislative authority which will have its effect upon an enormous industry, upon the handling of millions of meat-producing animals, affecting hundreds and hundreds of thousands of producers.

If any stockyards, great or small, no matter who owns them, whether they be handling cattle, sheep, and hogs, or whether they may be merely a horse auction establishment in a city, for that will come under the term operator as defined in the bill, shall charge any greater rate than the rate fixed as reasonable by this agency of the Federal Government, or if it is alleged that they have charged any other rate the commission will hale them before it and try them for violating the law which it had proclaimed.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator refers to operations in commerce and says "any horse market in a city." It would have to be something that engaged in commerce.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Surely the exchange of articles is commerce.

Mr. KENYON. Interstate commerce.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The bill does not say that.

Mr. KENYON. Oh, yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Commerce is defined in the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well, interstate commerce. If a horse happens to come from outside of the District of Columbia and is sold at a public auction place in the District of Columbia, it is in interstate commerce, I suppose. If it is alleged that the man asked too high a rate or imposed too high a charge for the services rendered by the operator, such as the hay or the grain fed to the animal while he is in the yards, he is to be haled before the commission and tried by the commission which issued the regulation, having the effect of a price-fixing law.

If the decision of the commission is against the defendant—we will call him—and the defendant may apply to the circuit court of appeals, and when he gets before the circuit court of appeals he finds that under the terms of the bill he is compelled to show that there is no evidence against him. I think that is going pretty far. He is compelled to prove that the finding of the commission is unsupported by evidence, that there is not any evidence.

I have not read the Statutes of the United States, and I very much regret to say that I am not a lawyer, but I would like to have some one point out to me where that particular phrase has ever been used in a statute of the United States in a situation similar to this. I was assured the other day that it was used in the Federal Trade Commission act, but I find that it is not.

After all, Mr. President, the citizens have some rights in this country, and the man charged with violation of the law is supposed, until finally convicted, to stand upon an equality with the power that is attempting to prove that he is violating it. He should not be overburdened and handicapped at the very start of the procedure and forced to prove more than his accusers are forced to prove. It is in violation, as I look upon it, of all the principles of justice known in America, unless I am fearfully mistaken. If I am, I would be glad to have it pointed out. I would willingly confess my error.

Now, Mr. President, again upon this line, to illustrate, if I may, how vastly important is that language on page 19, let us look at an earlier section of the bill and see its ramifications and how far the regulations of the commission may extend in making the doing of certain things or a vast number of things unlawful, and then putting the burden of proof upon the defendant to show that he has not committed a violation. I refer to these things to illustrate the spirit behind the bill. The part I am going to refer to now may not have direct application to the part I have just discussed, but it does illustrate the vast tyranny that is to be set up here.

On page 6, line 15, in section 6, we find this language:

It—

Referring to the commission—

shall investigate and ascertain the demand for, the supply, consumption, costs, and prices of, and all other facts relating to, the ownership, production, transportation, manufacture, storage, handling, or distribution of live stock or live-stock products, including operations in and the ownership of stockyards.

I call attention of the Senate that that means that the commission shall investigate—it is mandatory upon it, and, of course, it will rejoice at the opportunity—not only the operation of packers and of stockyards and their transportation facilities but the production of live stock.

It means that agents of the commission, under the terms of the bill, are commanded to visit the farms and the ranches all over the United States, or to a sufficient degree in order to satisfy the spirit of the bill, to inquire of the owners of farms and ranches as to the cost of producing live stock, of feeding it, of raising it, of caring for it in every way, and all the different elements of the live-stock business. That of itself would not seem such a tremendous thing to suggest unless we are concerned about the immense cost of the undertaking. That might not seem to be important until we reach section 7, the next section, which reads:

The commission shall have the power to require by subpœna the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, records, and correspondence relating to any matter under investigation.

There is your commission empowered to summon a farmer from his farm, to order him to produce all his records, all his accounts, and display all the workings of his business. They can summon him across the country on a subpœna. They can go anywhere, take anybody engaged in the production of live stock or feeding of live stock who has had any experience whatsoever in estimating the cost of the live-stock business, and if he fails to answer the subpœna the bill proceeds to provide penalties to be imposed upon him. The commission is authorized, as I pointed out before, to prescribe the rules and regulations under which all this is to be done.

Mr. President, I think there has never been anything like that suggested before in this country. We are accustomed, of course, to take very severe jurisdiction over public utility corporations and, to a certain extent, pretty severe jurisdiction over concerns engaged in interstate commerce; but I see nothing here restricting the application of this power to persons engaged in interstate commerce. Indeed, I see the long, strong arm of this commission reaching everywhere. It can summon the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] and put him on the stand in Chicago and compel him to produce all his books, papers, and accounts. It can summon the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], if he were engaged in the live-stock business, to the city of Buffalo or Chicago, and compel him to tell the commission and the public the capitalization, the investment values, the costs of everything he owns that is used in any degree, remote or direct, in the live-stock industry.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DIAL in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. KENDRICK. I would like to ask the Senator from New York if he does not believe that the producers of both live stock and farm products would like to have some information go out to the country at this time as to the actual cost of production?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course they would. I am not inveighing against the dissemination of information, but I do think it is about time when we lifted our hand against the attempt of the Government to compel a private citizen to disclose everything he knows about his own business, and to penalize him under proceedings adjudging him in contempt of court if he declines.

Mr. KENDRICK. May I ask the Senator if other commissions have not been given this power in almost the same language, and without any material evidence of abusing the power?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know what other commissions have power like this. You can summon, of course, the managers and officers of a railway, relying upon the power of Congress under the interstate-commerce clause to regulate the railways and compel them, of course—I assume we can, though I have not read the statute—to tell all about the management of the railways, and under certain provisions of the Federal Trade Commission act men concerned in enterprises in interstate commerce may be summoned; but I have never heard it suggested that a private citizen, living anywhere in the United States, upon the farms and ranches, and regardless of whether he is engaged in interstate commerce or not, can be summoned with all his books and papers and punished if he does not tell everything he knows about his own business.

Mr. SMOOT. And I may add, if the Senator will permit, that the Interstate Commerce Commission, as well as every commission that has been organized, has to act under the law, but the commission proposed here is to act under rules and regulations and orders that they themselves may make.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Under their own law.

Mr. SMOOT. And the citizen upon the farm or any other place in the United States does not know anything about what those orders, rules, and regulations may be. They are not the law. It is the most unheard of piece of legislation in the world.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me continue the reading. I think I have not made a mistake in the meaning of this proposed act. Let me again read section 7:

SEC. 7. The commission shall have the power to require by subpœna the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, records, and correspondence relating to any matter under investigation. Any member of the commission may sign subpœnas, and members and examiners of the commission may administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence.

Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such books, papers, records, and correspondence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing. In case of disobedience to a subpœna the commission may invoke the aid of any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on to require the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of such books, papers, records, and correspondence.

Such court may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any person, issue an order requiring such person to appear before the commission, or to produce books, papers, records, and correspondence if so ordered, or to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

And "the matter in question," as the phrase goes, on line 21, includes all those matters that are recited in section 6. Every sheepman, every cattleman, every hog raiser, every man dealing in horses will be subject to this power to be summoned from his home to the place where the inquiry is being carried on, not confining it to the district in which the man lives, but to the district where the inquiry is being carried on. So men can be whipped back and forth across the continent at the behest of this commission, over which there is no control whatsoever, for they are authorized under the proposed act to make their own rules and regulations.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. KENDRICK. The Senator from New York is a practical stock grower, and I ask if he does not believe that this provision of the proposed law is necessary because of the long distances which these shipments traverse in going to market? It might be quite possible that a shipment of stock from the northwest coast of this country would find a market in Chicago, or even in the Senator's own State of New York. It would be necessary under such conditions to summon witnesses from long distances. It would not be very economical, in other words, to hold the meetings of the commission where the shipments originated, but it would be very much more economical to have the investigation, in case there were any complaints, at the destination of the shipment or in the vicinity of the stockyards. I ask if the Senator does not believe that such a provision, authorizing meetings to be held at any place which may be necessary, is essential to the proper working of such a measure as that now pending?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, of course witnesses must be summoned considerable distances and should be summoned considerable distances when their testimony is required to prove the truth or falsity of a charge of violation of law, but the bill unfortunately goes beyond that. The proposed commission is commanded under the terms of the bill to investigate, regardless of charges of fraud, deception, or discriminatory practices, the question of the production of live stock and its costs, and to summon witnesses, with their books and papers, to testify in any matter under investigation. The provision goes beyond the code of civil and criminal procedure in the power to summon witnesses. They may be summoned at the whim of a commission which may want to ascertain how much it takes to produce and mature a 4-year-old steer, and if they are sufficiently curious about that, they may summon anybody who has ever had a 4-year-old steer, whether engaged in interstate commerce or not, and compel him to testify, and if he declines to come he is in contempt of court.

Now, I submit to the Senator from Wyoming, who I know is a lover of freedom, that the placing in the hands of the Federal Government or any of its agents a power of that dimension constitutes a pretty dangerous thing.

Mr. KENDRICK. Well, Mr. President, the Senator from New York understands very well that these investigations are to be made on complaint.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The bill does not say so. That is the trouble. It says nothing of the kind. The language on line 15, page 6, reads:

> It shall investigate and ascertain the demand for, the supply, consumption, costs, and prices of, and all other facts relating to, the ownership, production, transportation, manufacture, storage, handling, or distribution of live stock or live-stock products.

The commission can summon anybody from the farmer to the retail butcher anywhere at any time for any purpose and make him disclose everything about his business.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. They can summon anyone, but, of course, they can not compel anyone to come unless the court says so. An order must be made and then the subpœna is issued under it. If the man refused to come the commission would then be compelled to go to court.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The commission issues the subpœna.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, the commission issues the subpœna, but if the man does not come the commission is compelled to go to court. Does the Senator suppose the court would require a witness to come under such circumstances as he has narrated?

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the commission could persuade the court that it wanted and needed the information which that man could give them about his business, it is to be presumed that the court, looking at this act, would reach the conclusion that Congress in passing it meant to give power to the commission to subpœna all these people.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; if it were necessary for the purposes of the investigation. Of course that is a matter for the court.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would be very easy to show that it is necessary for the purposes of the investigation. The commission could do that easily enough.

Mr. KING. If the Senator from New York will pardon me, I venture to suggest that the court would regard the application of the commission as more than a prima facie case, as almost conclusive, and the burden of proof would rest upon somebody else to show that it was not necessary. I think that the court would be compelled under this language to issue the subpœna upon the application of the commission, unless it could be shown that there was some fraud upon the part of the commission or that they were guilty of some intrigue or were trying to perpetrate some wrong.

Mr. KENYON. If there were a wrongful invasion of the rights of the party which amounted to a wrongful search and seizure, or anything of that character, the court would not grant a subpœna. The Senator from New York knows that.

Mr. KING. I do not suppose that it would be considered a wrong in the sense of a moral wrong or an invasion of personal rights to drag a man across the continent; and yet, after all, as the Senator from New York has said, it is a wrong in many instances.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator from New York whether he is not aware that this langauge is taken from the interstate commerce act, which contains identically the same provision? It is also found in the railroad-control act which we passed at the last session. The railroad labor board is given identically the same power and in the same language.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is not that applicable only to persons engaged in interstate commerce?

Mr. WATSON. That refers to transactions in interstate commerce.

Mr. LENROOT. No; in the case of the railroad labor board it is as to the wages of employees of the railroads, which is not a matter of interstate commerce at all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Under the regulating powers assumed by Congress, under the interstate commerce clause, Congress has taken jurisdiction over the wages, at least indirectly. I can not see how that principle would apply to this situation, for there is nothing about interstate commerce here.

Mr. LENROOT. It all relates to interstate commerce.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator does not mean to claim that interstate commerce is not involved. Section 6, the part to which he refers, relates to "live stock or live-stock products, including operations on and the ownership of stockyards." When the business of live stock and live-stock production and stockyard operations are considered, they are all interstate commerce. It is only about such matters that the commission can inquire. The bill does not apply to anything not based on that consideration.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I turn to the term "live stock," which, as defined on page 2, simply means "live or dead cattle, sheep, swine, horses, mules, or goats." I do not see anything about live stock in interstate commerce there.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the Senator may not have been in the Chamber the other evening when I inquired of the Senator from Iowa as to the construction of section 2, and suggested that as the language now is it does not in all cases confine the operations of the bill to interstate commerce. The Senator from Iowa said if it did not it was so intended, and that an amendment should be made so as to confine it to transactions in interstate commerce.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, if such amendments were perfected and adopted it would make a vast difference in this bill.

Mr. KENYON. I think the bill, on close analysis, will be found only to relate to interstate commerce. The definition of live stock does not say interstate commerce, but connecting it with the method in which it is used as to stockyards, as to the packers, and as to the operators it is clear from all of the other definitions combined that there is nothing intended but interstate commerce and that nothing else can be intended.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me turn to the definition of stockyards. The definition is as follows:

> The term "stockyard" means any place, establishment, or facility maintained and conducted at or in connection with a public market and consisting of pens or other inclosures and their appurtenances in which live cattle, sheep, swine, horses, mules, or goats are received, held, or kept for purchase, sale, shipment, or slaughter in commerce.

Mr. KENYON. We added the amendment incorporating the words "or slaughter in commerce" to make certain about that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then is it suggested that section 6 be also amended?

Mr. KENYON. Section 6, if the Senator will look at the words on lines 19 and 20, reads:

> Or live-stock products, including operations on and the ownership of stockyards.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is merely expansive; it is not restrictive.

Mr. KENYON. If the other does not cover it, it should, of course, do so. It is not the intention of anybody to give the proposed commission power to go beyond the domain of interstate commerce, because the entire bill is founded on that theory and it is the only theory upon which it could be founded.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a very remarkable bill, as written, to be founded on that theory.

Mr. KENYON. I do not doubt the Senator thinks it is remarkable.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, again referring to the spirit of this act, let me call attention to title 5, on page 21.

Section 25, commencing in line 6, reads as follows:

The commission may, upon application by any individual, partnership, corporation, or municipality, issue to such applicant a certificate of registration to engage in or carry on, under this act, the business, whether in interstate or foreign commerce, or both, of conducting or operating stockyards, or slaughtering live stock, or processing, preserving, or storing live-stock products or perishable foodstuffs—

With certain provisos that follow. This is known as the voluntary registration portion of the bill, or the voluntary licensing portion of the bill.

The authors of the bill have studiously refrained from going to the length of imposing a compulsory governmental license upon the concerns engaged in this tremendous industry; so, rather than put in a compulsory license provision, this voluntary license provision is put in. Now, we would have this situation: Here we have a national live-stock commission offering to register any concern which applies for registration and which complies with certain provisions of title 5. It is a grave question in my mind how many concerns in the United States who are engaged in any element of the live-stock business would dare refrain very long from taking out a license. If one concern should do it, it would immediately make that a part of its advertising. It would spread far and wide the knowledge of the fact that it was registered officially under the wing of the Federal Government. It would display that fact on its letter heads, in all its business communications. It would relate that fact upon the labels upon the goods it produced and distributed and sold, "Registered under the national live-stock commission act; approved," or whatever other form of statement was authorized by the rules and regulations of this commission.

Let us take the case of a small concern, we will say, situated in one of our smaller cities. There is a pretty well-known concern in the central part of New York State whose goods have a good deal of fame around the country. It is not at all impossible for other people to go into the same business, and if other people form a concern to go into the same business in that neighborhood or anywhere in the vicinity, and before doing so apply for registration, and say in advance that they would comply with the provisions of the act under title 5, if they apply and get the license they would immediately be in competition with the concern that did not have it. How long would the concern that did not have it last, with the Government of the United States certifying to the one, and by inference in the public mind not certifying to the other?

Mr. President, I think any sensible business man knows that once the Government opens the door by statute to governmental registration and approval, the great majority of business concerns in the United States will be forced to seek registration and approval, the competition will be so keen without it. I have not much faith in this thing operating as a voluntary license scheme. I think it will turn out in the long run to be compulsory in fact.

I do not think many Senators are in favor of the compulsory licensing of business. We have had some of that in the last three or four years, and it has not worked very well; but, assuming that concerns do go into this voluntary registration, let us see something about the powers of the commission.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator, for information, whether or not it was the purpose of the committee reporting this bill to give any preferential rights to the registrants under the bill? And if not, what was the purpose of authorizing a voluntary registration?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The explanation that was given here the other day, a very brief one, by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who, I am sorry to say, is absent—or perhaps it was the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]; I think it was—was that title 5 would tend to encourage municipal slaughterhouses or municipal markets.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not know that the Senator refers to me. I think I did say that it would encourage public markets, an experiment in trying to establish a system of public markets, to get rid of the long lane between producer and consumer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, it goes infinitely further than public markets. It takes in everybody that has anything to do with preserving, storing, or processing meat food or live-stock products. The understanding that I acquired in the committee was that title 5 originated from somewhere outside the committee, and that it was expected to do certain things, but unfortunately it is not drawn that way at all.

Let me call attention to the duties imposed upon the registrants on page 22.

The first is:

To provide and maintain or secure, when necessary and practicable, adequate railroad connections with its place of business.

The second is:

To furnish the services and facilities of its business on fair and reasonable terms and without unjust discrimination to persons applying for such service and facilities: Provided, That it shall set aside such portion of the facilities of its business, as determined by the commission, as may reasonably be necessary to accommodate small shippers and local patrons.

In other words, if the commission can persuade or by indirection compel a business concern engaged, we will say, in putting up bacon in glass jars to take out a license, the factory and facilities of that concern may be placed at the disposal of anybody else that desires space.

(3) To impose only such charges and rates as are reasonable for the service or facility afforded.

That is, the price-fixing of the product that is processed or stored. They can fix the price of any of those articles.

(4) To exercise such care of the live stock, live-stock products, perishable foodstuffs handled by it as may be necessary to prevent undue loss in connection therewith.

I have no comment to make upon that.

(5) To maintain sanitary conditions in the conduct of its business.

The meat-inspection service of the Department of Agriculture already does that. That is a duplication of function, pure and simple.

(6) To refrain from unfairly discriminatory or deceptive practices or devices in the conduct of its business.

I shall not comment upon that.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

Mr. STERLING. Suppose, on page 22, subdivision (b) should read:

It shall be the duty of every operator.

The word "operator" being used to describe the stockyards. Would the Senator then complain of the duties prescribed which should be complied with by the operator or stockyards?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will say to the Senator from South Dakota that I have this complaint to make: To the best of my information, the Supreme Court of the United States has held that a stockyard is not engaged in interstate commerce, and I do not see what jurisdiction we have over that.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not want to combat the Senator, but I do not want that idea to go without denial.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We can look it up. I am not sure myself.

Mr. KENYON. I think the Senator probably refers to what are known as the Anderson and Hopkins cases in the Supreme Court, that are commonly cited as sustaining that doctrine. I ask the Senator to refer to the case of Swift against United States, in One hundred and ninety-sixth United States, and I think he will see that if any such doctrine should be claimed for the Hopkins and the Anderson cases, they are practically overruled by the Swift case. I thought this: Naturally, stock shipped into a stockyard comes in interstate commerce. Then the transactions take place in the stockyards. Are not those purely State transactions? It would naturally seem that they were; but the Supreme Court, in the case that I have referred to—Swift against United States—holds that these are incidents of commerce; that where there is a general system of receiving stock around the country at different places entering into the stockyards it is different from what might be one transaction; and those matters connected with the stockyards, I think it is fair to say from that decision, are incidents of commerce.

In the Anderson and the Hopkins cases there were involved rules and regulations of the traders' exchange and the live-stock exchange. It was held there that those matters were not in interstate commerce, and under these decisions there is some basis for saying that stockyards might not be considered in interstate commerce; but in the Swift case that was set aside.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have gotten the impression that it would be pretty difficult to reach a definite conclusion that a stockyard or market was an instrument in interstate commerce. For example, may I suggest to the Senator there is a public market here in the city of Washington, and people bring vegetables and fruit to it. They rent stalls in it, I assume. They sell their goods. Those people who cross the District line, bringing their goods in and selling them, are engaged in interstate commerce. But is the owner of the market engaged in interstate commerce? If so, what does he do in exchanging goods between States? I can not see it.

Mr. KENYON. If he himself is engaged in the business of receiving these things from outside of the District, then he is engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but he is not.

Mr. KENYON. If he merely owns the place——

Mr. WADSWORTH. And charges rentals.

Mr. KENYON. And charges rentals, I doubt very much whether he is engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is all a stockyard does. A stockyard company merely owns the place, provides the facilities for penning the cattle and sheltering them, and hay and grain to keep them alive while they are there being sold. The man who owns the market in a city provides the facilities for sheltering the produce, the vegetables, and the fruit, and provides heat and light, if necessary, to keep the place bright and warm while other people are selling the produce. I can not see how the owner of the market is engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. KENYON. Now, let me say to the Senator, if the owner of the market in addition to all that was himself engaged in the commerce——

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is different.

Mr. KENYON. If he himself owned the place and as an incident to the shipping in had to do with the selling and had to do with the buying, then there is no doubt, I think, that he would be absolutely engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is very different. Then you catch him as a shipper and a buyer.

Mr. KENYON. But you find your stockyards owned and controlled by the parties who are engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but, now, Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa is touching upon the very point that is cured, it is supposed, by this bill. This bill prohibits a packer from owning stockyards. That takes the buyer of live stock out of the ownership of the yards themselves. I am not complaining against that. I think, on the whole, that is a very good thing to do.

Mr. KENYON. After two years.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; of course, you have to give them time; but after that is done this bill still proceeds upon the theory that the stockyards themselves are an incident in interstate commerce and that the owners of the yards are engaged in interstate commerce, and I think that is where the bill fails.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, does not the Senator believe the stockyards are properly instrumentalities of railroads, the same as terminal facilities, passenger depots, and things of that kind?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; I do not.

Mr. KENYON. I think they should be under the interstate commerce act, and placed under the railroad act, and be a part of the railroads. I think it is an indefensible thing that men can own the stockyards and at the same time be the people who are buying the things the stockmen are buying.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This particular provision does not stop that.

Mr. KENYON. I think it does.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then, all right. Having done that, the bill does not surrender its jurisdiction over the stockyards, but proceeds to hold jurisdiction over them as if they were still engaged in interstate commerce.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has contended that the stockyards of the United States should be under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and should be regarded properly as a part of the transportation system of the country; in other words, a part of the railroads. Mr. President, I hope, in the interest of the live-stock producers, that that will never be done. The business of handling or managing a stockyard is something which the average railroad man knows nothing about; and it is a fact, Mr. President, that those few stockyards in the United States which are owned or controlled by the railroads are known in the whole industry as the poorest yards in the country. The only people who are competent to manage stockyards are people whose first concern is with the comfort of the stock; and I think I may mention this, that in the old days of stockyards a great many of them in the United States were wretchedly run. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] remembers that better than I do. The yards were filthy, the employees who handled the animals beat and clubbed them, jammed them in and out of live-stock car doors and in and out of pens, to the great detriment of the stock and the injury of the owner who had shipped them to the market to be sold, and incidentally to the injury of the man who wanted to buy healthy animals, unbruised and uninjured; and one of the greatest things that has happened in the last 10 or 15 years has been the improvement in the management of the stockyards, making them cleaner, more comfortable for the animals, imposing rules and regulations upon the employees to treat the animals decently, and providing for prompt service for feeding them upon arrival, for resting them before they are offered for sale. All those things are of vast importance to the man who produces the live stock out on the farm and has to send it to the market to be sold.

I do not criticize this bill for divorcing the packers from ownership of stockyards. One of the reasons, at least, for packers acquiring ownership of stockyards—I know of some instances—was because the live-stock men begged them to do it, because they, the packers, had some concern in the comfort and welfare of the live stock itself, and the yards were so wretchedly run that they wanted somebody with capital to go in and straighten them out and see that the stock was well taken care of.

It may be declared contrary to good public policy for the packers to own stockyards. Very well. Let us not put them under the railroads, for the railroads do not know anything about it. Let the yards be sold as is provided by the decree entered into between the Government and the so-called five big packers, a decree issued by the Federal court, under which they are given, I think, two years to dispose of their holdings in stockyards. Let them be sold.

Mr. KENYON. The decree, as I understand it, has not been arranged as yet as to that particular phase of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. A plan for the disposition of the holdings has not been finally approved. That is under discussion now. Nevertheless the policy has been adopted by the Government, the decree has been entered, and it is binding.

Mr. KENYON. I understand the Senator does not believe that it is proper or wise to have the stockyards owned by the packers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have never been as alarmed about it as some other people, but I certainly make no objection to the Government declaring that as a policy. But one thing I may be permitted to say: That I hope no Congress will ever pass an act putting the management of the stockyards under the railroads. Let other persons buy the yards, or the controlling interest in them, from those who are now, under the decree, compelled to sell them; and if I had any say about it, Mr. President, or any influence in it, I would see to it that associations of stock producers purchased the yards and continued to see to it that they were managed properly in the interest of the producer and the comfort of the stock. I do not think the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] and I are very far apart on that. But, Mr. President, after the stockyards have been taken away from those who are engaged in interstate commerce, I can not see how those yards are still in interstate commerce.

What happens in the stockyard? A man sends his cattle or his sheep or his hogs from the shipping point nearest his farm or ranch, and he wires or writes his commission man that he is going to do it. Ordinarily he does that. He ships them to himself ordinarily, in care of the commission man, and the commission man receives them when the railroad unloads the stock at a certain set of pens which are known as the unloading pens. That terminates the interstate commerce.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. KENDRICK. I suggest to the Senator from New York that that would apply to possibly a majority of the stock, but not to all of it. Many thousands of cattle, sheep, and other kinds of live stock are consigned to the markets at a longer distance than what we would call local markets. The owners of stock near the local markets would try those markets, and, failing to find satisfactory markets, the stock are reloaded and shipped across State lines into other markets. So the illustration given by the Senator does not apply in anything like all of the cases.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The illustration applies, Mr. President, in a great majority of the cases. But I was not giving that illustration as a portion of the argument. I was only explaining the situation.

Mr. KENYON. May I suggest this to the Senator, too, that if the stockyard is not engaged in interstate commerce, then it would not be under the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. But you put them under the bill.

Mr. KENYON. Oh, no. We define stockyards where there is interstate commerce. It might be a question of fact. You might have a stockyard at Omaha that was absolutely without question in interstate commerce. You might have one in Buffalo that was not. It would not apply unless it was.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not see how the Buffalo yard and the Omaha yard are different.

Mr. KENYON. Those are only used as an illustration.

Mr. WADSWORTH. However, Mr. President, the stock are unloaded from the cars in certain pens, the unloading pens, and then the agent of the owner, in other words the commission man, sends his men to drive them from those unloading pens to another set of pens in the stockyards proper, a set of pens set aside for the use of the commission man, where he proceeds to have the cattle fed and watered by the management of the stockyards. That is all the stockyard does, to feed and water cattle and shelter them. The management of the stockyard does nothing else but feed and water and shelter and weigh the cattle, if they are sold by the pound. The buyers come through the pens and the commission man sells the cattle; and when they are sold the commission man drives them to the loading chutes, if they are to be shipped out by railroad, and the railroad takes charge of them again at the loading chutes, and interstate commerce is then resumed.

But at no point in the transaction are the president and the secretary and treasurer of the stockyards engaged in interstate commerce. They are only feeding, watering, and sheltering the live stock, while other people are selling them. They are not transporting cattle; they are not shipping them anywhere. I do not see how you can engage in interstate commerce unless you transport something across a State line, and stockyard managements do not do that.

Mr. President, the live-stock business is a very big one, and its ramifications go all over an enormous country; and if I may utter a criticism or, perhaps, a warning, we would better not regard this bill merely in the light of the five big packers. There are some other people in the business. There are many, many thousands, and when we are trying to legislate against five concerns, to regulate them, and are actuated almost entirely by the size of those concerns, it is a very serious thing to go ahead without thinking of all the other elements in the business, which have no connection whatever with the five big packers, which are not engaged in interstate commerce at all. And I think it is a rather dangerous proposal to set up a Federal live-stock commission and clothe it with power to issue regulations which will affect this enormous industry in all its ramifications and complications.

That has been my contention against this bill. I am not here to defend the five big packers. I entertain the impression, Mr. President, that they are the best able to defend themselves of all the people affected by this legislation. They are organized. They can employ counsel. They can appear before the live-stock commission and defend themselves and make their contentions for or against regulations. But what is the little man going to do? He can not employ counsel the year around to keep watching all the regulations and orders issued by the commission and be warned against them. The little men, Mr. President, in the aggregate deal in a majority of the live stock in the United States. I know that assertion is considered rather startling by some people who say that the Big Five control the slaughter of the majority of the live stock in the United States; but they do not control it, and they do not slaughter the majority, and nowhere near it.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. As I understand it, it is the Senator's contention, with which I am inclined to agree, that this bill will apply to any packer engaged in interstate commerce, without regard to the size of his business.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Every one. I think there are about a thousand, though I am not sure. An interesting thing in the testimony before the Committee on Agriculture was that every one of the small packers who came before us testified that they were free from oppression at the hands of the Big Five, and many of them testified that they were making a little more money than the Big Five in proportion to their operations. So they do not need protection very much.

Mr. STANLEY. I understand it is admitted that the profits of the smaller packers were greater than the profits of the larger ones.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Slightly larger. So, Mr. President, I would be glad to have the status of the stockyards straightened out in this bill.

The Senator from Iowa says that it only means the stockyards which are actually engaged in interstate commerce; but the bill does not say so.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not like to keep interrupting the Senator, but if he takes the definition of stockyards on page 2——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let us read it. It provides that—

The term "stockyard" means any place, establishment, or facility maintained and conducted at or in connection with a public market and consisting of pens, or other inclosures, and their appurtenances in which live cattle, sheep, swine, horses, mules, or goats are received, held, or kept for purchase, sale, shipment, or slaughter in commerce.

It is the cattle and the sheep that are to be sold in commerce. It is not the stockyards which are engaged in commerce. Under that definition and wording the bill gives jurisdiction to the commission over the stockyards. I think I am right about the definition.

Perhaps, Mr. President, we can resume discussion of title 5 again. On page 22, subdivision 7, it reads:

It shall be the duty of every registrant to keep complete and accurate accounts and records of its business and to submit reports when called for and in such form as may be prescribed by the commission; and

(8) Otherwise to conduct its business in such manner as may be prescribed in rules, regulations, and orders issued under this section by the commission to carry out the purposes hereof.

Section 8 can very well be described as the section which is intended to pick up everything that all the other sections may have missed, and gives complete power over all the things that may have been forgotten in the previous ones.

In the middle of page 23, line 11, the bill provides:

It shall be the duty of the commission—

And this, I think, is very interesting—to prepare standardized plans and specifications for grounds, buildings, and other facilities suitable for the business conducted or to be conducted by registrants and to furnish such plans and specifications free of charge to such registrants or to applicants for certificates of registration who have given assurances of undertaking the construction and operation of such buildings and facilities.

That is paternalism gone pretty far when the Government draws the plans of the buildings and all the facilities.

(2) Furnish to registrants reports embodying existing knowledge concerning satisfactory and economical appliances and methods of food preservation by cold storage, freezing, cooking, dehydration, or otherwise.

The Department of Agriculture is doing that now. That is plain duplication of functions. The Department of Home Economics, the Bureau of Animal Industry, and the Bureau of Chemistry in the Department of Agriculture, if my recollection is not pretty bad, are investigating these very things now and are sending out bulletins all over the United States. I hope we are not going to duplicate to that extent.

Subdivision 3 reads:

Cooperate with registrants in procuring for them adequate services from common carriers, by railroad or otherwise.

My recollection is that that is the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission, under the railroad law, to cooperate with manufacturing concerns and other concerns engaged in commerce in getting railroad connections. Here we are setting up another body to do that same thing.

(4) Furnish to registrants all available information as to supplies of foodstuffs handled by such registrants, and the location and movement and transportation costs of such foodstuffs.

I have no comment to make upon that, although it comes very close to duplicating the functions of the Bureau of Markets in the Department of Agriculture.

(5) As far as practicable, when requested by any such registrant, provide for the inspection by agents of the commission of the live stock, live-stock products, or perishable foodstuffs received or distributed by such registrant to determine the quality, quantity, or condition thereof.

The meat-inspection service of the Department of Agriculture does exactly that thing now. It maintains an inspection service of all the meat-food products going into interstate commerce. Every slaughterhouse, every butcher shop, every packing house whose products go into interstate commerce, is to-day under supervision of the meat-inspection service of the Department of Agriculture. This would duplicate that.

At the proper time I think I shall venture a motion to strike out title 5, because, I think in practice—and I say this in all sincerity—it will result in compulsory license. I think it will be impossible for the average business concern, especially the small ones, to resist the implied command or invitation by the Congress, as set forth in the bill, to take out a license. The invitation or the reduction will be so strong that in effect they will be compelled to do it, and then we will have a Federal licensing system for the hundreds and hundreds of undertakings and with power granted to the commission to do all these things with relation to these licenses, even to fixing the price of their products.

Mr. President, I had not intended this afternoon to speak so long. On another occasion I wish to comment upon some other features of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the able address of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has been listened to most of the time by only five Senators. At this particular moment nine Senators are in the Chamber. I do not know where the other Senators are, but I think it an outrage that a bill is before the Senate that if enacted into law may mean the death of one of the largest businesses in the country, and it will be the beginning of placing all business of the country in the hands of commissions located at Washington, which would mean the destruction of businesses that has taken years to establish.

When the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] the other day delivered his address, although it was earlier in the day, the greater part of the time there were not to exceed a dozen Senators in the Chamber.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, in behalf of the Senator from New York and myself I would like to inquire of the Senator from Utah if he thinks it is due to the fact that it happened to be the Senator from New York and the Senator from Iowa speaking. That might be a pretty good excuse.

Mr. SMOOT. No; and I will say without a question of doubt, that I would not care what Senator it was that was speaking upon the subject there would have been no more Senators present than have been during the discussion of the bill by the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from New York.

What is the use of Senators spending their time in trying to discuss a matter of this kind if we can not have other Senators present to listen to what is said?

Mr. KENYON. I would like to ask the Senator what is the matter with the United States Senate, if anything? Why is it that no more interest is taken in legislation?

Mr. SMOOT. I have been trying to ascertain for a number of years what is the matter and have tried to come to some conclusion, but I have not arrived at a conclusion that has been satisfactory to myself. We discuss measures of the most vital importance to the country. We see Senators come into the Chamber to vote who many times have not read the bill under discussion, and all that is asked is, How does the committee stand on it?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I have often wondered what the people visiting the Senate think of the situation. Will not the time come before long when the Senate is in session, particularly when there are subjects involving such far-reaching results as the pending bill does, that we can have the presence of Senators? I believe it will come. I think it is the duty of every Senator to at least give a part of his time to the Senate when in session. But we have grown into the habit of simply answering the roll call and then going out of the Chamber and not coming back again until the bell rings either for a vote or for another roll call.

I now yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not true that when any really important measure, to which there is strenuous opposition, is before the Senate, we generally find at least a quorum here? Is it not fair to presume that on this measure, which has been before Congress so long and has been discussed so thoroughly, there is no real opposition to the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think the Senator is stating the case correctly. We have had packer legislation before the Senate on several occasions, but the pending bill is worse than any former bills presented.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is only one criticism I make of the last expression of the Senator that this should be called packer legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. It has been so wrongfully designated and is what Senators understand it to be.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It goes infinitely beyond the packer. If it were merely packer legislation, confined to the so-called Big Five, we could discuss it upon that basis, but this goes infinitely beyond that. It will tax the whole live-stock industry from the calf to the dining table.

Mr. SMOOT. If Senators had been in the Chamber and listened to what the Senator from New York has said, there would not have been a question in their minds that that is what the bill really provides I called it packer legislation because that is what legislation of this character has been designated in the press of the country, upon the floor of this Chamber, and it is generally so known because the people of the country have come to the conclusion, or at least the understanding, that it only affects the five great packers of the United States.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I would like to suggest to the Senator from Utah that there has gone out a general impression in some way that this is the short session and that Congress would do nothing but pass appropriation bills. I think that sentiment is found among a good many Senators. I do not subscribe to it at all, and I do not think the Senator from Utah does, but here are tremendously important bills pending, outside of this bill. One we have had under discussion in the morning hour ought to be disposed of. Here is the Sheppard-Towner maternity bill that should be taken up and disposed of. But if it was generally understood in Congress that instead of sitting around and doing nothing up to the 4th of March except appropriation bills, that we were going to get down to business and either pass these measures or defeat them, or at least give them their day in the Senate, I believe there would be a very different sentiment. I am inclined to think that that idea which has gotten out, and with which the Senator must be familiar, has something to do with the lack of interest in this session.

Mr. SMOOT. It may be the case, but the Senator also knows that this same condition of things has taken place for two or three years.

Mr. KENYON. I know it.

Mr. SMOOT. Whether it be the short session or whether it be the long session, I am in hopes that something may come that the practice that has grown up in this body of late would be reversed.

So far as I am concerned I do not wish to enter into a discussion of the provisions of the bill at this late hour this afternoon, but I will be ready to go on with it to-morrow. I shall, however, take a little time in a preliminary way to discuss one phase of the measure before adjournment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Would the Senator like to have an invitation extended to the other Senators to come in?

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all, I will say to the Senator; it will do no good; it will simply disturb those who can hear the bell in what they are doing. Those who are out upon the golf links or out of their offices will not hear it, and we shall not get them here.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Therefore, I think I will suggest the absence of a quorum. It might be a good thing to have them disturbed.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator not to do that to-night, because I do not want to disturb them.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Very well, then, I will withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the idea has gone abroad and it is in the minds of most of the people of the country that the reason for this legislation is that the packers have not only been robbing the consumer but robbing the stock raiser as well. The press has been filled with such statements by all sorts of sensational writers, and it has been dinned into the ears of the American people until they really believe it.

If the authors of this proposed legislation wish really to reach the profiteers in the United States, if they desire to get at the profiteers who handle food and meat products, they had better change this bill; they had better strike out its provisions which are designed to control the business of the packers, whose establishments are doing business upon the least percentage of profit on all turnovers of any in America or in any part of the world.

There is something radically wrong in the distribution of goods in the United States; it costs altogether too much money. The profits which have been made by the retailers of the District of Columbia—and I take it for granted that the condition is only the same in the District as in most other parts of the United States—have been in some cases criminal. The profits which have been made by the retailer upon the meat from a steer have been generally more than the price paid for the steer, the cost of railroad transportation of the steer to the packer, and the cost of slaughtering the animal and the preparation of the meat for the market.

I generally keep a record of what I pay for goods in the District. I have such records running some 10 years back. They are not in my handwriting, but in the handwriting of the grocer, and embrace the daily purchases, with prices. As I go back to the year 1912 and look at the prices which I then paid for sirloin steak and compare them with the prices on the bill which I received day before yesterday and a few other bills which I have received this month, the figures are somewhat startling.

I hope that those who are interested in the pending measure may take note of what the actual conditions are, and, instead of pressing the pending bill, will prepare some legislation to regulate the prices which are charged the consumer. If they will do that the story will be an altogether different one.

I notice that on the 14th day of December, 1912, the best sirloin steak which I then bought in the District of Columbia, 4 pounds, cost $1, or 25 cents a pound. I have a bill here that was rendered on the 9th day of the month for 4 pounds of the same kind of steak, which cost $2.20—120 per cent increase in the price of steak, while the price of the meat being sold by the packers, so called, is very little different now from what it was on the 1st day of December, 1912. I can go through the whole list here, Mr. President, and show to the Senate that it is not the packers who are culpable.

It is so not only as to meat, but it is also true as to nearly everything which one purchases. I thought I would test that proposition. Last June before I left for home I picked up a bill which had been rendered for groceries which had been purchased at retail on some date in June. Taking that bill I went down on Pennsylvania Avenue and bought a wholesale bill of each one of the articles. I figured up the retail price I paid for all of the items, and then figured up the wholesale price upon the same articles, and the difference between the wholesale and the retail prices was 87 per cent! Rather a handsome profit. No telling what the difference would have been if I could have purchased from the producers.

If the Senate of the United States desires to help the consumers in this country, and if it has the power to do so, it seems to me that we are beginning at the wrong end of the line.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if the Lever Act would not cover such a situation as he has indicated showing the charging of unreasonable prices?

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps it could, but it does not do so.

Mr. KENYON. Has not the Congress of the United States given the power to the Attorney General's office to remedy it, so far as law can remedy it? I do not know, but I suspect that if there were some attempt to enforce the Lever Act it might result in lowering some of the prices.

Mr. SMOOT. All I know is that, Lever Act or no Lever Act, prices have not been reduced very materially. I notice that during the last few days, however, there has been a reduction of prices, and there will be more.

Following the adjournment of Congress last year I returned home for a few days. I asked my business associates there to begin to reduce their stock of goods on hand, and with that end in view to cut prices and force sales of stock which they had on hand at that time. They, like others, however, thought there was no need of taking such action until other retailers began to cut prices. The jobbers of the country held prices up just as long as they could. They waited for the time when their competitors should make a reduction in their prices, and, Mr. President, they all waited too long.

What is the underlying difficulty to-day with the financial conditions which confront us? The truth is that reductions have come about altogether too suddenly. They ought to have been taking place for over a year and business should have been adjusting itself to the new conditions which everybody ought to have known were going to come upon us.

I do not wish to be an alarmist; such an attitude does no good, but on the contrary sometimes hastens things too rapidly; but I wish to say now that if I could speak to every merchant in the United States, man to man and face to face, and discuss the existing situation, I would tell them all that the best thing for them to do is to meet the situation as it is, and to remember that the time has passed when profits of 100 per cent or 150 per cent can be imposed upon the consumer. I remember years ago when I was the manager of a retail store that it was thought a profit of 25 per cent was about as high as could possibly be obtained.

Mr. POMERENE. A gross profit.

Mr. SMOOT. A gross profit, as the Senator from Ohio says. I do not believe that it is possible to go into a drygoods store in the District of Columbia to-day and find a single item, unless it has been placed upon a bargain counter, on which the profit does not run from at least 40 to 50 per cent.

I know that it costs more to conduct business to-day than it formerly did. We have the telephone, for instance, and from nearly every home there come three or four telephone messages a day requesting that a box of matches or a can of corn or some small article be delivered at once. I know that the advertising carried on to-day by small merchants as well as the large ones imposes an immense burden upon the cost of distributing goods. I am not saying that advertising is not necessary, for if one merchant advertises all must follow suit, and, perhaps, in a way, advertising charges are the least objectionable of all of the extra expenses. Then, too, rentals are higher, and compliance with acts of Congress imposing a limit upon the hours of employment have added greatly to the cost of conducting business. All of these modern methods are recognized as entering into the cost of distributing goods; and the ultimate consumer must pay that cost.

But, despite all those items, there is no question of a doubt that in the last few years prices have been charged the consumer from one end of this country to the other that can not be rightly defended; and why we should pick out the industry that during that whole period of time has charged less profits than any other upon what it has handled and disposed of I can not understand.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, does not the Senator think that if he were addressing any ordinary audience in any section of the country, and should say that he was going to throw a brick and hit on the head a man that had charged too much for his goods, and so forth, about two-thirds of the audience would duck their heads?

Mr. SMOOT. Well, there is something in that. Of course, I recognize that the packers have very few votes and very few friends, and I suppose I shall be criticized now for speaking of the charges made by retailers. You know there are lots of votes among the retailers; but it makes no difference to me, and it certainly should make no difference to any Member of the Senate or the House. We ought to look at the conditions just as they are.

As I came through Chicago the other day I visited the International Live Stock Exhibition. I have witnessed that exhibition a number of times during my life, but I do not remember ever seeing a more wonderful exhibition of live stock than was shown there. I have seen the exhibitions in England and in other foreign countries. I have seen them in this country, as I say, many times in different States; but never did I see such a wonderful collection of live stock as was shown at the exhibition this month. I thought to myself: "Is there any square mile of land in all the world where so much business is done as upon that 1 square mile in Chicago in which the packing industry is located, and to which the live stock of this country is shipped from all parts of the land?"

Mr. President, I went through some of those institutions. I have had some little experience in business, but I thought to myself, "Suppose you were put in charge of this business, could you manage it? Could you have brought it up to the perfection in which it exists to-day?" And I had to admit to myself that it would be next to impossible. Here, Mr. President, we find a business that has grown not only in volume but in perfection of handling and distributing its products, until there is nothing like it in all the world; and now we want by legislation to turn it over to be managed by rules and regulations and orders of a commission appointed, created by Congress.

I say, without fear of contradiction, there is not a member of that commission that could manage successfully any one department of that great industry; and if the men who favor this legislation owned the business they would never think of hiring such men for that purpose.

We know the condition. The commissioners are not going to make these investigations personally. Who, then, will make them? Somebody that has passed a civil-service examination; more than likely persons that never conducted business to any extent in all their lives. Who is going to issue the orders and the rules and the regulations? Men who know nothing about the business. If we are going to destroy it, let us do it outright, let us do it at once, rather than to bring about a strangulation that will take perhaps a year or two to accomplish.

I wanted to say that much to-night before entering upon a discussion of the provisions of the bill itself, and I should like the Senate to consider the proposed legislation without any prejudice whatever, and upon the facts rather than upon sensational statements and reports.

It may be that if we pass this legislation it will not be long before it is repealed; but I have never yet seen a case where there has been an agency of investigation created but that that agency always found some excuse for continuing its existence and always found some excuse for an increase of power. You always find them pleading for increased appropriations. Pass this bill and that will be repeated, and the business interests of this country may just as well know now that this is only the first step to be taken. You direct and control by legislation, through a commission, the packing industries of this country, and the next step will be the control of all businesses in this country.

Why, what a splendid time a lot of these clerks passing the civil-service examination would have in directing the business of the United States. And you might as well know that you can not destroy business in the United States without affecting not only the revenues of the United States but the very existence of our country.

Last month I was coming from Los Angeles to my home. I took a party to dinner on the diner. On the menu card there were steaks, and the price of each appearing. I noticed that a small steak was $1.50; a full steak $2. My friend said, "Let us have a full steak, and that will be ample for two." The waiter said, "Oh, yes, sir; that is ample for two." We ordered it. It came in to us. I think it weighed about 4 ounces. It was not enough for one, and it cost $2. I had sent to me a menu card from Seward, Alaska, and I thought to myself, why is it that a full steak in the United States costs a great deal more than a full steak in Alaska? Why is it that eggs in the United States cost more than eggs in Alaska? I see from my bills that eggs are $1.10 a dozen, or were yesterday. But in this menu card from Seward, Alaska, I noticed that not only meat, but practically everything else, costs less, even salads and relishes.

When are we going to stop this in the United States, and how are we going to stop it? Not by licensing the packers. I would like to ask the American people not to buy a single thing that they are not compelled to have until the prices become reasonable.

Mr. President, if the time has come to license business in the United States, treat them all alike. If the time has come when business must be run in the United States by a lot of $1,500 and $1,600 clerks, directed by a commission here in Washington, let it apply to all businesses.

I took occasion to go down to the market the other day to find out the prices at which the packers sell meat in the District; and I think it would be rather interesting to the people of the District to know that the carcasses of beeves from Texas are selling at from 12 to 13 cents a pound; that medium steers from our western States are selling at from 14 to 16 cents a pound, according to weight; that heavy, grain-fed beeves are selling for from 18 to 20 cents a pound.

Mr. President, those prices are the prices at which this beef is delivered to the store, with no expense whatever for even hauling it from the packer's house to the store where the retailer sells the beef.

Mutton is selling to-day wholesale for from 15 to 16 cents a pound. Last night I had upon my table a leg of mutton. It was supposed to be lamb, but the bones were larger than those of any 5-year-old sheep I ever saw in my life. I looked at the check, and I found out that there were 6½ pounds of it, $2,28; that is 35 cents a pound. That lamb-mutton the merchant paid 15 to 16 cents a pound for. It may be, Mr. President, that those things can go on. But let us know where the profiteering is. We are after the man now who sells that for 15 and 16 cents, to control his business. I have a long list here, Mr. President, showing similar results, but why go into it when they are all about the same.

When I was last in Chicago I was asked by one of the packers to go to their hide-storage place. They have built storage space there by the block, buildings 10 and 12 stories high, and there is not a foot of space in any of them but what is filled with hides.

Mr. THOMAS. What are they holding them for?

Mr. SMOOT. It is impossible to sell them, Mr. President. Hides are lower to-day than they were in 1909; but I call the Senate's attention to the following experience I recently had: Two years ago I bought a pair of shoes at Edmonston's for $12 plus the war tax. I purchased another pair, exactly like the others, just before I left for home last June, put them on, and when I went to pay the bill the clerk said, "$18.80." Mr. President, I had them on my feet, was on the way to the train, and I had my old shoes tied up, or I would have told him to take his shoes and keep them. Mr. President, hides to-day are cheaper than they were in 1909, when I could have bought the same shoe for $5.50.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me, the price of hides is lower now than it has been since 1895.

Mr. SMOOT. I am only going back to 1909. We propose to control the one business and we let the man who sells the shoes make any profit he wants.

I had rather a funny experience just the other day in Salt Lake. I was living at the Utah Hotel, and while there met a traveling man representing a large shoe-manufacturing concern. In passing the sample room one day he asked me to come in. I went into the room and looked over his line of shoes, and I asked him the price of different kinds of shoes. I saw there the exact kind of shoe that Mrs. Smoot had purchased in the District of Columbia, made by the identical manufacturer. I asked him what the wholesale price of that particular shoe was, and he said $6.75 per pair. I said, "Mrs. Smoot bought a pair of the same kind of shoes, and she paid $19 plus the war tax for them in the District of Columbia."

Is it the packer that needs regulating? On all of their overturns they make less than 2 per cent. I know that they do a vast volume of business, and the organization is so perfect, Mr. President, that there is no cog loose in those great organizations. I wish that the business interests of this country, from one end of it to the other, were so ably managed. And now we propose the business shall be controlled by a commission. We propose that a commission shall prepare and issue, with the effect of law, rules and regulations and orders for the management of the business.

I have no excuse to make for the packers or anybody else who violates the law. I do not think for a minute the packers care anything about an ownership in the stockyards. In fact, I know they do not. They were provided in order that the business could go on without interruption and the stock shipped to market taken proper care of.

I know, Mr. President, that the only reason the packers invested in refrigerator cars was because they found that unless they were in a position to secure such cars the very day they wanted them, aye, the very hour, their products in many cases would spoil. Their experience taught them the railroads could not or would not furnish the cars necessary and at the time required; no profit is made in their ownership.

Suppose we had had no packers, Mr. President, when the late war was declared. Do you think we would have shipped the billions of pounds of meat that were shipped to our Army, the reports showing that there were less than 20,000 pounds of spoiled meat from the packers' doors until it was fed to our men in France? Do you think that could have ever happened, or do you think that the Government of the United States could have secured it, without an organization such as existed in this country?

Mr. President, as to the details of the bill I shall offer some suggestions, and I have some amendments to offer to it, if this Congress is going into this class of legislation. I can not believe that they would if they understood it. I do not believe, Mr. President, that it is possible that a majority of the House and a majority of the Senate would support legislation of this kind if they really knew what it meant.

Therefore I am going to ask the chairman of the committee if he will not consent that we take an adjournment at this time until to-morrow. I do not want to begin the discussion of the bill itself.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, would the Senator be willing to take a recess until to-morrow? I think that we can dispose of this bill one way or the other in the course of two or three days.

Mr. SMOOT. Really, there is not such a necessity for immediate action upon this as there was upon the grain bill, and while I do not know of anything particular to come up in the morning hour to-morrow, there is nothing gained by recessing and having routine matters come in later, asking permission that they be presented out of order.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to say to the Senator that I do not want him to go on if he does not care to do so.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to proceed to-night. I wish to say also that to-morrow I expect to go on as soon as the morning business is closed.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to say to the Senator with all candor, there are many important bills pending which ought to be passed at this session. I realize that it is the short session, and all that. We have a bill which the War Department is very anxious to have passed, the bill providing for the manufacture of atmospheric nitrogen. It is a bill which is of very great importance to the people of the country, a bill which has been recommended by the administration. I believe there are more important bills standing upon the calendar now than at the beginning of any other session since I became a Member of this body. As one Senator, I am willing to work late and early to help dispose of them. I know that no one works harder than the Senator from Utah. We all know that. Could we not take a recess until to-morrow and go right on with the bill until we dispose of it?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not care what the Senator does. All I care to do is to say what I have to say. But I do not care to go on to-night.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to say to the Senator from Utah that the members of the committee who have had this bill in charge are of the opinion that we ought to dispose of the matter one way or the other.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator as to that.

Mr. GRONNA. We are glad to have suggestions. The bill is not perfect, and we are glad to have suggestions from any Senator. We sincerely hope to have their cooperation and approval. The whole country, I believe, is of the opinion that legislation of some sort with reference to the great packing industry must be passed, and we might just as well meet the situation frankly and fearlessly. So far as I am concerned, I have no grievance against the packers any more than I have against the farmers of the country; none whatever. It is simply a measure which I believe would be beneficial not only to the people generally but would be beneficial to the packers. This constant agitation which has been going on, and I might say the propaganda which has been going on from both sides, is not doing very much good, and I believe the Senator will agree with me on that.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that there is propaganda from both sides. There is no doubt about it at all, but that ought not to throw us off our feet. We ought at least to keep our heads.

Mr. GRONNA. I have confidence in the membership of this great body that there is enough genius, enough brains, enough patriotism and wisdom, and we understand the English language. I am perfectly willing to leave it to the lawyers of the Senate to write the bill and make it in such form that it will be workable and that it will do justice not only to the public but to the packers.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator will qualify that statement. I would not want to leave it to the lawyers of this body. I want to say something as a business man, and I think the Senator ought to. I have not any desire in my heart to do other than just what I think is in the best interests of the business of the country.

Mr. GRONNA. I am sure of that.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the position I take. It would be perfectly useless for me to go on to-night. The Senator may do just as he pleases, recess or adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who complains about the absence of Senators, that if he insists upon an enforcement of Rule V, clause 1—

> No Senator shall absent himself from the Senate without leave—

he will probably get a hearing to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. I thank the Chair for calling my attention to it.

Mr. GRONNA. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 15, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 14, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty Father, look down from Thy throne of grace upon this sin-stricken world with its sorrow and grief, with Thy loving compassions, and teach us the better way. "Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn!"

Inspire us with more generosity, less selfishness, more love, less hate, more religion, less creed, more devotion, less conventionality, more humanity, less individuality, more heaven, less hell.

> Oh why should the spirit of mortal be proud?
> Like a fast-flitting meteor, a fast-flying cloud,
> A flash of the lightning, a break of the wave,
> He passeth from life to his rest in the grave.

Increase our faith in Thee and in humanity, in the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. LUFKIN. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the question of the permanent restriction of immigration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the permanent restriction of immigration. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REPORT OF THE PUBLIC BUILDINGS COMMISSION.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] I ask unanimous consent to file a report of the Public Buildings Commission for printing in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to file a report of the Public Buildings Commission for printing in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

REPORT OF THE PUBLIC BUILDINGS COMMISSION.

(Presented by Mr. LANGLEY.)

The Public Buildings Commission believes that a report of its activities since its creation will be of interest to Congress at this time.

The legislative act approved March 1, 1919, provides that the "commission shall have the absolute control of and the allotment of all space in the several public buildings owned or buildings leased by the United States in the District of Columbia," with certain exceptions. The commission is composed of seven members—two Senators, two Members of the House of Representatives, the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, the officer in charge of Public Buildings and Grounds, and the Supervising Architect or the Acting Supervising Architect of the Treasury. Ten thousand dollars was appropriated for the expenses of the commission.

The work of the commission has been conducted with the following objects primarily in view:

First. To save the Government as much money as possible in rental charges by moving activities from rented to Government-owned space wherever feasible.

Second. To settle office space disputes among the departments. (The commission is glad to say these have been few in number.)

Third. To provide, so far as circumstances would permit, suitable and adequate space for each department of the Government.

Immediately upon its organization the commission undertook and completed a very comprehensive survey of all office space occupied by the Government in this city, both rented and Government-owned.

This survey gave such information as the name and location of each building occupied by the Government, gross space occupied, the number of employees housed therein, space used for files, space used by employees, average number of square feet per employee, and other data of like nature, which enabled the commission to get a very clear view of the situation in each building. Taking 60 square feet per employee as a basis, it was not difficult to single out the overcrowded buildings and those which were too sparely occupied. Illustrating the haphazard manner in which these buildings were being used, it might be added that the commission found one building so crowded that each employee was occupying an average of only 11 square feet. Other buildings ran as high as 200 square feet per employee.

The survey showed the necessity for a number of moves and readjustments of space, and these were immediately ordered by the commission. The result was the release of a considerable number of rented buildings and a more even distribution of the space in Government-owned buildings.

A comparison of the rentals paid by the various departments on June 1, 1919, when the commission completed its first survey, and the present will no doubt be of interest:

Department.	Annual rentals June 1, 1919.	Annual rentals Dec. 1, 1920.

Totals	1,134,581.68	733,364.80

[1] Rentals for buildings occupied by the Railroad Administration are now being paid by funds derived from the operation of the railroads.

The difference between these two totals shows a saving in rental charges to the Government of $401,216.88, to which should be added the $86,279.40 rental now being paid by the Shipping Board, making a total saving of $487,496.28. The reason for adding this amount to the total is that arrangements have been made for the entire personnel of the Shipping Board to occupy the new Navy Building, and as soon as the necessary details can be worked out the move will be made.

THE TEMPORARY BUILDINGS.

There are now in this city 15 temporary nonfireproof buildings which were built by the Government during the war. This does not include the Navy Building, the Munitions Building, and Building E, at Sixth and B Streets, which are temporary but fireproof. It has been against the policy of the commission to place permanent departments of the Government in these inflammable structures whenever it could be avoided. It has in a few instances, however, been unavoidable. This reluctance on the part of the commission to place permanent activities in these buildings will account for the fact that in some of them are to be found considerable areas of unused space. This is particularly true of units A and B, Sixth and B Streets. Some might argue that departments of the Government occupying rented space should be moved immediately into this unoccupied space. Take the Department of Labor for example. It is occupying a splendid building at Seventeenth and G Streets, rented it is true, but at the very reasonable figure of 28 cents per square foot. Would it be the part of wisdom to direct this department to vacate the building and move into one of those inflammable structures when they have a very distinct bargain in their rental charges? Other examples of a similar nature are: The Civil Service Commission, paying 35 cents per square foot; the Department of Commerce, 35 cents per square foot; the Interstate Commerce Commission, 36 cents per square foot; and the Panama Canal office, 37 cents per square foot. The commission believes that in cases like these, where the departments are adequately housed at a very reasonable figure, they should continue to occupy their present quarters until they can be provided for in permanent Government-owned structures.

It will be necessary to raze two of the temporary buildings during the coming year, as the owners of the ground upon which they are located decline to renew the lease. They are the Corcoran Courts Building, on New York Avenue near Seventeenth Street, and the Council of National Defense Building, at Eighteenth and D Streets. The commission has already provided space elsewhere for the occupants of these buildings and their demolition will cause no inconvenience to the service. With reference to the remaining temporary buildings, the commission believes they also should be razed at the earliest practicable date, or as soon as their retention is no longer a matter of necessity. They were built to last only a very short time, and as the years go by the expense of maintaining them will continue to mount.

EXPENDITURES.

As stated in another part of this report, an appropriation of $10,000 was placed at the disposal of the commission. Of this amount there still remained to the credit of the commission on September 30, last, when the last report was made to the auditor, an unexpended balance of $5,502.58. Thus the commission has expended during the first 19 months of its existence the sum of $4,497.42. The following statement will show how the funds have been spent:

Personal services (including salary of the secretary)	$3,837.12
Printing	130.75
Car tickets	40.63
Office supplies	227.05
Automobile repairs	252.05
Telephone	9.82

REORGANIZATION OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE BRANCH OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas submits a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. J. Res. 339, being "A joint resolution to create a joint committee on the reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government." That the resolution shall be the continuing order of business, except consideration of conference reports and matters on the Speaker's table. That there shall be one hour of general debate, confined to the subject matter of the resolution, to be divided equally between the proponents and opponents of the resolution. That at the conclusion of the general debate the resolution shall be read for amendments under the five-minute rule. That at the conclusion of the consideration of the resolution for amendments, the resolution, together with the amendments, if any, shall be reported to the House. That the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The Committee on Rules, to which was referred H. Res. 610, submits a privileged report on said resolution with the following amendments:

In line 2, after the word "resolution," inserting "the Committee on the Judiciary shall be discharged from further consideration of S. J. Res. 191, the same being 'A joint resolution to create a joint committee on the reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government,' and,"

In lines 4, 5, 6, and 7, after the word "of," in line 4, striking out "H. J. Res. 339, being 'A joint resolution to create a joint committee on the reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government,'" and inserting in lieu thereof "the same."

In lines 7, 8, and 9, striking out the sentence "That the resolution shall be the continuing order of business, except consideration of conference reports and matters on the Speaker's table."

In line 10, striking out the words "one hour" and inserting in lieu thereof "not to exceed two hours."

The resolution as amended will read as follows:

"Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the Committee on the Judiciary shall be discharged from further consideration of S. J. Res. 191, the same being 'A joint resolution to create a joint committee on the reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government,' and it shall be in order to move that the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the same. That there shall be not to exceed two hours of general debate, confined to the subject matter of the resolution, to be divided equally between the proponents and opponents of the resolution. That at the conclusion of the general debate the resolution shall be read for amendments under the five-minute rule. That at the conclusion of the consideration of the resolution for amendments the resolution, together with the amendments, if any, shall be reported to the House. That the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit."

The committee recommends that the resolution with these amendments be adopted.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I note the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrews, Md.	Flood	Kitchin	Riddick

Edmonds	Kahn	Rainey, Ala.	Winslow
Emerson	Kennedy, Iowa	Rainey, H. T.	Wise
Ferris	Kettner	Ransley	Yates
Fields	King	Reed, N. Y.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and sixteen Members have answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may be allowed to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may sit during the sessions of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REAPPORTIONMENT.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed as a House document the apportionment of each number of Representatives from 435 up to 483, inclusive, by the method of major fractions, and that 1,000 extra copies be put in the document room.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that there may be printed as a House document the figures relative to reapportionment showing the apportionment from 435 Members up to 483 in the event of an increase, and that 1,000 extra copies may be put in the document room. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, what basis does the gentleman make his figures upon?

Mr. SIEGEL. Based on the method of major fractions.

Mr. WINGO. Does the table which he offers show a different basis that might be used?

Mr. SIEGEL. It shows what it will be on the basis of having a House from 435 up to 483.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman's table show the result if they use some other basis?

Mr. SIEGEL. I have each one here separately.

Mr. WINGO. Then it is complete between 435 and 483?

Mr. SIEGEL. It is complete.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE BRANCH OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the resolution submitted just before the point of order was made brings before the House a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS]. That resolution proposes a step to be taken by the action of the two Houses of Congress to secure the appointment of a committee to ascertain what economies may be inaugurated in the executive departments of the Government by the consolidation or the reduction of bureaus or commissions in the departments of the Government. That there is necessity for this action no one will question.

For a long period of years there has been growing up in all the executive departments of the Government one bureau or one commission after another. There is now overlapping duplication of governmental activities in many of the departments of the Government. The high cost of Government in the United States stands out above all the other Governments of the world. I know that for 20 years the socialist rather than the political economist has dominated the activities of this Government. [Applause.]

Every group of people who have imagined that they could better mankind sought a bureau or commission, and at the next session of Congress that bureau or commission was duly created. It started when we appropriated $25,000 or $30,000 the first year, and grew from that into the hundreds of millions.

This thing has gone on to such an extent that there are to-day more than 40 bureaus actively operating in the interest of the public health of the United States. That is what they say they are doing. There are several different agencies in this Government undertaking to operate on the rat. You will find different publications by different agencies of the Government telling you how to get rid of rats. If you take yourself seriously and the Government seriously you will find from studying these various publications that rats are sometimes destroyed by rat dogs, and that the dog known as the rat terrier is probably the best rat dog. You will also discover that rats are sometimes killed by cats, although it takes a good sized cat to perform the operation.

You will also discover that some other activity of the Government says that the rat can be killed by getting him into a trap, and then it tells you how to dispose of him after you have trapped him. Another agency recommends poison, and so on. These different activities of the Government are costing the American people hundreds of thousands of dollars. These publications are published seriously and sent out to the farmers and the business men and to the community in general.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to say to the gentleman in carrying out his arguments that this morning there was laid before the Indian Committee a recommendation from the Indian Commission, an honorable body of men, that would cost the Government not less than $5,000,000 if put into effect, and the most of those recommendations are absolutely not needed and useless.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I think that something ought to be done along the lines suggested by the gentleman, but the gentleman has looked over the so-called budget system bill——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I helped to prepare it.

Mr. GARNER. Does not the gentleman think that that will meet all the purposes sought to be obtained by this commission?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Probably not.

Mr. GARNER. What could this commission do that is not contemplated by the budget bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For example, I think this legislative commission would recommend legislation that would consolidate all of the health-promoting activities of the Government, there now being anywhere from 41 to 46 bureaus.

Mr. GARNER. The very purpose of the budget system—and we were particular about our wording of it, if the gentleman will recall—in fixing the duty of the independent auditor was to provide that he suggest to Congress where these various bureaus could be consolidated and where economy can be had. What I am afraid of, if we create this commission, is that we are going to have a duplication of work and friction between the recommendations of the commission, which will probably go over a period of two years, and the independent auditor and the executive budget coming from the President's office. If you have friction between these various things, it will redound to holding back legislation rather than promoting it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas, I have no doubt that the commission sought to be created by the resolution offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] would cooperate with the budget officers in accomplishing economies that are contemplated by the budget system.

Mr. GARNER. Is there not danger in this commission having undue influence with the President's budget? I do not think it will have any influence with the independent budget as created, but will not this commission tend to have an extraordinary influence on the President's budget as contemplated by the budget bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think not. As I understand it, legislation will be necessary in order to accomplish the economies that are so highly desirable. We must get rid of duplications and overlapping of bureaus. That can not be accomplished by an auditor. That can only be accomplished by legislation, and this commission is sought for the purpose of suggesting such legislation as may be necessary and useful in accomplishing these economies. It was suggested years ago that if this Government were run as a large private corporation is run, there would be a saving of $300,000,000 annually in the expenses of the Government. It is contemplated now that there can be a saving of $500,000,000 with the proper consolidation and the elimination of certain governmental activities. Many of them are absolutely useless. Many of them are merely serving the purpose to-day of giving splendid jobs to people who ought to be out in the country earning a living, producing something. Thousands upon thousands of useless employees litter the public buildings in Washington, rendering no useful service to the American people. It is the purpose of this resolution to find out where employees may be dispensed with, and to inaugurate the necessary economies in the Government that the people so earnestly desire.

I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], to dispose of as he sees fit, and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, the minority will certainly throw no obstacle in the way of the adoption of this resolution, but my prediction is that the effort to accomplish this great work in this way will not be entirely successful. The gentlemen who serve on this joint committee on reorganization will not have time to perform the task assigned to them thoroughly. If the Congress wishes the public service of the United States to be thoroughly reorganized, my own individual judgment is that we would better get a joint committee on reorganization composed of experts who know how to handle the job. There are few, if any, Members of this body who are experts in governmental departmental administration. Nevertheless the majority is willing, it seems, to approach the task by appointing a committee of this House. The purpose is economy. No doubt there has been great waste, no doubt there has been duplication, and if this joint committee on reorganization can eliminate any of the duplication or reduce expenditures, all well and good—we bid you Godspeed. I have no further comment to make.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I am curious to know whether this will not duplicate the work of the budget commission, if both of them do their duty.

Mr. POU. I think I am hardly competent to answer that question. I can conceive how there might be a duplication of work, but I would rather refer the inquiry of my friend to some budget expert.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have not been able to see a copy of this rule. What provisions are made in it for offering amendments?

Mr. POU. House joint resolution 339 will be subject to amendment, if the special rule is adopted.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have not been able to get a copy of the special rule.

Mr. POU. Amendments are not cut off.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I desire to understand the procedure under this special rule. I have been unable to obtain a copy of the rule. Are we proceeding to the consideration of House joint resolution 339, or are we to take up Senate joint resolution 191?

Mr. POU. As I remember, the Senate resolution was made in order by the special rule, was substituted for the House resolution. Is that correct?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Senate resolution may be substituted for the House resolution.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman says it may be substituted. Is it the purpose to substitute it?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I desire to inquire further if the resolution is to be read for amendment under the five-minute rule?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, yes; the House will resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. Yes.

UMI

Mr. SEARS. First stating that I am in hearty accord with my colleague from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] along the line of economy, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is it not a fact that the gentleman from Kansas has been the chairman of this committee for more than a year, in fact, since last May, a year ago, and that these conditions have existed all during that time.

Mr. POU. Of course I answer that in the affirmative.

Mr. SEARS. Is it not also a fact that during the last session of Congress when we were complaining of the number of employees, our Republican friends were in the majority in this House?

Mr. POU. Certainly; that is true. Speaking for myself, however, I would rather approach a great subject like this from an entirely nonpartisan standpoint.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the only part of this resolution, known as the Reavis resolution, to which I have objection is that part which gives carte blanche authority to the committee to employ assistants and to make expenditures to be charged to the House and the Senate. There ought to be some kind of limitation.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment. I am with the gentleman from Nebraska and with every other man in this House on reorganization and simplifying of business and cutting out duplications, and effecting real, true economy in the affairs of government, but we can not escape our own individual responsibility. Every man in this House is responsible for the conditions that now exist in the Government. The two great parties represented in this House are equally responsible for the conditions which have existed and now exist in this Government. It is a well-known fact in the House and in Washington, although it is not known abroad in the United States, that a majority of the bureau chiefs in this Government are of the same political faith as the majority party now in this House. In other words, they are Republicans. And it is a well-known fact—here in the House but not known throughout the land—that since the war resolution was passed in April, 1917, the majority party now in this House then and ever since has had just as many Members here as the present minority, there being an equal number of Republicans and Democrats, we Democrats not having had a majority of the House since the war resolution was passed. We Democrats organized the House in the war Congress simply because we outgeneraled our Republican brothers. It is a well-known fact to the Members of the House but not known abroad that since May 19, 1919, the Republican Party has had a majority of nearly 50 Members here in the House of Representatives. This proposed committee, I hope, is going to effect some economies. From August 20 last until the 5th day of October I spent every single week day here in Washington diligently and carefully going through every single department of this Government, and if my fellow colleagues could have been with me, and if you could have seen what I saw in the various departments, you would think it was the business of every man in this Congress—not merely the business of a select committee of six—to see to it that reorganization is effected, waste, duplications, and idleness eliminated, and real economy established. Take, for instance, the matter of rent. Do you know that when I checked up the vacant office rooms in Government-owned buildings this summer—absolutely vacant, good office rooms, sufficient to house every single department of the Government—I was astounded to find that at that time the Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation alone were renting buildings here in Washington and Philadelphia for which they are paying $558,279.40 a year?

It is the so-called small items that total up much of the gross waste and extravagance. It results from a failure to expend the necessary energy and effort to find out what is going on. As said before we now have ample available space in substantial, comfortable, Government-owned buildings in Washington to properly house every bureau and department, yet we are now paying out hundreds of thousands of dollars in rent to private concerns for leased buildings. It is doubtful whether any Republican Congressman or Senator knows or realizes this, for no moves or rehousings have been authorized, and no steps whatever have been taken by Congress to adjust the situation. Through diligent personal inspection and investigation I have checked up the office rooms that are vacant or available in Government-owned buildings, and the amount of rent the Government, through congressional authorization, is now paying to private concerns, and the following partial figures will illustrate the tremendous and inexcusable waste and extravagance:

AMOUNT OF RENTS CONGRESS IS PAYING IN WASHINGTON—CHECKED TO OCTOBER 1, 1920, FOR THE PRESENT FISCAL YEAR.

For the Department of Justice: $36,000 for the building at 1001 Vermont Avenue, housing the department.

For the Department of Commerce: $65,500 for the building at Nineteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, housing the department; $1,000 for the garage in the alley between Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Streets NW.; and $1,500 for the warehouse at Twenty-sixth and E Streets NW.

For the Department of the Interior: $2,400 for the garage at 627–629 G Street NW., used for garage and storage; $2,700 for the garage at 58 B Street SW., used by Bureau of Mines for fuel yard and garage; $150 for the blacksmith shop at 236 First Street.

For the Department of Agriculture: $35,360 for the building at 1358 B Street SW., used as office and laboratories; $20,000 for the building at 220 Fourteenth Street SW., used as office and storage; $22,800 for the building at 930 F Street, used for offices and storage; $8,500 for the building at 601 Thirteenth Street NW., third floor only, used for offices; $12,000 for the building at 710 E Street NW., used for offices and storage; $16,000 for the building at 216 Thirteenth Street SW., used for offices and laboratories; $9,500 for the building at 513–515 Fourteenth Street NW., used for offices and laboratories; $4,800 for the building at 339–341 Pennsylvania Avenue NW., used for congressional seed distribution; $4,000 for the building at 215 Thirteenth Street SW., used for offices, storage, and mailing; $3,000 for the building at 1316 B Street SW., office of solicitor; $3,000 for the building at 220 Thirteenth Street SW., offices and laboratory; $3,000 for the building at 200 Fourteenth Street SW., offices, laboratory, and storage; $2,700 for the building at 1350 B Street SW., used for offices; $2,500 for the building at 1304 B Street SW., offices, laboratory, and storage; $420 for room 638, Munsey Building, meat-inspection office; $5,400 for the building at 221 Linworth Place SW., offices and laboratory; $3,750 for the building at 220 Linworth Place SW., storage and supplies; $1,200 for the storage warehouse on E between Eleventh and Twelfth Streets SW.; $960 for the building at 212 Thirteenth Street SW., supply and storage; $840 for the building at 216 Twelfth Street SW., storage; $108 for the one-story stable rear of 217 Twelfth Street SW.; $600 for the old warehouse at 929 Seventh Street SW., storage; $500 for the storage building at 2511 M Street NW., storage; $270 for the one-story shop building at 913 E Street NW., rear; $420 for the portion of basement 920 F Street NW., storage; $300 for the building at 215 Linworth Place SW., storage; $84 for the garage in rear of 349 Pennsylvania Avenue NW., storage; $1,000 for the building at 1312 B Street SW., offices; $600 for building at 1369 C Street SW., offices and laboratory; $1,200 for the garage in rear of 1806 E Street NW., garage; $60 for the garage at 930 Baptist Alley NW., garage.

For the United States Tariff Commission: $10,200 for the building at 1322 New York Avenue, offices for the commission.

For the Alien Property Custodian: $30,000 for the building at 1424 Sixteenth Street NW., used for main offices; $1,200 for the building at 1758 N Street NW., used for branch office.

For the United States Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation: $51,261 for the building at 1319 F Street NW., used for offices; $35,018.40 for the building at 1317 F Street NW., used for offices. In addition to the above rented buildings in Washington, the following are by it rented in Philadelphia: $70,000 for the building at 329 South Broad Street, used for offices, but part subleased to other tenants; $275,000 for building at 140 North Broad Street, used for offices, but part subleased to other tenants; $95,000 for building at 921 Delaware Avenue, subleased to other tenants; $32,000 for building at 253–255 North Broad Street, subleased to other tenants.

The Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation could be moved, lock, stock, and barrel, into the office space now available in the New Navy Building at B Street NW., and stop the rental of $86,279.40 it is paying in Washington and stop the rental of $472,000 it is paying in Philadelphia, thus saving over half a million dollars a year rental for this one department of the Government. The tenants now subleasing in Philadelphia could vacate, leaving the Government to pay all.

For the Post Office Department: $19,000 for the building at Fifteenth and H Streets NW.; $7,019.78 for the building at 1438 U Street NW.; $2,500 for the building at 514 Eleventh Street NW.; $2,000 for the building at 1716 Pennsylvania Avenue NW.; $2,000 for the building on Park Road between Fourteenth and Fifteenth Streets NW.; $600 for the building at Twelfth and Monroe Streets NE.; $780 for the building at 6918 Fourth Street NW.; $1,380 for the building at 2018 Nicholas Avenue SE.; $900 for the building at 6 Dupont Circle NW.; $1,380 for the building at 416 Seventh Street SW.; $1,000 for the building at 701 Maryland Avenue; $900 for the garage corner Thirty-first Street and Wisconsin Avenue; $250 for the building corner of Connecticut and Florida Avenues; $600 for the building at corner of Kirk and Lenox Streets.

Space will not permit me to enumerate the rental paid by the Navy Department and other Government bureaus, but the foregoing is sufficient to demonstrate the enormous sums that are appropriated by Congress to pay rent to private concerns for buildings in Washington, and the immediate necessity for proper readjustment by Congress. And it is the present Republican Congress with a majority of nearly 50 Republicans in the present House that made these appropriations.

AVAILABLE SPACE IN GOVERNMENT-OWNED BUILDINGS IN AUGUST 1920.

Now let me tell you about some of our available space in our own buildings. In the new twin structure covering blocks of ground, the Navy and Munitions Building, through all of the corridors of which is a distance of 24 miles, there is at least 80,000 square feet of space available in the Navy Building, and more than 75,000 square feet of space available in the Munitions Building. In addition to the above the enormous space devoted to public restaurants, for which the Government receives no rental, could be cut in half without causing inconvenience to diners. The Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation should have been moved into the Navy Building before Congress adjourned and stop the paying of $558,279.40 rent by it here and Philadelphia.

In Tempo Building No. 1 at Eighteenth and D Streets NW., in August, 1920, the following office rooms were absolutely vacant: Nos. 1306, 1308, 1310, 1311, 1312, 1313, 1314, 1315, 1316, 1318, 1320, 1705, 2029, 2036, 2037, 2038, 2040, 2042, 2044, 2045, 2015–A, 2019–A, 2021–A, 2023–A, 2602, 2603, 2604, 2605, 2035–A, 2037–A, 2025–A, 2027–A, 2029–A, 2031–A, 2033–A, 2306, 2308, 2310, 2312, 2314, 2316, 2318, 2606, 2607, 2608, 2609, 2039–A, 2041–A, 2402, 2404, 2406, 2408, 2409, 2410, 2411, 2412, 2413, 2414, 2415, 2416, 2610, 2612, 2613, 2043–A, 2417, 2505, 2507, 2508, 2510, 2514, 2515, 2516, 2517, 2518, 2601, 2614, 2615, 2616, 2617, and 2618.

In August, 1920, in the new building at 2000 C Street NW., known as the War Trade Board Building, the following office rooms were absolutely vacant: Nos. 1030–B, 1032–B, 1034–B, 1047–A, 1402, 1404, 1508, 1510, 1512, 1514, 1606, 1608, 1616, 1618, 1624, 1630, 1632, 1704, 1705, 1706, 1707, 1708, 1715, 1717, 1719, 1725, 1726, 1731, 1738, 1739, 2023–A, 2025–A, 2225, 2226, 2227, 2228, 2229, 2230, 2231, 2232, 2235, 2236, 2325, 2326, 2327, 2328, 2329, 2331, 2332, 2333, 2334, 2413, 2425, 2427, 2429, 2431, 2433, 2435, 2437, 2439, 2441, 2625, 2626, 2627, 2628, 2629, 2630, 2631, and 2632.

In August, 1920, in the new building at 1730 D Street NW., known as the Council of National Defense Building, the following office rooms were absolutely vacant: Nos. 2503, 2504, 2506, 2507, 2508, 2509, 2510, 2511, 2518, 2519, 2520, 2521, and 2522.

In the new building at Nineteenth and D Streets, known as Food No. 2; in the H. L. Pettus Building, known as Tempo No. 3; in the new building at 2000 D Street NW., known as Fuel No. 3; in the new building at 1800 Virginia Avenue NW., known as Tempo No. 6; in the new building at 1800 C Street NW., known as Fuel 1 and 2; and in the buildings mentioned in the preceding three paragraphs, through a proper transfer of bureaus and a proper destruction of hundreds of thousands of dead files of no value whatever, fully half of the space or more in each of these buildings would be made available for bureaus now housed in rented buildings. To illustrate the size of the new Tempo buildings above, the one occupied formerly by the United States Fuel Administration, known as Tempo No. 4, which is one of the smaller ones of the group, is 408 feet long by 240 feet wide, has a floor area of 140,000 square feet, and contains 425 offices.

In August, 1920, over half of the space in the three large war emergency buildings on the west side of Sixth Street, known as A, B, and C, each covering over a square block of ground with three stories, was vacant and available. While Building D, occupied by the Census Bureau, and Building E, occupied by The Adjutant General's Office, situated on the east side of Sixth Street, are now in use, yet by a proper destruction of thousands of dead files, through congressional direction, several hundred offices could thus be made available. This is likewise true with respect to F building in this group.

The magnificent new War Risk Insurance Building, 10 stories high, with double basement, fronting a full long block on Vermont Avenue NW., and almost a full block on I Street, through a proper readjustment would have much available space in it, notwithstanding complaints to the contrary. Col. R. G. Cholmeley-Jones, who is director of this bureau and who, by the way, is a strong Republican, is a splendid gentleman and has put some efficiency into the bureau, and yet for each of the several million service men he keeps three separate files on three separate floors with no system of filing correspondence. In July Mrs. Ethel Annie Lee, of 3830 Hueco Street, El Paso, Tex., returned to this department its check for $15 because it should have been for $30, and hearing nothing and receiving no further remittances due her, she wrote the department in August, and again in September without replies, and finally appealed to me. After searching the three files kept on three separate floors affecting her soldier-husband, aided by numerous clerks, we finally ascertained that the returned check had been received by the bureau; but not a single one of her letters could be found, demonstrating the necessity of keeping in one file in one place every document of the bureau affecting each service man. For after spending the whole afternoon searching the files on three floors in said large building, the director that night mailed to Mrs. Lee a warrant covering the amounts due her. Thus two-thirds of the enormous space now occupied by muddled triplicate files could be made available for other rent-paying bureaus.

Consider, for instance, the money this Congress is wasting in so-called liquor guarding.

At my request Prohibition Commissioner John F. Kramer had his Mr. J. M. Young make a careful survey of the number of warehouses and the amount of existing intoxicating liquors stored therein, as of date August 1, 1920, and he has certified to me that on August 1, 1920, there were in the United States 280 distillery bonded warehouses and 27 general bonded warehouses, which contained in storage the following: 48,380,687.3 gallons of whisky, 410,569.8 gallons of rum, 936,295.3 gallons of gin, 6,826.3 gallons of high wines, 871,356.6 gallons of alcohol, and 748,279.3 gallons of cologne spirits. In 23 special bonded warehouses there were 864,743.8 gallons of brandy, and in 46 industrial-alcohol bonded warehouses there were 3,230,687.42 gallons of alcohol.

These 376 warehouses have to be guarded by the Government day and night, requiring three shifts for each eight hours, or a total of 1,128 shifts of guards maintained, supported, and paid for out of the Treasury. It requires three hundred and seventy-six times as many guards to guard 376 warehouses as it would to guard only one. It is necessary that these guards be fearless, reliable men of strict integrity, for there is a constant effort being made to steal or unlawfully extract liquor. These 376 warehouses are a constant temptation to lawless bootleggers and thugs. Our guards must be bribeproof. The expense of guarding 376 warehouses is naturally three hundred and seventy-six times greater than guarding one. With 376 warehouses there are three hundred and seventy-six times as many chances of leakage. Congress must promptly require this liquor to be concentrated into one large Government warehouse and stop this one enormous item of expense.

Being a part of the Constitution of the United States, it is therefore now a part of the fundamental law of our land that intoxicating liquor can neither be manufactured nor sold. This law undoubtedly is a permanent one, for before it could be changed Congress by a two-thirds vote of both the House and Senate would have to submit its repeal to the States, and such repeal would have to be ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States, a consummation practically impossible. Whether you are an anti or a pro, being a law-abiding citizen, you favor upholding our Constitution.

Would it not be economy and wise statesmanship for our Government to take over this liquor, paying the wholesale price of April 6, 1917, poison and destroy its possible use as a beverage, and then convert and dispose of it commercially as fuel?

I could go on mentioning other items, item after item of great big sums of duplication, of unnecessary waste and expense, not chargeable to any particular party, but chargeable to all of us because we permitted it to exist. The gentleman from Kansas spoke about the great number of unnecessary employees. I went through one of these buildings and saw a room which contained over 100 employees and not a single typewriter was clicking, but little bunches of young men and young women were standing in groups here and there laughing and talking.

I went to the supervising officer and said, "Do you permit this here?" He said, "What is it to you?" I said, "Just this: I am one of the atoms who help to appropriate the money that pays for all of this. Do you permit it?" Then he said:

> What else can I do? Why, if I make a complaint I have got to put it in the form of charges, and I have got to let a trial be called, and before anything can be done I have got to substantiate those charges in a trial, and if I fail to do it—and it is almost impossible to do it, because when you get to a trial you will find enough witnesses coming in to back up almost every inefficient employee of this Government—instead of him or her going out of the service it will be my neck that is broken. I will be sent home because there are organizations here in Washington to protect the employees and go against any supervisor who will make a complaint.

Later I went to the Secretary of War and I said, "Mr. Secretary, I have an expert photographer employed. I want you to give me authority to let him go with me through several of your departments here and take some pictures I would like to preserve." He said, "What do you want to do with them?" I said, "Well, Mr. Secretary, to be frank with you, I want to be able to show Congress when it meets that you are not entitled to the extra number of employees for which you are asking. I want to show the fact, among many others, that out here in these corridors in front of your office and elsewhere in this building there are 15 to 20 negro porters and messengers doing nothing but laughing, talking, and smoking their fine cigars." He said, "Well, I can not let you do it." [Laughter.] "I can not let you do it." "Why?" "You are interfering with an executive department of the Government. Congress has nothing to do with the executive branch of the Government. Your function is to legislate; my function is to conduct this department." I said, "Mr. Secretary, you ask us to appropriate. Is it our duty, as you see it, just to appropriate the sum for which you ask?" He said, "Yes, sir; you ought to take my word for it and not seek to personally investigate behind what I ask for." "How are we to know whether the appropriations are proper or not?" He said, "You ought to take my word for it and let your committee attend to such matters." I said, "Oh, but, Mr. Secretary, you do not know what is going on; no one man can know all of it; you have not the time to go through all of the branches of your department, and all our committees get is what your bureau chiefs see fit to tell them. I want to find out what is going on, and ought to have the right to preserve the evidence of what I find here." "Oh, but I am not going to let you do it." I said, "Well, Mr. Secretary, that is all right; you do not have to let me do it; and I can not do it if you say 'No,' because somebody will stop my photographer, but I will tell you one thing you can not keep me from doing and which I am going to do. I am going through every department of this Government myself and see what is going on and I am going to report it to Congress. I am going to show just how many of these supervisors are going to these employees and telling them to make certain work last all day when it takes about five minutes to do it." He said, "Mr. Blanton, that does not go on in my department." I said, "All right, Mr. Secretary, I will send for Miss Totten," and she came and I had her make her statement to the Secretary that astounded him as to what had been going on in his department. The great trouble with us Members of Congress is that we do not know enough about our own business. We have been taking the word directly of the heads of these departments, who in turn depend upon the statements of their bureau chiefs, and we depend upon them without knowing real conditions.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman may be permitted to continue his eulogy.

The SPEAKER. The time is controlled by the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BLANTON. I will ask for five additional minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I am speaking from a nonpartisan standpoint. [Applause.] I am a Democrat. I love the Democratic Party of which I am a member, and I did just as much for my Democratic Party in the last election as any man in this House or in this country. I worked just as hard for it and I am here to submit that if we Democrats and we Republicans want to succeed finally instead of letting this kind of transaction go on in our Government we must go to the people and assure them that we are going to eliminate these wastes, idleness, and inefficiency in our Government business and give the people an efficient, economical Government. I am one Democrat who believes that if a Democratic official does wrong it is the duty of Democrats to stop it.

Do you know that one of your campaign managers, efficient, wise, able—the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. Miller—went to the people of this country, from one side of it to the other, in his statement issued to the press, promising that if you Republicans were elected to this House and to the Senate and to the Presidency of the United States, you would see to it that the useless, idle, unnecessary employees of this Government were cut loose and sent home? You promised the people of the United States that very thing. He told you and the people then that you had 40,000 extra, unnecessary, idle employees here in Washington. He told you almost the truth, because you have almost that number here. He told you that you had nearly 200,000 useless, idle employees in the United States who would be cut loose from the pay roll without injuring the affairs and business of this Government. And the people believed him. And you Republicans repeated what he said on almost every husting in the United States.

Now, the first thing your Rules Committee does when it comes back is to grant a rule, that I objected to the other day, for the consideration of this patent bill, not only to keep the employees that are on the roll now but to increase them by several hundred; not only to grant them a few little increases in wages, but to grant them increases in wages extending from $600 to $1,500 raises a year each. Is that keeping your promise to the people of this country? I want to discuss that question when the patent rule comes up, but I want to put you on notice now that you had better be careful about letting that patent bill be passed into law. I am one Democrat who is going to stand on this floor of the House unflinchingly and every time you Republican friends of mine fail to keep your election promises to the people I am going to call the attention of the people of this country to your failure.

You have got to keep your promises or you have got to stand the consequences of your failure. When are you going to begin on this economy? Are you going to just take it all out in appointing extra committees and spending the money on investigations? Or are you going to effect real, true economy? That is what the people want. That is what they expect from your promises. I am earnestly with you on it and am not partisan about it. I will work with you from 10, 14, to 18 hours a day, if necessary, to help effect it. Let us go together like American citizens, cut this waste, this duplication, and this extravagance out, and when we have a Secretary of War who violates the instructions of Congress by recruiting in peace time an Army of 280,000 men when Congress has told him that we did not want an Army of more than 180,000; when we have a Secretary of War like that, who wrongfully creates a deficiency of millions of dollars we must tell him where to head in. That is my idea of conducting the Government of this great country. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

UMI

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, the membership of this House, as well as the country, will appreciate the statement of the gentleman from Texas, and I think not only appreciate it but ought to enthusiastically welcome the exposition of a situation that all of us know exists, but too infrequently call attention to by specific facts. It is an easy matter to make these general charges, but when an individual makes investigation and then charges upon his own information, as was done, it is a real service to the country.

I can not let pass, however, the suggestion made in the last few minutes that the present majority is not respecting the promise that has been made to the country. In the first place, there are certain things that are in the minds of the majority here that will be immediately attended to. One of them that was promised to the country was that immediate steps would be taken to dismantle the war machine. The most specific step that could be taken at any time was taken at once and finished yesterday, when the order was to repeal these war laws and dismantle the war machine. By that single act, when it becomes effective, having received the indorsement of the Senate and of the White House, you will immediately see dismantled individual war organizations built up under specific war legislation and still existing because of facts that need not be repeated by me now.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman in his remarks tell us what war activities are now in progress that will be discontinued after the approval of the law passed yesterday?

Mr. FESS. If the gentleman would please consult the printed pamphlet that was on the table yesterday, he will find all of the laws enumerated, with the organizations that were built up under them.

Mr. BLACK. If the gentleman will permit, I have some knowledge of the list, but what organizations are going to be dismantled by reason of the repeal of the law?

Mr. FESS. All the organizations under the laws that were repealed yesterday, so far as this House can do it.

Mr. BLACK. Does the gentleman have in mind——

Mr. FESS. The gentleman has in mind 87,000 employees now in Washington, many of whom will be discharged when these war agencies are discontinued.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman kindly give us some department that will be discontinued?

Mr. FESS. The gentleman should consult the printed pamphlet and not take my time. The first step that was our obligation to take has been taken without any delay, and the gentleman knows it. And the one thing that ought to be complimented here is that the Democrats did not resist that proposition.

The second step, which is a constructive one, is to put in operation as quickly as possible the budget system. That has been passed by this House. It is over in the Senate now. Whether the Senate will act upon it this session or not I do not know. I am not so sure that the modified budget bill ought to be immediately put in operation. I would much prefer the budget bill as passed by both Houses and vetoed by the President because he seemed to think he ought to have authority to audit his own books rather than make the auditor independent. I am not so sure that we ought to submit to that. [Applause.] Therefore, whether the Senate will pass this budget bill or not, I am not so much concerned about, but I know that if it does not it will be passed in record time when the special session comes. [Applause.] Then it will be passed as it was originally passed and as it ought to have been signed by the Executive and made a law.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not this resolution simply duplicate the work of the budget bill?

Mr. FESS. This resolution does not. I am glad my friend asked that question. The third step that we are now taking is to supplement, first, the dismantling of the war machine; secondly, to provide a budget bill.

This is to take up the question of duplication, mutiplied duplication, plural overhead charge, for the things that ought to be done by one single department. A special report of a group of men who have been working upon this particular feature for some time was recently made public, and we have found that in the departments the special skill of the engineer, for example, was being utilized by 9 of the 10 executive departments of this Government, and these 9 of the 10 departments were employing 34 bureaus, and in addition to the 34 bureaus 4 independent agencies not under any one of the executive departments, which means for one kind of service there is a thirty-eightfold padded plural overhead drain upon the Treasury.

Now, that is the result of years of grasping, expanding of functions on the part of various departments, which are continually demanding something and then another department demanding the same thing. We not having the facts here in Congress, because we do not know of them, permitted the duplication. Under this process of expansion we have got that thirty-eightfold duplication on one particular line of activity, which is but representative of departmental expansion.

This particular proposal is not to duplicate the budget. The budget is an administrative agency. It is not a legislative functionary. This is a committee, not a commission, as has been stated here. This is a committee, a joint committee, made up of Members of the House and the Senate, with the right on the part of its members to sit in the two Houses. It is not a place made for persons who have gone out of Congress, to give them a place to remain here in Washington upon salary. It is to be limited in its personnel to Members of this House and Senate who have legislative positions here, and the proposal requires from time to time that a report be made to Congress, and the final report is not to be deferred beyond the meeting of the second regular session of the Sixty-seventh Congress.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. I do not think it is necessary to condemn this committee as to personnel, but what I am afraid of and what I think the gentleman should consider very thoroughly is this: That the budget system will be passed soon—if not at this session, then at the next session; and on that I congratulate the gentleman—and it will be passed and signed just as we originally passed it. It will make recommendations to Congress. Now, suppose it makes one and this commission makes another recommendation of opposite purport. What will be done? That is what I am afraid of.

Mr. FESS. The budget is a commission, with no status for legislation. It can make its recommendations, however, if it wants to, just like the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 18 minutes remaining.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. The commission has no legislative status.

Mr. GARNER. Neither has the budget.

Mr. FESS. I refer to the budget. That is what I mean. The budget commission has no legislative status. This committee, however, not a commission, has a legislative status, and as a committee it will present the matter from this floor, and present the matter as its own, and not as a matter brought down from an executive department.

Mr. GARNER. Now, I want to ask the gentleman——

Mr. FESS. Wait. This committee is authorized—a matter that my friend from Texas and the gentleman's colleague and mine [Mr. BLANTON] was objecting to—to make an expenditure in the employment of experts, to be authorized by Congress to sit with them, in order to find the facts, not from our standpoint, because we do not know, but from the standpoint of the research men; and among these research men may be the members of your budget commission. The budget commission will certainly be consulted constantly as to this work. But the budget commission is an independent functionary, and it will be compelled to hold its place, as we are going to insist upon these other executive departments holding their place; and that is why I want to see the audit placed under the control of Congress, and not under the control of the Executive, in order that we may hold them to their particular proper function.

Mr. GARNER. I will agree with the gentleman in reference to its not being either under the control of Congress or under the control of the departments. It ought to be absolutely independent. But here is a duty to be performed by an executive auditor and also by an independent auditor. Now, we are creating a commission for the purpose of ascertaining the exact thing provided for in the budget. This committee will make its recommendation. It may be exactly crosswise to what the auditor of the executive branches may recommend. What am I, then, to follow?

Mr. FESS. You are assuming what probably will not occur at all.

Mr. GARNER. It will be a duplication of work.

Mr. FESS. You are assuming that both are in the interest of the same thing. If such a thing does occur, the men who speak on this floor from this committee can very easily explain why it does occur, instead of having to depend upon some independent functionary that has no expression here. It can be explained directly from this committee.

Let me state again: There were three things clearly outstanding in the minds of the people of the country. One was the dismantling of the war machine. Another was the establishment of the budget system, a constructive measure in the interest of economy. We have gone a long distance toward doing that. The other is to take these steps, the most imperative, the most commanding, the most imminent, to cut out this duplication and save over a million dollars a day to the Treasury. That is what we propose to do by this pending proposition, and I hope every man will vote for it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. I just wanted to say, in reply to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], that this is intended to reorganize the departments to prevent duplication.

Mr. FESS. Precisely.

Mr. MADDEN. The budget reorganization is to assemble the facts in respect to the expenses of the Government. That is the difference.

Mr. FESS. I thank my friend, who has the greatest facility of any Member of Congress in stating the facts in a single sentence. I append a statement on this subject published in last Sunday's Public Ledger.

[From the Public Ledger, Philadelphia, Sunday morning, Dec. 5, 1920.]

CONGRESS TO APPLY AX TO WASTEFUL BUREAUS—REPRESENTATIVE FESS POINTS NEED OF BUDGET SYSTEM AND REORGANIZATION OF DEPARTMENTS TO ELIMINATE USELESS DUPLICATION OF ACTIVITIES.

(By SIMEON D. FESS, Representative, of Ohio.)

(Special telegram to Public Ledger.)

WASHINGTON, December 4.

Some years ago Senator Aldrich created a sensation by declaring that the Government could be run on a saving of at least $1,000,000 a day if the administration of its affairs were placed upon a sound business basis, with due regard to economy. It was a Republican leader commenting upon the wastefulness of Government expenditures then under the control of his own party, which frees the remark from the charge of partisan bias.

The comment came from a source which compelled respect. It grew out of observations of congressional appropriations for departmental administration. It induced President Taft to appoint his bureau of efficiency, made up of experts, to investigate and report upon methods of reform. The report was voluminous, but up to date, unfortunately, little, if anything, has come from it. Further investigation shows an incredible amount of overlapping of departmental activities and a vast reduplication of effort, which has gradually grown up under the habitual practices of bureau expansion. The law of every bureau is a constant enlargement of function and an inevitable widening of activities. Bureaus but a few years ago which consisted of small organizations have grown to be institutions of multiplied agencies, gradually becoming irresponsive, save to their own alleged needs.

DUPLICATION AND REDUPLICATION.

The Agricultural Department is a very good example. Created as a Cabinet department a little more than 30 years ago, it has continued to develop until a department of only a single division has now become an institution with hundreds of employees, demanding an annual appropriation of many millions and still on the increase. The last appropriation, including the roads item, reached $113,067,553. This growth, as a rule, is not by transfer from other departments of specific activities. Many of the same activities were already in other departments, and the addition is but a duplication and reduplication, thus multiplying the agencies, enlarging the force, pluralizing the overhead drain, and vastly increasing the outlay without producing commensurate results in public service.

This enormous reduplication of departmental activities was brought to light about 18 months ago when a group of engineers representing the best engineering skill in America published an itemized statement of the decentralized condition of Government work requiring the skill of the engineer. They reported that 9 of the 10 executive departments employed the skill of the engineer for public works. These departments operated through 34 bureaus, not including 4 agencies not attached to any department. It might be said that overhead expenditure was employed 38 times to accomplish what should be under the direction of one department with but one overhead outlay.

EFFORTS TO CORRECT SITUATION.

While this may appear an extreme citation, it is but an extreme example of the undisputed situation in Government bureaus. Several months ago an effort, which had been the climax of years of agitation upon a limited scale, was put in motion to correct this bad situation as it affects the engineering problem of the Government by a bill introduced in the House by Mr. REAVIS, of Nebraska, and in the Senate by Mr. JONES, of Washington. The announced purpose was to insure sane economy in Government public works, rational efficiency, and the prevention of waste.

These results are achieved by placing all activities of one particular character under one head specially fitted to direct, and to whom services must be responsive, and under whom the organization may be made in accordance with the demands of the best standards of specialized functions. In this way lost motion can be avoided by requiring every agency to fit into the unity of the departmental work. This would avoid the common mistake of overemphasis of money demands by the departments, no one of which knows what the others are doing along the same line. It would be a guaranty against the repetition of war-time buying, where an unlimited quantity of one class of articles are purchased for the use of a limited number of articles to which they were to be attached, as in the case of horses and harness.

ABUSES ALLOWED TO MULTIPLY.

Plural-headed agencies not only enlarge the money outlay to maintain the upkeep and care for the expense of the agency, which alone is a useless waste of vast proportions, but they inevitably produce an overproduction and a consequent overexpenditure, since the product is not composite with any regard for the minimum cost of the maximum output. These double-headed agencies divide responsibility in results and operate with little regard for holding expenditures to the actual Government needs. Instead of correcting these abuses we have allowed them to multiply by constant expansion of various departments in response to their representation of new demands for new and enlarged activities.

All the functional lines of Government work show this to be a chronic condition. No incentive to reduce or reorganize is displayed, but all to expand and reduplicate bureau activities; hence a similar service demanding the expenditure of public funds, performed in each of the several executive departments. This being true, each department seeks special appropriations with no information nor regard for what other departments demand for the same character of work.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR ENGINEERING WORK.

The special report previously referred to itemized the 1920 appropriations for construction or engineering work in each of the executive departments, as follows:

State Department	$171,000
Treasury Department	31,955,206
War Department	89,790,075
Interior Department	29,277,214
Department of Justice	202,000
Department of Agriculture, including good roads	113,067,553
Department of Commerce	10,369,780
Department of Labor	175,000

Agencies not attached to executive departments.

Panama Canal	$9,829,837
Commerce Commission	2,500,000
United States Shipping Board	356,000,000
United States Housing Corporation	2,068,970
State, War, and Navy Building	2,387,038

Making a grand total of one character of expenditures in nine departments, which would be centralized under one head, of $647,210,560.

Economy under these conditions is not possible. Efficiency is out of the question. Waste is inevitable. They violate every precept of efficient administration. Bad government is assured under these conditions, as good government is rendered impossible. The constant bureau expansion by continual additions in response to new activities, which demand additional Government experts, present a hodgepodge, an uncoordinated structure, with neither efficient operation, unity in purpose, nor concerted service.

OBSERVED IN MANY LINES.

What has been revealed by the report of the engineers on duplication of Government work in a particular line will be observed in almost every character of service. As another example, almost every department undertakes some special line of work of an educational character and large appropriations are demanded for the same. The Bureau of Standards asks for appropriation to make special investigations of dyes, of coloring matter. This does not deter the Bureau of Chemistry, of the Agricultural Department, from making requests for increasing large amounts for the same purpose. If the request is allowed, a new activity is recognized, a new organization is effected, and once allowed no one will ever see the time that it will discontinue. When the Underwood bill crippled Louisiana sugar industry an appropriation was allowed for the development of some industry to compensate the loss. That was in 1913. For seven years the same appropriation is asked and allowed. It will doubtless continue indefinitely. Once a Government organization, always a Government organization.

This is the unchanging law. It accounts for the simple Government department becoming an entire institution of itself. It explains how a small appropriation quietly grows into millions. It explains why Government bureaus here in Washington employing 37,000 people in 1917 were employing over 130,000 in 1919, and still have nearly 90,000. It will throw some light upon the reported statement of the head of the Civil Service Commission that we can not reduce the roll here more than 5,000, which means we must maintain on the Federal pay roll more than twice the number we had only three years ago.

DRASTIC MEASURES REQUIRED.

Of course, this is folly and prostitution of service. The Government must and will employ drastic measures in the interest of a service which can be made more efficient by a reduction of the surplus employees. No man can avoid the overwhelming conviction that service is sacrificed by numbers of useless job holders, as well as public funds are wasted.

Congress can not safely rely upon the representations of bureau chiefs. They seem to act upon the theory that success is measured by the size of the pay roll. Congress is handicapped by an unacquaintance with the details, and consequently permitted these representations to be the guide, with the present situation as the inevitable result.

Congress will be called upon to deal drastically with any bureau chief who disregards limitations placed by Congress on appropriations. This is an easy matter which can be reached by inserting provision for summary action in the bills making the appropriation, which item can be made in order by the Rules Committee.

Steps must immediately be taken to completely reorganize the departments to eliminate the useless and wasteful duplication.

The budget system will be put in operation at the earliest moment, if not in the short session, then soon after the special session meets.

In the meantime the knife must be used upon war-time demands, and bureau chiefs must be held to strict accountability upon allowances fixed by Congress.

The short session must be devoted to the supply bills, which, under the aftermath of the war, will demand sharper scrutiny and longer time than usual. The early part of the Harding administration will doubtless be occupied in the work of readjustment, an important part of which is this needed reorganization of our bureaucratic system.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, during the brief time allotted to me I only want to speak briefly in regard to the budget and to answer what was said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] regarding the postponing of that very important legislation. I realize the objections to passing budgetary legislation at this Congress, but I wonder if the gentleman has realized that Congress at this session will make appropriations for the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922? In the next Congress, when we meet, it will take at least two weeks to organize. A new committee on the budget would be appointed. It would be compelled to hold hearings and go into the matter, because there will be a great many new Members who will want to consider this matter and who will have a right to consider it. That will take another month. Then to get the machinery into operation and put the budget bill through the House will take considerable time. In the case of the last budget bill, notwithstanding the fact that both political parties four years before had promised budgetary legislation, after the bill passed the House and went to the Senate it lay in the Senate seven months without action, and it was not until the Committee on Appropriations brought back the budget bill as a part of the sundry civil bill that we got some action on the part of the Senate.

At present the persons who make up the budget commence work in April and May and do some work all during the summer, and unless the incoming President is permitted right at the start to create his budget staff he will not have the machinery with which to formulate a budget for the appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1923. In other words, the appropriations for the first two and a half years will be made in the old way.

Now, I want to submit this to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], that if the present bill that the House passed and that is now pending in the Senate can be passed with an amendment, so that its provisions may be available on the 4th of March, 1921, that will permit the President to organize his budget staff immediately, and then Congress at its next session can immediately amend the law, which amendment only has to do with the removal of one of the officials. Then we will have a working organization. Then we can commence to save the money that the gentleman has talked about. If we fail to do that, the estimates for the year ending June 30, 1923, will be made in the same old way.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Did I understand the gentleman to mean by his first remark that budget legislation will not be enacted at this session?

Mr. GOOD. I hope it will be enacted at this session.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. Did I understand the gentleman to say that if passed in its present form, making it effective on the 4th of March, his side of the House would undertake to amend it later and make an independent auditor who would indeed be an independent auditor?

Mr. GOOD. I think so. I have not talked with very many Members, but I think that would be the desire of this side of the House. After the President vetoed the measure, I asked Mr. Collins, in the legislative reference library, to make a brief for me on the President's veto, saying that I would like to know what the law was with regard to the right of Congress to provide for the removal of inferior officers when the appointing power was vested in the President.

Mr. Collins has prepared a brief after considerable investigation. It is a splendid legal document, and I want to put it in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, because it justifies the position taken by this side of the House, and it is written by one who has no interest politically in the question. I ask, therefore, Mr. Speaker, leave to extend my remarks by printing this document.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The document referred to is as follows:

CONSTITUTIONAL AND LEGAL PHASES OF THE PRESIDENT'S VETO OF THE BUDGET BILL.

On June 4, 1920, the President returned the budget and accounting bill to Congress with his veto. The President disapproved of section 303 of the bill, which provided, in part, that the comptroller general and the assistant comptroller general "may be removed at any time by concurrent resolution of Congress, after notice and hearing, when, in their judgment, the comptroller general or assistant comptroller general is incapacitated or inefficient or has been guilty of neglect of duty or of malfeasance in office or of felony or conduct involving moral turpitude, and for no other cause and in no other manner, except by impeachment."

The President based his disapproval on the grounds, first, that the power of appointment of officers of the United States carried with it as an incident the power to remove, and that Congress was without constitutional power to limit the appointing power and its incidental power of removal derived from the Constitution; and, second, that Congress has no constitutional power to remove an officer of the United States from office by a concurrent resolution.

The constitutional provision relating to the appointing power of the President is found in paragraph 2, section 2, of Article II of the Constitution, which reads as follows:

"And he shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments."

The Supreme Court has defined the term "officers of the United States" in the case of the United States v. Germaine (99 U. S., 509, 510). Mr. Justice Miller, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"The Constitution, for purposes of appointment, very clearly divides all of its officers into two classes. The primary class requires a nomination by the President and confirmation by the Senate. But foreseeing that when offices became numerous and sudden removals necessary this mode might be inconvenient, it was provided that in regard to officers inferior to those specially mentioned Congress might by law invest their appointment in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments. That all persons who can be said to hold an office under the Government about to be established under the Constitution were intended to be included within one or the other of these modes of appointment there can be but little doubt."

This doctrine was confirmed in United States v. Mouat (124 U. S., 307), Mr. Justice Miller again delivering the opinion of the court in the following language:

"What is necessary to constitute a person an officer of the United States in any of the various branches of its service has been very fully considered by this court in United States v. Germaine. In that case it was distinctly pointed out that under the Constitution of the United States all its officers were appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, or by a court of law or the head of a department, and the heads of the departments were defined in that opinion to be what are now called the members of the Cabinet. Unless a person in the service of the Government, therefore, holds his place by virtue of an appointment by the President or of one of the courts of justice or heads of departments authorized to make such an appointment, he is not, strictly speaking, an officer of the United States."

The comptroller general provided for in the budget bill is no doubt an officer of the United States within the intention of the Constitution. But to which class does he belong? Does he belong to the primary class which requires that he be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, coming under the category of "all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law," or is he one of the inferior officers of the United States whose appointment Congress may by law vest "in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments"?

The Constitution does not specifically define the term "inferior officers," nor has the Supreme Court formulated a definition. The nearest approach to a definition is in the Germaine case, cited above, in which the court said that inferior officers of the United States were those officers inferior to those specially mentioned in the Constitution as requiring nomination by the President and confirmation by the Senate. A distinguished authority on constitutional law, in discussion this question, says:

"The point has never been squarely passed upon by the court, since Congress has never attempted to regulate the appointment to any but distinctively subordinate and inferior positions. Should it attempt to determine by law the appointment of heads of the great departments, or even of the heads of bureaus and divisions and commissions, or even of important local officers, such as revenue officers or postmasters in the larger cities, the constitutionality of the law would undoubtedly be subjected to judicial examination." (Willoughby on the Constitution, Vol. II, pp. 1175–1176.)

Now, the comptroller general is designed to be a great officer of state, who is at the head of an independent establishment of the Government. He would hold office practically for life. The dignity, power, and influence of his office would perhaps be second to none of the appointed officers of the Government. In the ordinary meaning of the word it can not be said that he is "inferior" to consuls "and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for and which shall be established by law." (Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2.) In considering the comptroller general as an "inferior" officer of the United States it is necessary to give a technical meaning to the word "inferior" as used in the Constitution.

It was no doubt the intention of the House Select Committee on the Budget in drafting the bill that the comptroller general should be classed as an "inferior officer" under the Constitution. This is made evident by the fact that when the bill was sent back with the President's veto the committee brought in an amendment vesting the appointment of the comptroller general in the Supreme Court of the United States. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 2d sess., p. 8647.)

In fact, the President's veto message assumed that the comptroller general and his assistant would be regarded as inferior officers when he said: "It would have been within the constitutional power of Congress, in creating these offices, to have vested the power of appointment in the President alone, in the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, or even in the head of a department."

In view of the fact that there are so few decisions of the Supreme Court on the question of appointments and removals, and none directly defining the respective powers of the President and Congress, the fact may be emphasized that Congress is in a stronger position with reference to the appointment and removal of inferior officers than with the officers of the primary class. Over the former they can control both the method and conditions of appointment and removal as they may see fit. If the President is given power by Congress to appoint such an officer, he receives this grant of power with the conditions and limitations upon which it is made. He has not the same inherent and constitutional rights relative to these offices that he has to those specifically provided for in the primary class in the Constitution.

The following extracts give a review of the opinions of the Supreme Court on the power of Congress to limit and condition the power of removal of an officer of the United States, in so far as this court has considered the subject.

In Ex parte Hennen (13 Pet., 230) the court said:

"All offices the tenure of which is not fixed by the Constitution or limited by law must be held during good behavior, or (which is the same thing in contemplation of law) during the life of the incumbent, or must be held at the will and discretion of some department of the Government, and subject to removal at pleasure. * * * In the absence of all constitutional provision, or statutory regulation, it would seem to be a sound and necessary rule to consider the power of removal as incident to the power of appointment" (p. 259).

The implication is clear that Congress has the power to limit or abolish the power of removal which inheres in the power to appoint. This case related to that of a clerk of a district court of the United States who had been removed by the judge. He comes, without doubt, within the class of "inferior" officers.

In United States v. Perkins (116 U. S., 483) the court said:

"Whether or not Congress can restrict the power of removal incident to the power of appointment of those officers who are appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, under the authority of the Constitution, does not arise in this case and need not be considered.

"We have no doubt that when Congress, by law, vests the appointment of inferior officers in the heads of departments it may limit and restrict the power of removal as it deems best for the public interest. The constitutional authority in Congress to thus vest the appointment implies authority to limit, restrict, and regulate the removal by such laws as Congress may enact in relation to the officers so appointed.

"The head of a department has no constitutional prerogative of appointment to offices independently of the legislation of Congress, and by such legislation he must be governed, not only in making appointments but in all that is incident thereto."

Assuming that the comptroller general is an "inferior officer" of the United States, as was assumed in the President's veto, does not the same argument applied in this case to heads of departments apply also to the President? The President has no constitutional prerogatives of appointment to offices inferior to those in the primary class mentioned in the Constitution, independently of the legislation of Congress, and therefore so far as these offices are concerned he comes clearly within the rule laid down in this case.

In Parsons v. United States (167 U. S., 324) the facts were that the President had removed from office a district attorney before the expiration of the latter's four-year term of office, and the Senate confirmed the new appointee. Parsons contended that this action was illegal. The court took the view that this would leave impeachment as the only remedy, and further said:

"This could never have been the intention of Congress. On the contrary, we are satisfied that its intention in the repeal of the tenure of office section of the Revised Statutes was again to concede to the President the power of removal if taken away from him by the original tenure of office act, and by reason of the repeal to thereby enable him to remove an officer when, in his discretion, he regards it for the public good, although the term of office may have been limited by the words of the statute creating the office. This purpose is accomplished by the construction we give to section 769, while the other construction turns a statute meant to enlarge the power of the President into one circumscribing and limiting it more than it was under the law which was repealed for the very purpose of enlarging it" (p. 343).

Is there not here an implication that Congress has the power to limit the power of removal even as to those officers of the United States whose appointment must be confirmed by the Senate?

In Reagan v. United States (182 U. S., 419) the court in classifying United States commissioners, appointed under act of Congress by the United States Court for Indian Territory as "inferior" officers, said:

"The commissioners hold office neither for life nor for any specified time, and are within the rule which treats the power of removal as incident to the power of appointment, unless otherwise provided. The court also said that 'where causes of removal are specified by Constitution or statute, as also where the term of office is for a fixed period, notice and hearing are essential. If there were not, the appointing power could remove at pleasure or for such causes as it deemed sufficient'" (pp. 425, 426).

This rule that notice and hearing must be had before an officer can be removed for causes specified in the statute was confirmed in the case of Shurtleff v. United States (189 U. S., 311), in which were cited seven opinions of the State courts upholding this practice.

The most important case on this subject is that of Shurtleff v. United States (189 U. S., 311). Shurtleff held the office of general appraiser of merchandise, and although the statute specified certain causes for which he might be removed from office he was nevertheless removed from office by the President without reference to these causes. The court, among other things, said:

"We assume, for the purposes of this case only, that Congress could attach such conditions to the removal of an officer appointed under this statute as it might seem proper, and therefore that it could provide that the officer should only be removed for the causes stated, and for no other, and after notice and an opportunity for a hearing (p. 314).

"It can not now be doubted that in the absence of constitutional or statutory provision the President can by virtue of his general power of appointment remove an officer, even though appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate" (p. 315).

In referring to the opinion in the case of Blake v. United States (103 U. S., 227), in which, although there may have been some doubt, the power of the President to remove, under a certain act, was upheld, the court said:

"This indicated the tendency of the court to require explicit language to that effect before holding the power of the President to have been taken away by an act of Congress" (p. 315).

And further:

"The right of removal would exist if the statute had not contained a word upon the subject. It does not exist by virtue of the grant, but it inheres in the right to appoint, unless limited by Constitution or statute. It requires plain language to take it away" (p. 316).

"The right of removal, as we have already remarked, would exist as inherent in the power of appointment unless taken away in plain and unambiguous language" (p. 318). * * *

And where the statute specifies the causes of removal, "A removal for any of those causes can only be made after notice and an opportunity to defend" (p. 317).

The above-mentioned cases thoroughly establish the doctrine that Congress has the constitutional power to limit and condition the power of removal from office of "inferior" officers of the United States even in those cases where the appointing power has been vested by Congress in the President. The President acquires no greater authority to remove than do the courts of law or the heads of departments. The power of removal is derivative only. The source of the grant is Congress. In Congress alone is there the inherent constitutional right to create the office, to authorize the appointment, to condition the appointment, and to provide the manner of removal. Assuming that the comptroller general and the assistant comptroller general are "inferior" officers of the United States, as no doubt Congress assumed and as the President assumed in his veto message, the President's contention that Congress could not limit his incidental right of removal of these officers is not well taken.

II.

The second phase of the President's veto raises the question whether Congress itself could by concurrent resolution remove the comptroller general and the assistant comptroller general from office. It would seem that there is nothing in the Constitution nor in the decisions of the Supreme Court to imply that Congress did not have this power as to "inferior" officers. The Supreme Court has fairly decided that Congress is in complete control of the conditions and methods of removal and there seems to be no reason why removal could not be made by Congress itself. The Constitution itself is silent on the question of removal. It does provide that each House of Congress may appoint and remove its own officers, but no provision is made for a joint officer or officers of Congress.

The question has been raised as to the effectiveness of this method of removal. It has been contended that a concurrent resolution of this character would have to be submitted to the President for his approval, and be subject to his veto. The Constitution says:

"Every order or resolution or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on the question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States, and before the same shall take effect shall be approved by him, or on being disapproved by him shall be repassed by two-thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in the case of the bill."

The Supreme Court has never had occasion to interpret this clause, but Congress itself has, as the data below will show, put its own interpretation upon it.

On February 20, 1896, the Senate directed its Committee on the Judiciary to report to the Senate "whether concurrent resolutions generally are required to be submitted to the President of the United States." On January 26, 1897, Senator David B. Hill, of New York, presented an exhaustive and learned report which is to-day the outstanding authoritative discussion of this problem. (S. Rept. 1335, 54th Cong., 2d sess.) His committee found that for over a hundred years it had been the settled practice of Congress not to present concurrent resolutions to the President.

"They have uniformly been regarded by all the departments of the Government as matters peculiarly within the province of Congress alone. They have never embraced legislative provisions proper, and hence have never been deemed to require Executive approval" (p. 6).

* * * * * * *

"This practical construction of the Constitution, thus acquiesced in for a century, must be deemed the true construction, with which no court will interfere." * * *

"It has been the uniform practice of Congress since the organization of the Government not to present concurrent resolutions to the President for his approval and to avoid incorporating in any such resolutions any matter of strict legislation requiring such presentation. As a matter of propriety and expediency it is believed to be wise to continue that course in the future" (p. 6).

"Whether concurrent resolutions are required to be submitted to the President must depend, not upon their mere form but upon the fact whether they contain matter which is properly to be regarded as legislative in its character and effect. If they do they must be presented for his approval; otherwise, they need not be. In other words, we hold that the clause in the Constitution which declares that every order, resolution, or vote must be presented to the President, to 'which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary,' refers to the necessity occasioned by the requirements of the other provisions of the Constitution, whereby every exercise of 'legislative powers' involves the concurrence of the two Houses; and every resolution not requiring such action, to wit, not involving the exercise of legislative powers, need not be presented to the President. In brief, the nature or substance of the resolution, and not its form, control the question of its disposition" (p. 8).

The committee took the point of view that the spirit rather than the letter of the Constitution should control. That certain actions could be taken by Congress in which the President had no concern and which did not involve a legislative act. The settled traditions of Congress extending over a period from the foundation of the Government to the present time would seem to be a controlling factor in the interpretation in this clause of the Constitution.

Congress has, however, never attempted to remove an officer by concurrent resolution. This is a new departure. Does such a removal partake of a legislative character? In other words would the concurrent resolution removing him be legislation and require the approval of the President? In that case the concurrent resolution would defeat its own purpose and the President by disapproving it might prevent the removal of the officer in question. Legislation implies either a new act of Congress, or the amendment or repeal of an existing act or acts. The concurrent resolution of removal would not come within these categories. The budget bill, if passed, with this provision would become basic law, requiring a certain method of removal, to wit, removal by concurrent resolution. When Congress in conformity to the provisions of this act passed the concurrent resolution of removal it would be simply complying with the administrative provisions of existing law. This would not be legislation at all and would come within the category of the traditional practice of Congress relative to concurrent resolutions.

The proper interpretation of this clause of the budget bill involves a careful consideration of the necessities of the occasion. It is an admitted fact that the Government is now called upon to spend through its executive agencies billions of dollars yearly out of the Public Treasury necessitating the imposition of high and burdensome taxes upon the people as a whole. It is also an admitted fact that the machinery for the examination, audit, control, and report on these expenditures fails to give an adequate protection to the taxpayer. Congress is creating a new office—the general accounting office of the United States—to be under the direction of a comptroller general who shall be absolutely independent of the Executive and at the same time occupy a very close and intimate relationship to Congress itself. The purpose of this action is to provide an official who will be able without fear of Executive control or Executive removal to go into the executive departments where the money is being spent and to investigate and report his finding to the Congress. Congress is responsible to the people under the Constitution for the appropriation of all money from the Treasury.

The President has no proper concern either in the appointment or in the removal of this officer. The fact that he is appointed by the President in the budget bill is a concession to the constitutional necessities of the occasion. If Congress could constitutionally appoint such an officer he would be so appointed. But as to his removal it is absolutely vital that it should rest with Congress if this officer is to have any great independence to report what he finds. Congress should have the initiative in the removal. The concurrent resolution preceded by notice and hearing before the appropriate committee, as a method of removal appears to be justifiable both in fact and in law. If there are constitutional doubts they should be resolved in favor of Congress.

The fathers in making the Constitution were very zealous of the preservation of the legislative branch of the Government from encroachments by the Executive. They were careful to give Congress the fullest control over public finance. But they could not foresee these days of stupendous expenditures nor the modern methods necessary for their proper control. And, although the letter of the Constitution appears adverse to the establishment by Congress of an independent audit, yet the spirit is in favor of it. The idea embodied in this section of the budget bill is in harmony with the purposes and aims which the fathers had in mind in framing the financial clauses of the Constitution. They desired to protect the taxpayer from the irregular expenditures of public funds by the Executive. Looking beyond the form to the substance, the second phase of the President's veto rests also on an insecure foundation.

Rather than give the President the power to remove this officer it would be wiser to provide that he can be removed only by impeachment. This would put him in the same category as that of the judges. It would not, however, meet the needs of the occasion as would the removal by concurrent resolution. Civil officers can be impeached only for "treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors" (Constitution, Article II, section 4). They can not be removed from office by this method for incapacity, inefficiency, and such other minor matters as might unfit a man for the practical affairs of a public office. Yet, on the whole, the service of this officer would be more effective if he could be removed only by impeachment than if he could be removed by the President. The President should not have the initiative in the removal even though stringent conditions were made in the act.

LIST OF CASES WHEREIN IS DISCUSSED THE POWER TO APPOINT AND REMOVE OFFICERS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Ex Parte Hennen (13 Pet., 230 (1839)). Removal of a clerk of a circuit court.

United States v. Hortwell (6 Wall., 385 (1867)). Discusses meaning of "officers of the United States."

United States v. Germaine (99 U. S., 508 (1878)). Removal of a civil surgeon of the Pension Office.

Blake v. United States (103 U. S., 227 (1880)). Removal of an Army chaplain.

United States v. Perkins (116 U. S., 483 (1886)). Removal of a cadet engineer.

United States v. Mouat (124 U. S., 303 (1888)). Removal of a paymaster's clerk in the Navy.

McAllister v. United States (141 U. S., 174 (1891)). Removal of a judge of the district court for the Territory of Alaska.

Parsons v. United States (167 U. S., 324 (1897)). Removal of a district attorney.

Reagan v. United States (182 U. S., 419 (1901)). Removal of a United States commissioner for Indian Territory.

Shurtleff v. United States (189 U. S., 311 (1903)). Removal of a general appraiser of merchandise.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to Mr. BLANTON and to Mr. FESS to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, in the discussion of this resolution my colleague from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] have made some very severe criticisms of the War Department because of its clerical personnel here in Washington. I think these gentlemen in their discussion might fairly have made comparisons between the number of clerical employees in the War Department at the time of the signing of the armistice and the number of clerical employees in that department at the present time.

I think one would fairly infer from the remarks that these gentlemen have made that there has been practically no reduction of clerical personnel in the War Department since the signing of the armistice, but that is very far from being the fact.

At the time the armistice was signed the War Department had here in the city of Washington 37,406 civilian employees. It has at the present time 10,298 civilian employees here in the city of Washington, which is a net reduction of more than 27,000 employees, or a net reduction of more than 72 per cent. An average of 1,100 civilian employees per month have been released from this department since the armistice was signed, about 24 months ago. I call that a very substantial reduction.

Now, if these gentlemen had wanted to be fair to the Secretary of War, why were these facts not stated? [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Do these figures, for the time when the armistice was signed and the present, include those who are on the rolls strictly as clerks, or does it include officers doing clerical work?

Mr. BLACK. The chief clerk for the War Department just a while ago gave me these figures over the telephone, and the only designation that he made was civilian employees of the War Department, so that is all the answer that I can give the gentleman at the present time. I presume, however, that the figures do not include any Army officers doing clerical work.

Mr. BLANTON. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not my colleague from Texas know that the number of employees now in the War Department far exceeds the number employed prior to the war? And does he not further know that the Secretary of War in his new estimate is demanding not only that the ones we have taken from him be put back but that extra ones also be employed?

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman from Texas who is now addressing the House does know that there are now more civil-service employees in the War Department than there were before the war. He would not expect anything else, in view of the fact that only a short time ago an Army of 4,000,000 men was demobilized and a great many activities have been bequeathed to the War Department by the great World War through which we have just passed, many more than it had under its charge before the war broke out. [Applause.] It would be unreasonable to expect, and it would be impossible for the department to perform even if we did expect it, for these new duties to be performed efficiently with the same number of employees that it had before the World War, when we had but a handful of a standing Army and had not gone through the tremendous activities of a world war. My colleague well knows that the record of service of all those 4,000,000 men and the various facts attached to that service must be recorded and kept available, and are constantly being called for. The idea of any gentleman on the floor of the House expecting the War Department, with its multitude of new duties, to function with the same number of employees as before the war is ridiculous. [Applause.] If there are unnecessary employees, I should like to see them reduced, but we get nowhere with unfair criticism.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, such a strong case of extravaganee and duplication has been made out that I venture to hope that this resolution will be adopted unanimously. I was present and heard the famous and much-quoted statement of the deceased Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. Aldrich, in which he declared his belief after many years of experience that at least $300,000,000 could be saved if the Government were run on anything like elementary business principles.

Now we have the assurance of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] that a million dollars a day could be saved. That is $365,000,000 a year. This statement strongly corroborates the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island. Thus a plain case of waste, duplication, and extravagance has been made out. We can do nothing to-day more important than to pass this resolution, and I shall vote for it heartily, expressing here and now the hope that these gentlemen of the committee on reorganization, after their investigation, will be able to make good the promise and prediction of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] that a million dollars every day can be saved. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate joint resolution 191.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate joint resolution 191, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 191) to create a joint committee on the reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government.

Resolved, etc., That a joint committee is created, to be known as the Joint Committee on Reorganization, which shall consist of three Members of the Senate to be appointed by the President thereof, and three Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker thereof. Vacancies occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the joint committee on reorganization to make a survey of the administrative services of the Government for the purpose of securing all pertinent facts concerning their powers and duties, their distribution among the several executive departments, and their overlapping and duplication of authority; also to determine what redistribution of activities should be made among the several services, with a view to the proper correlation of the same, and what departmental regrouping of services should be made, so that each executive department shall embrace only services having close working relation with each other and ministering directly to the primary purpose for which the same are maintained and operated, to the end that there shall be achieved the largest possible measure of efficiency and economy in the conduct of Government business.

SEC. 3. That the committee shall, from time to time, report to both the Senate and the House of Representatives the results of its inquiries, together with its recommendations, and shall prepare and submit bills or resolutions having for their purpose the coordination of Government functions and their most efficient and economical conduct, and the final report of said committee shall be submitted not later than the second Monday in December, 1922. The committee is authorized to employ such assistance as it may require, at such compensation as the committee may determine to be just and reasonable, and to make such reasonable expenditures as may be necessary for the proper conduct of its work, such expenditures to be paid in equal parts from the contingent funds of the House of Representatives and the Senate, as from time to time may be duly authorized by resolutions of those bodies.

SEC. 4. That the officers and employees of all administrative services of the Government shall furnish to the committee such information regarding powers, duties, activities, organization, and methods of business as the committee may from time to time require, and the committee or any of its employees, when duly authorized by the committee, shall have access to and the right to examine any books, documents, papers, or records of any administrative service for the purpose of securing the information needed by the committee in the prosecution of its work.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, what is the provision as to the division of time?

The CHAIRMAN. Two hours of debate, divided equally between the proponents and the opponents.

Mr. REAVIS. The rule calls for a division of time between the proponents and the opponents of the resolution.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman from Nebraska appear in behalf of the gentleman from Minnesota, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee? The resolution was in the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. REAVIS. The rule discharged the Committee on the Judiciary and made this in order.

Mr. GARD. I am making inquiry as to division of time. Does the gentleman have control of the time on his side?

The CHAIRMAN. This debate is by unanimous consent. It is within the power of the Chair to recognize anybody opposed to it under the rule. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska for one hour.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I take it this committee is interested in the structure of the bill, and therefore I shall call attention of the committee to certain elements of the bill which, in my opinion, need consideration and possibly amendment. When this bill was before the House on the 3d of June, 1920, it was submitted under the proceedings of suspension of the rules, and under suspension of the rules it was, of course, impossible to suggest, let alone secure, any amendments. Upon the question of the bill being passed in the identical terms as submitted it failed of passage, and now it has come again under what I regret to say is, in the language of the gentleman who is the proponent of the bill, a request that there be no amendment to this bill. The bill comes from the Senate. My own position is, if the bill requires amendment we should put the amendment on, because, if it be a proper one, it can be very easily attended to at the other end of the Capitol and cause no confusion or delay in the final passage of the bill. That which I desire to call attention to is in reference to the language in the first paragraph. I am sure that the country, taking it by and large, is pretty well fed up on commissions. There seems to be no sentiment toward the creation of numerous commissions now who are to investigate and investigate and go along and have the investigation delayed and reports delayed and then submit a report which is filed, placed in the archives, and accumulates dust and spider webs and nobody reads it or pays any attention to it. But I am interested in having this committee a live committee, and therefore I take issue with the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] as to what the language means in section 1 of this bill, when he says:

That a joint committee is created to be known as the joint committee on reorganization, which shall consist of three Members of the Senate to be appointed by the President thereof, and three Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker thereof. Vacancies occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments.

It seems to me, based upon the precedents of this House and based upon the reasonable interpretation of language, that what might follow is this: One who is to be a member of this committee can not only be a Member of this House, assuming that appointments are to be made at this Congress or a Member of the next House, assuming that they will be made at that session of Congress, but there is nothing in this bill, either by direction or implication, which concludes the service of a member of this committee at the same time that his elective service in the House concludes. In other words, one may be appointed upon this joint committee from the House or from the Senate and sever his official term upon the 4th of next March and still be a member of this committee for the next two years.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Very gladly. I am discussing it and would be glad to have the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. REAVIS. The language of the resolution fixes the eligibility of the service on this committee. One is that he is either a Member of the House or a Member of the Senate. Now, if he is a Member of the House at the time the Speaker appoints him he is eligible to service on this committee.

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. When his term expires he no longer possesses that element of eligibility of a Member of the House.

Mr. GARD. He is not a Member of the House, no; but he is a member of the committee.

Mr. REAVIS. But the committee must be composed exclusively of Members of the House and Senate.

Mr. GARD. No; I do not read that; and I desire to call attention to what I have in mind, and I want to say frankly that I offer the suggestion for no purpose but to make certain that which the gentleman thinks he is accomplishing, to have a live committee of men who are in the House of Representatives and in the Senate of the United States.

I take it that he does not want to create a committee of which one member or two members in the next two years may not at this time, perhaps, have compensation, but through some method of direction or indirection will later be compensated for services on this committee when they are not Members of the Senate or House of Representatives.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman be good enough to yield for a moment?

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman pardon me a moment, in order that I may read the suggestions, and then I will be very glad—in fact, I will welcome the gentleman's word and ideas on that which I suggest. I suggest that after line 9, at the end of the first paragraph, the following language:

If the elective term of any Member of the Senate or House of Representatives who shall have been appointed as a member of the joint committee to be known as the "joint committee on reorganization" shall expire, a vacancy shall be held to exist in said joint committee.

Mr. REAVIS. Of course, I would be opposed to any such amendment; in the first place, because it is unnecessary, and, in the next place, that is not the only method by which a term of service in the House can expire.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit me to suggest that the elective term of all Members of this House expire at noon on the 4th of next March?

Mr. REAVIS. Then they would all go off of the committee.

Mr. GARD. They would not all go off.

Mr. REAVIS. All our terms expire on the 4th of March.

Mr. GARD. In this Congress.

Mr. REAVIS. Our terms as Congressmen expire and new terms begin. The elective term expires on the 4th of March. The severance of the Member might be by death or resignation, and there might be other methods.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that instead of the language suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, if you insert the language that these members of this committee are to be Members of the Sixty-sixth Congress and also of the Sixty-seventh you would fix the whole thing. It ought to be that way, too.

Mr. GARD. I have no objection, and I welcome the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], who has had wide experience in these matters. It may be that my language is inadequate to express my purpose, but the purpose is that this committee be composed of persons who are Members of the Congress, Members of the Sixty-sixth Congress and Members of the Sixty-seventh Congress, because this committee will extend into the life of the Sixty-seventh Congress.

Mr. REAVIS. I will say to the gentleman that I heartily concur in that desire. My thought, still entertained, was that under the language of this resolution the amendment is unnecessary.

Mr. GARD. I confess I do not agree with the gentleman that the language is unnecessary. I think that some language ought to be provided for by amendment to make it positive.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I will.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will it not be better to provide that if a member of this committee shall cease to be a Member of the House or of the Senate he would thereupon automatically cease to be a member of the committee? The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] suggested he should be a Member of both the Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh Congresses. He might be a Member of the Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh Congresses, but in the course of time cease to be a Member, by resignation or otherwise. It occurs to me it would meet every situation to provide that they should cease to be members of this committee when they cease to be Members of the House.

Mr. GARD. I am very glad to have the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As I understand the statement of the gentleman from Ohio, whoever goes on this committee should be a Member of the next Congress. Am I correct?

Mr. GARD. I did not hear the first part of the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Whoever goes on this committee should be a Member of the next Congress?

Mr. GARD. Yes; I should say so.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman will pardon me, I really think there could not be a better minority appointment in this House in a matter of this sort, which will necessarily take very much of the time of members of the committee, than the gentleman from Ohio himself. I think it would be a rare, good appointment if he were put on this committee and allowed to serve in the next Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. GARD. I am very glad to have the commendation of the gentleman from Illinois, but the "gentleman from Ohio" will retire from most pleasant associations in this House very reluctantly, but voluntarily—that I intend to practice law and desire no appointment. But what I am trying to do is to get language that may express my idea, and language that is concurred in by the gentleman from Nebraska, to have this committee composed of live and living Members of this Congress and Congresses during which it shall serve. Therefore, I shall offer an amendment, possibly not in the language I originally referred to, since I realize that it contains certain elements which are subject to the objection to which the gentleman from Nebraska calls my attention, and to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has likewise called attention.

Leaving that, which is a matter——

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield before he leaves that subject?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Of course, so far as this resolution is concerned, if it should be given that construction, a person who served on the committee and whose term would expire would receive no compensation, would he?

Mr. GARD. Well, it is indefinite. He would receive no compensation under the resolution as it now exists, but he should receive compensation, and possibly would receive compensation if an appropriation were made later for him.

Mr. DENISON. You mean that Congress could do it later on?

Mr. GARD. Yes. I mean if the committee were constituted and if a man were on the committee now who was not continuing as a Member of the next Congress, he could be compensated.

Mr. DENISON. But with the spirit of the Congress, which now seems to be emphasized to such an extent, does the gentleman think anyone would take the serious chance of going ahead and serving, in the hope that he at a later date would be compensated?

Mr. GARD. I do not think so myself, but I want to be sure about it, because, as I say, I do not view the country as growing toward the creation of more paid commissions. I think we have plenty of commissions. And the idea of this bill, as expressed by the gentleman from Nebraska, I concur in, that there are among the Members connected with this House persons who can render a very signal service upon this committee. But, of course, everybody must realize that if they do anything at all, there is a lot of hard work connected with this committee.

It is a big topic. The question of the reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government is a very large and comprehensive question, and while we are discussing it in the light of great prospective savings the committee will find that the discussion is much easier than any actuality may be. I am led to remember a matter of which certain gentlemen have spoken concerning the great savings that would be had after this committee has made its report, in which reference has been made to the statement of the late Senator Aldrich, of Rhode Island, in which he said there could be a saving of $300,000,000 a year, while the statement is made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] that the present savings would be $500,000,000. These are very large figures, but we have grown accustomed to large figures in our era of large appropriations. But I question very much whether these reductions will be the reductions finally arrived at.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] said a moment ago that the act of yesterday would practically demobilize the war machinery of the Government and render unnecessary many bureaus, many commissions, many departments, and also render unnecessary the employment of many men and women. This is another thing in which the immediate future will probably give better voice than the gentleman from Ohio, because I likewise have observed, even after the activities of war-time Washington in the last two years, since the signing of the armistice there have been reports here and there that a certain great number of employees were to be laid off; reports here and there that a great number in this or that bureau were to be dismissed; whereas if they have been dismissed they have got into another bureau by the simple process of somebody who has charge of that other bureau desiring to assimilate those who are leaving the first bureaus. So that I question whether there has been any substantial reduction.

Somebody, I believe, said the other day that there had been a reduction of 2,000 in the personnel of the clerks about here, but I question whether there has been any substantial reduction in the employments within the District of Columbia.

This resolution, too, must be considered in the light of what the House has done and in the light of what may occur under what we have done. Everyone will join in the hope that a Government economy may be made. It is not a partisan matter. It is a matter in which all persons who believe in the good of their Government are interested. They are interested patriotically and they are interested selfishly, since the matter of the payment of heavy Federal taxes is brought home to-day to every one of us. However, we did pass in this House a law concerning what was supposed to be an honest effort to reduce departments, to correlate departments, to get certain divisions doing the same kind of work together, so that expenses might be reduced in operation and in personnel, and we passed the so-called budget bill, in which—and I read section 209 of title 2—reference is made to the budget bureau, of which there is a director, and subsequent reference is made to the general accounting office, and it is provided that—

> The bureau shall make a detailed study of the departments and establishments for the purpose of enabling the President to determine what changes (with a view of securing greater economy and efficiency in the conduct of the public service) should be made in (1) the existing organization, activities, and methods of business of such departments or establishments, (2) the appropriations therefor, (3) the assignment of particular activities to particular services, or (4) the regrouping of services. The results of such study shall be embodied in a report or reports to the President, who may transmit to Congress such report or reports or any part thereof with his recommendations on the matters covered thereby.

Clearly the intent of this, which is a part of the budget bill which the House has acted upon favorably, is to do precisely what the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] has in mind. The distinction between them, he says, is that the budget is a bureau or a commission without legislative status, whereas this is a committee with legislative status. But I submit that that is rather begging the question, except upon the most technical of grounds, for, after all, the Members of the House will be guided both from the budget and from this committee, if this committee is created, by what they report, and the mere fact that persons on this committee have entrance to the floor and the privilege of speech and debate here is but a technicality in its favor.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. In a moment. I think the entire situation intended, and frankly and honestly intended, to be accomplished by that which we passed in the budget and that of which the gentleman from Nebraska is the proponent to-day is the same.

Now, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. In relation to what the gentleman has just stated about the difference in the status of one outside this body and one within, I will ask the gentleman whether he thinks the report of the congressional Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, which reported on March 12, 1920, is allowed to lie idle because of the fact that the men who were on that commission are not now Members of this House, neither have they been Members of the House during the time they were acting as members of the commission, and therefore they have no opportunity to urge their findings upon this body? Here is a report of over 800 pages by a special commission appointed in March of 1919, appointed by the then Speaker of the House, Mr. CLARK, and the report filed in March, 1920, and nothing done.

Mr. GARD. I should say that that is not the fault of the gentlemen who are on this Commission for the Reclassification of Salaries.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Not at all.

Mr. GARD. Nor do I think it to be caused by the fact that they were not Members of the Sixty-sixth Congress. They were Members at the time they were appointed. They continued as members of the commission after they retired from the House. What the House then esteemed to be a small amount of work, since there were supposed to be very many utilities in the District of Columbia to give them information, developed into a very large bit of machinery, and there was extended investigation through this commission here in the District of Columbia, lasting for some 18 months, at least, I believe; I know they secured one extension. Nevertheless they made a very excellent and comprehensive investigation. It is embodied in the voluminous report which the gentleman has in his hand, and I suspect—and I say it not in criticism of the Members of the House—that there are very few Members of the House today who have read the report of the Commission on Reclassification. But I do not view the fact that these men are not Members of the House now to be responsible for that report not being now considered. These men did a very large work. They had plenty of assistance, and the members appointed by the Senate and those appointed by the House personally did a very large work.

So far as I know, all three of the senatorial members on that commission are still Members of the Senate of the United States and no effort has been made to bring it up over there, for what reason I do not know. But I do give credit to these men for having made a very comprehensive report, and that is the point I am trying to make, that no matter what seems to have been done, no matter what effort is made by commissions great or small, when a report is made by a commission it lies dormant. Nobody reads it except possibly a few very selfishly interested people, and comparatively little attention is paid to it.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I agree with the gentleman that I think the report is not only very comprehensive but I think very valuable. I think the commission did its work effectively. I was surprised at the character and comprehensiveness of the report when I read it in part, and on inquiry I found that they had employed experts practically to do the effective clerical work. Will not that be necessary with any commission?

Mr. GARD. Absolutely. I will say that I am in entire agreement with the gentleman. Whether or not I agree with the findings and conclusions of the Committee on the Reclassification of Salaries of the District of Columbia, I do agree with the gentleman that they did a very excellent and valuable work in the matter of investigation and report. But, as the gentleman says, necessarily it was made in great part by persons who were employed by the committee. It would be the same with this committee. If you appoint three Members of the House here, it will be necessary to have actively associated with them—and the resolution calls for that—persons who can be of assistance to them, because if a man is going to be an active Member of this House and represent the country and his constituents it will be a physical impossibility for him in the face of the two years which this bill calls for in recognition of the great things which are to come before the next Congress—it will be a matter of physical impossibility for him to do both of these great tasks. In other words, necessarily it will have to be done by expert assistants, as the report on reclassification was done; and that is what is meant by the resolution where it says:

> The committee is authorized to employ such assistance as it may require, at such compensation as the committee may determine to be just and reasonable, and to make such reasonable expenditures as may be necessary for the proper conduct of its work.

That is embodied in the resolution because it will be useless to create a committee and then tie its hands. If this committee is created and can not have efficiency experts, persons who can investigate, as the Reclassification Commission had persons who could investigate, then the thing will be entirely a matter of the individual opinion of the membership of the committee, and I do not believe its members will have sufficient time to give the attention they would like to give to the very great number of things made necessary by this resolution.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. If the gentleman will permit me further——

Mr. GARD. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I will say that I also read section 9 of the budget bill, and while the discussion of the rule was going on this morning I was very much surprised to hear the statement that in no sense is this committee a duplication. It may be that I have not clearly in mind the meaning of section 9 which the gentleman has just read, but as I understand it that would be clearly a duplication of the work of this committee, and that committee is made an alternative upon the Budget Committee as a part of its duties.

Mr. GARD. It seems to me, with all deference to those who have spoken on the matter, that if it be not a duplication expressed in language it is a duplication in intent, because I am sure when we passed the so-called budget bill, containing section 209, which I have read, it was the idea that those who had charge of this bureau of the budget that they should do just what this language says, and that is that they should inquire into the different organizations and activities, with a view to learning whether their services could be put in any other form, or whether there could be such conclusion as a regrouping of services.

Now, I am glad to see here the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], because he spoke somewhat of that. The intent clearly in section 209 is the same legislative intent expressed as in Senate joint resolution 191, because when we consider Senate joint resolution 191, it has no further desire to express itself for the governmental benefit than that which is expressed in section 209 of the budget bill; and I am principally concerned, I believe, in the fact that not alone is there a duplication of intent but a positive duplication of facts, and that duplication of facts may be embarrassing to those who are in the Congress of the United States who desire guidance, because with the presence of the director of the bureau created in the so-called budget bill, and with the action of the general accounting office also created in that bill—with these two elements in operation, seeking exactly all of the things which are intended to be covered by Senate joint resolution 191, then we will have two systems of reports. We necessarily will have a system of reports from the bureau of the budget, since the very idea of the budget is not alone to see how much money is to be spent but by whom it is spent, and whether the departments that spend it are necessary or are unnecessary; in other words, whether there can be a regrouping of services. That is precisely what is intended to be established in Senate joint resolution 191.

If there be anything additional which is for the benefit of the country, I certainly would be glad to be advised of it, but so far I have not been, except that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] stated that there is legislative expression on this so-called committee. They differentiate between a commission such as has been created, or a budget, which is in effect a commission, and a committee which is supposed to be composed of persons having a voice in this House. I do not, for one, agree that the mere fact that one has the privilege of entrance and debate on this floor to be paramount to that there should be a conclusion of the budget law and a substitution of this joint committee on reorganization.

While I do not desire to stand in opposition to this measure if the Members of the House desire to pass it—and I realize that the honest sentiment of the House and of the country as well is in favor of economy—I do desire to call attention to the things to which I have called attention, and to make sure of the matter I spoke of on page 1, that this is a live committee of the Congress. Second, I wish to call attention at least—since that is about as much as one can do—to call attention to the fact that there is a clear duplication of intent in paragraph 209 of the budget law and Senate joint resolution 191. It was my purpose to call attention to this in order that those who may have better information than I may enlighten the committee of the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARD. I will.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the gentleman from Ohio think that the three Members of the House on this committee, if they are live Members, would have their whole time taken up with this task?

Mr. GARD. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When the committee on reclassification was appointed I deliberately appointed three men who were going out of Congress, because I believed that the work would take their whole time for two years at least, and that is exactly what happened. I was criticized for it, but I do not care anything about that.

Mr. GARD. The judgment of the gentleman from Missouri was entirely correct. He had had large experience and he knew at the time the appointments were made that the commission would develop into what it did develop—a large investigating body to which some of the men would have to give their whole time and attention. It developed that it extended 18 months beyond the time it was created.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman, I think, has overstated that. They were to report, according to my recollection, on the 1st of January, 1920, but they had not finished the investigation at that time and the House continued their activities until the 20th of March.

Mr. GARD. I do not recall the time they did serve, but they did a very good work.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. These men that are going to be appointed on the committee now, if Members of the next House, will not be able to sit on the floor of the House on an average of two hours a day during the whole two years.

Mr. GARD. The work will have to be done by expert assistants, which the committee is authorized to employ, and, of course, that will create, as the country must know, the necessity of expending a great deal of money. I shall not be here, but were I here I should not object to that because if we create a committee we ought not to hamper it. If you have a committee, give it every facility to do the work. What I call attention to is I seriously question, under the authority we have already conferred in the House and the budget law, the wisdom of what I know will be a great public expense.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is not that exactly what the budget was created for?

Mr. GARD. I so understood it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that if one member of the reclassification committee, the Member from Colorado, had devoted half as much time to the investigation of his commission as he did to making vicious personal attacks on Members of the House and Members of the Senate, both Democrats and Republicans, probably this 800-page report could have been reduced to 200 pages and could probably have been brought in 12 months sooner.

Mr. GARD. I do not agree with the gentleman from Texas. I am frank to say that I have made study of the report and I have some knowledge and observation, having looked into the matter from time to time to see what the commission was doing, and in my opinion no person on the commission rendered a higher or better degree of service, if as high, as the gentleman from Colorado, Mr. KEATING, to whom the gentleman from Texas refers. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 40 minutes.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the resolution, but I think the discussion has disclosed that an amendment should be made. I think this committee will have more to do than three men of the House or three men of the Senate can do. I think the committee ought to consist of at least five Members of the House and five Members of the Senate, so that the committee can subdivide its work and each subdivision could carry on an investigation at the same time. Otherwise I think it will place too much work on the three members who are chosen. I intend to offer that as an amendment when we get to that point, unless the gentleman from Nebraska thinks it would endanger the passage of the resolution. I do not see why it should do so for I think the conferees could soon agree on that.

I do not think there is anything more important than to proceed along this line and appoint this committee for the purpose mentioned. Everyone who has served here very long must have observed the necessity of some sort of reform in the administration of the Government. Not only do Members of Congress become aware of this situation, but the people back home know, of are beginning to realize, that there is needed a reform along these lines. I was surprised during the recent campaign, when I had an opportunity to come in contact with the people, to find so many who are aware of the fact that our Government has become too expensive and that it takes too long and too much money to do what is to be done by the Government.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it the purpose at this time to prevent duplications and reduce expenses?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the gentleman think a very good way to prevent duplication is by creating more duplication in the way of duplicating the efforts of the budget and adding a lot more employees to the pay roll?

Mr. DENISON. I do not think it will have that effect. I think it will aid and expedite the work instead of duplicating it. I think also it is a very wise provision of the resolution that the committee is authorized from time to time to make reports to Congress and make recommendations for legislation. I do not think that it is going to be practical for this committee to make a complete investigation and then come in and make one big report and expect reforms that are to grow out of it to all be accomplished and realized at one time. If I understand the proposition, the matter will be treated logically by subjects, and the committee will proceed to make investigations along certain lines, upon certain subjects, to complete its investigations on that particular subject, and when it does so make a report to Congress. For instance, there should be a complete investigation of the subject of public works, to what extent there is duplication in that work. Then the subject of the public health is another matter that should receive the same treatment, and that subject should be exhausted and a report made to Congress with recommendations as soon as possible. I think we will get more practical results if the committee investigates along the line of subjects and completes its investigation of the particular subjects and then makes reports upon those particular subjects, with their recommendations.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Does not the gentleman think that the committee will find in looking up these duplications that necessarily it can not pursue an activity of the Government, but that these duplications will be so interwoven that the committee will have to take them all up at once. According to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], we have from 41 to 46 different branches of the public health. There is one in the Indian Bureau. When the committee begins to investigate in the Indian Bureau the matter of public health, it will find that it is interwoven with the subject of Indian schools and other matters. I do not see how the investigation can be made on one subject. Necessarily the committee will have to carry the whole thing along together.

Mr. DENISON. I think the committee can summon representatives of the different departments of the Government before it and ascertain what bureaus and departments have public-health activities now under their control, and make a complete and exhaustive investigation of that subject, and then digest its investigation and make a concise, complete, comprehensive report to the Congress. Along that line permit me to say that in October of last year, 1919, I introduced a resolution in the House, and a similar resolution was also introduced in the Senate, providing for the appointment of a joint committee of the House and the Senate to do that very thing, to make a comprehensive investigation of the public-health activities of the Government and make a report to Congress of the results of its investigation. That resolution was introduced in the Senate by Senator FRANCE and was passed by the Senate. The matter went before the Committee on Rules of this House, and in the closing days of the last session it was passed over.

Mr. CARTER. It was lost in the shuffle.

Mr. DENISON. It was lost in the shuffle. My purpose in introducing that resolution was to begin this work by taking it up a subject at a time. The Smoot resolution was afterwards introduced at the other end of the Capitol and this resolution in the House. This resolution covers the same matter as my own, but also covers the other branches of the Government. In the judgment of the committee on this side of the House, it was thought that we should go ahead and act on the general, more comprehensive, resolution, and while investigating for the purpose of efficiency and economy in government to cover the whole subject.

It is true that nearly every department of the Government is carrying on activities connected with the public-health service. The Public Health Bureau itself is under the Treasury Department. It is interesting to study the history of the Public Health Service and learn how it developed into what it is to-day.

It grew originally out of the old Marine Hospital Service, which, of course, was under the Treasury Department. From the old Marine Hospital Service has developed what is now the Bureau of Public Health under the Treasury Department. Yet the Department of Agriculture is carrying on public health activities; the Bureau of Chemistry has supervision over the pure food and drugs act. The Department of Labor is carrying on very important public health activities through the Children's Bureau, and there are bills now pending in Congress calling for aggregate appropriations of about $250,000,000 for the creation of bureaus and departments and divisions and public health activities of all kinds—40 or 50 different bills, along the lines of the Public Health Service, creating new activities and extending those that already exist, not only overlapping and duplicating each other but encroaching upon legitimate State health activities and duplicating present existing State health activities.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. The gentleman, I think, is correct when he says that the people back home are getting tired of these delays. Why should the committee wait until it has finally completed its work? Why not investigate one department and then make a report. It should not take two years.

Mr. DENISON. I think it should do that.

Mr. SEARS. Report immediately.

Mr. DENISON. That is what the resolution provides. I think that should be so. Our Government has for a long time been top-heavy and it is costing too much money to run the Government. We have too many employees here. If this investigation results in lessening the number of employees and economizing to a considerable extent, it will have accomplished a great deal.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there are three lines of activities suggested in the debate to which we may call attention as we review the purposes of the resolution and the objects to be accomplished. First, the budget. I was very glad, indeed, to hear the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] express himself as he did with reference to the budget legislation. The amendment that is added to the bill that passed the House in the closing hours of the last session I think destroyed the major benefit that the bill would accomplish, viz, an independent audit. Without an independent audit the remainder of the bill and the purposes covered by it would be very largely weakened. The good results would be very largely reduced. I should regret very much to see the law enacted in such form as to leave the executive branch of the Government practically the auditor of its own accounts. The bill as originally passed safeguarded that provision fully.

The mode of appointment by the President and the power of removal left in the Congress destroyed all political power and removed every temptation with reference to appointment or removal. The Congress could have no inducement to make a removal in the hope of being able to make an appointment, because, under the law, the appointment was left with the President. If the President retains the power of removal you will have a wavering of the officers of the accounting system to the administrative authority and will. I could bring you to-day a number of examples, cite numerous instances where injury has followed in that particular, and I could cite one transaction involving $106,000,000. I can not follow the details of that proposition at this point. I would like to see the bill pass as it stood in its original form, making an independent audit, as I regard it the chief feature of the system. It has been suggested that the budget bill carries in section 209 certain provisions which would create a duplication of work. Not necessarily. I believe that the two bills can work together for expedition and thoroughness. I believe that the committee contemplated by the resolution now under consideration would hasten this work, would bring it out in much more efficient form. We might spend the hours here in noting instances from the administrative side of the Government wherein a legislative committee could have a power that members or officers of the budget offices would not possess. Some of you have told us in debate that a large amount of work will be required here. So there will, and it will be drudgery; it will be the hardest kind of work, and many questions will be raised that can not and will not be settled at the outset with the entire satisfaction of members of the committee, but they can go a long distance toward correcting the difficulties. Now, if a large amount of work would be imposed upon the committee appointed under this resolution a large amount of extra work would be laid upon the officers and clerks in the accounting departments of the Government, and therefore take more of their time. You would be required to furnish to them all the skilled assistants that you furnish for this committee.

Now, if they are supposed to have all the work they can do as accounting officers and clerks, how are you going to have this work done along with the work that regularly belongs to them? It can not be done, so that eliminates, I think, the suggestion of duplication. Moreover, a legislative committee calling to its assistance experts trained will be able to go into these questions more thoroughly than any committee from the administrative branch of the service will do. Some time ago, while I was in the Treasury Department, I took occasion to run over various reports that had been submitted by the committees on reorganization in the department, legislative committees, and so forth. I found that the most effective work that was done by any of the committees was a legislative committee supplied with trained service from the outside and bringing to its aid the services within the department. You would fail of this undertaking if you should rely entirely upon people from the outside of the Government service. Why? They have little knowledge of the laws of the Government under which these customs grew up and this business is being transacted. They will proceed as an accountant in a business house. Regardless of law they follow the method of accounting that they have learned outside the laws of the Government. When they come in contact with the law they may prescribe a form that will have to be set aside because of the provisions of the law. Right there is where you can call to your assistance as members of this legislative committee the comptroller general and the assistant comptroller general, and submit to them the question as to the existence of laws upon these various points and the bearing that specific statutes will have upon the methods proposed. With the accounting skill from the outside and the knowledge and skill within the department and the knowledge and practical service of the legislative committee you can cover all phases of this business. You can avoid duplication, you can cover all essential features of the proposition, and reach a conclusion that will be worth retaining and incorporating into law. There is one point where economies can be realized over and beyond this manner of avoiding duplication, and I am not sure that it furnishes the largest field for the reduction of expenses in the conduct of public business. It is the trained clerical force within the various offices of the departments. You can not overestimate that proposition.

I wish I had time to take up the details one by one in their line leading up to the point I have suggested. Only one brief citation. I remember very distinctly as I passed through my office one day I found a clerk who was reading over the fine print of a standard form of voucher. It was a waste of the young man's time. I went along, visited others, and came back to my desk, and I sent for that young man, and I asked him how much time he ordinarily spent in reading these printed standard forms. Well, he told me. I asked him how many vouchers he was accustomed to pass each day. He told me. "Well," I said, "these forms are standard. There are items 1, 2, 3, and 4 to be verified and checked. That is your business. The form is fixed in standard print. You settle the question as to whether there is an appropriation: First, has it been legally authorized; second, have the computations been made correctly, have the contracts been properly observed, and the voucher properly signed. Take these central items, check them off one by one. Now," I said, "you go back to your desk and to-morrow you follow that line, and the next day come in and tell me what you have done." To his surprise he found that he had more than doubled his work. The next day he came back and told me again about his progress.

Within a short time we had largely increased his commercial value as a clerk. With the aid of the trained service of clerks who had already learned the business, the educating and pruning process was continued with every new clerk that came into the service.

After nearly 18 years of mutual cooperation along these lines the office was able to handle the largely increased volume of business with the same number of clerks and employees—100—that were on the roll at the beginnnig. The work was more than doubled in efficiency and quantity.

It is grossly erroneous to assume that clerks chosen through the Civil Service Commission have any special merit for the discharge of official duties. The head of an office or bureau secures new clerks upon certification from the Civil Service Commission just as boys used to trade jackknives: "Unsight, unseen; no blade, no trade." In this instance, however, the officer is usually compelled to keep the clerk whether he has a damascus blade or not. A certain amount of service must be furnished as an educating force in the various offices of a department to train those who are coming from time to time into the service of the Government. Vast reductions in the public expenses can be realized in this way. These statements suggest the fact that there is an important place for a bureau of efficiency.

AN INDEPENDENT AUDIT.

With an independent accounting system at command, the House committees on expenditures in the various departments can secure and tabulate an extensive fund of valuable information that would be exceedingly helpful in the solution of the problems to be assigned to the proposed legislative committee. With the aid of an independent accounting system the House committees on expenditures in the various departments may become something more than mere ornaments.

The rules of the House outline a very important field for practical economy through the intelligent activities of such committees. These committees, through the aid of the officers and clerks in an independent accounting system, can prune the expenditures of every department of the Government so that all expenditures for duplicated service can be listed from the vouchers on which such payments are made. With the aid of such references the legislative committee could locate all such duplications, measure their scope, and ascertain the nature and, perchance, the reasons out of which such duplications originate.

Thus it will be observed that this legislative committee could utilize the knowledge and services, first, of an independent accounting system; and, second, the findings of the House committees on expenditures in the various departments; each can supplement the work of the others, and by means of such helpful cooperation they can undoubtedly render very helpful service in the line of practical economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the resolution for amendment.

Mr. REAVIS. But all time has not expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had 20 minutes.

Mr. REAVIS. Has the gentleman from Ohio any further speeches?

Mr. GARD. Yes; I have some Members who desire to speak briefly. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN].

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I do not want to delay the passage of this resolution. I think this proposition is a step forward in the way of furnishing an economical administration of the Government. The one thing that has attracted the attention of men who are interested in governmental affairs is the continuous increase of governmental functions by the National Government. In the past few years there has been a tendency to increase the functions of our National Government, and there are in the Nation many people who are contending that all the things that are to be done in the way of government should be done by the National Government. People for the last decade have been drifting to the idea that all of their needs and all of their wants can be supplied by the National Congress. That in a measure, in my judgment, has tended to increase these departments and the number of clerks in the departments, and therefore a gradual increase in their activities. An economical spirit never has prevailed in the Congress and in the departments at the same time. The heads of these departments do not suggest economical measures and retrenchments, because they have a pride in trying to extend the activities of their departments in order to become more popular and necessary to the people of the country.

For you to commence a policy of retrenching the activities of the National Government, the people of the United States must understand for once that the Government of the United States is not made to support the people, but that the people of the United States must support their own Government, then they would have some idea of the difficulties of the Congress of the United States. But we gentlemen, in order to be elected to office, are tempted sometimes to tell what wonderful things the Government ought to do for the people of the United States, without telling them some of the things they ought to do for the Government itself. If you appropriate money for the erection of a building, and that building should cost you $20,000 more than it ought to cost, you have lost $20,000, but you still have the building, but when you pay $20,000 in salaries to clerks that you do not need you have nothing left. Your money is thrown away. It may just as well be cast into the fire. When you pay money for rent for quarters for departments that are not needed you are throwing your money away. And if this measure will do nothing more than call the attention of the Congress to the many duplications that are going on in the departments, it will give you some idea as to the necessary legislation in order to make the departments function properly and not deprive the people of the United States of the services of the Government.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. I will.

Mr. REAVIS. In connection with what the gentleman stated, I wondered if he would be good enough to let me put in here the statement that when this war began we had something more than 300,000 department employees, and that to-day we have nearly 800,000?

Mr. McKEOWN. The trouble with that is this, that the departmental clerk who is promoted to where he has 100 clerks under him instead of 5 or 6 clerks, is loath to give up his place and return to the 4 or 5 clerks he had under him before the war.

Mr. REAVIS. I wish to say that I make that statement in no spirit of criticism against the department heads, but merely to show the necessity for some legislation at this time.

Mr. McKEOWN. I am not undertaking to unduly criticize the departments. They had to perform this service. The war brought on work that had to be performed. The thing I am complaining about is that Congress and the departments had not at the same time reached the same conclusion as to the manner of saving money. Now, gentlemen, that is not only true of the National Government, but it is true of our State governments. A governor of a State will be elected upon a platform of economy, and yet his legislature will run away with itself when it comes to appropriating money.

Under the extravagance that has been indulged in by our people during the times we were so prosperous the people did not feel the heavy burden of taxation as they do now, and it is time to begin to retrench the appropriations of the Congress.

Mr. LAYTON. If the gentleman will permit an interruption, does he not think that after all the basic trouble is in Congress itself in establishing what is very evidently a bureaucracy in the United States instead of a democracy?

Mr. McKEOWN. I want to say to the gentleman that the Congress can not escape its responsibility, but it is not all of the Government. The Congress is only a branch of the Government, and there must be a coordination or there must be cowork with the other departments, and you can not have efficient administration of this Government or an economical administration unless the administrative department acts in accord with the congressional department in trying to save the money of the country. And I want to say that we are not to go into an absolute, blind method of chopping off appropriations. A great many functions of this Government must go on or the people of the country will suffer. The people of the United States are entitled to the very best that this Government can afford them, and at the same time be the most economically administered possible. You can not administer a national government or a state government upon the same principles as a private corporation, and when men say you are going to administer it like you administer private affairs, they are mistaken, because necessarily a national government or a state government can not be operated upon the same means and measures as a private individual. You can take the department down here, and you will find men who are working hard to perform their duties, and you will find others who are loafing on the job. It is true not only in the departments but it is true to-day in many of the industries of the United States—a spirit that has grown out of this war somehow or somewhere. And, gentlemen, you may have your budget system, you may put all your appropriations in one committee, if you want to, but you will never have economical government by that means alone. You have to quit spending so much money before we can have economy, and the mere means by which you appropriate money will not of itself be an economical administration. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD].

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I had first thought I welcomed this resolution. I sent for the bill creating the budget, read section 209, and wondered whether this resolution was not for duplication. I have listened very attentively to the discussions that have taken place. I remembered there was great promise from the reclassification of salaries in the District of Columbia, that a year was spent by a commission, a voluminous report made, and that many Members of the House are ignorant yet, not only as to the contents of the report, but as to whether any report has been made. I have been impressed very much by the fact that the men who have served here long years do not think that suddenly or by any specific method we shall be able to transform the Government of the United States into an efficient business organization such as is carried on by the great corporations of the country. However, I believe that, if ever, most of us need to exercise that rare and yet highest quality of the human mind—the quality of discrimination. Already in the debate there has been an attempt to prejudice a bill that is coming with regard to the Patent Office. It will not do for men to say that there shall be no increases in anything; that adequate appropriations will not be made for those things that are absolutely essential to the wise conduct of the Government.

A little further thought led me to the conclusion that a live committee, given the power which we seek to give this committee, and under the conditions that now confront the Government, with a pressure from the public and with the pressure in this House toward economy and reorganization, might become a very effective agent in securing the things that we desire. One is compelled to believe that no agency of government can be as efficiently carried on as a private business.

The country was startled by the assertion a few years ago that the expenses of Government could be reduced by at least $300,000,000. The statement has been made to-day that they could be reduced by $500,000,000. But in the very nature of things the governmental conduct of affairs is necessarily expensive. I have no Utopian ideas, and yet it does seem that the hundred thousand men and women in the District of Columbia in the various departments of the Government not only might be but ought to be quickly reduced.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Ohio to take some of his time. There will be but one further speech on this side.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I was very glad indeed to hear the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD] so frankly and freely express himself along the line of thought that this resolution will perhaps provide a duplication of effort to at least some of the activities of the budget plan. I am also glad to agree with the gentleman from Indiana in the theory that we must not indulge in too many Utopian dreams or in the idea that we ever succeed in conducting the Government of the United States as a private corporation would conduct its business, with the same efficiency and the same economy. No government on earth except an absolute autocracy will ever be able to conduct its affairs as efficiently and as economically as a private corporation. It is impracticable and unwise to vest in minor officials that discretion and that large authority which business men and captains of industry are able to exercise in the conduct of their own private affairs.

I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the scope of this resolution is almost a duplicate of section 209 of the budget bill. It is provided in section 209 that the budget bureau—

> Shall make a detailed study of the departments and establishments for the purpose of enabling the President to determine what changes (with a view of securing greater economy and efficiency in the conduct of the public service) should be made in (1) the existing organization, activities, and methods of business of such departments or establishments; (2) the appropriations therefor; (3) the assignment of particular activities to particular services; or (4) the regrouping of services.

If gentlemen will consult section 2 of the present resolution they will find that in at least one instance the identical language contained in section 209 appears in section 2 of this resolution. I expect to vote for this resolution, but I wonder if the signs and symptoms which we have seen indicated here to-day do not forecast a lessening of the zeal of some Members of this House for the budget plan?

Now, if this resolution in fact provides for the duplication of a part of the budget plan it would seem to illustrate the evil which it is sought to destroy; and yet from expressions which we have heard from prominent gentlemen on the majority side of this House I wonder if it is in the minds of some of them that, on account of the pressure from chairmen of important committees who feel that the importance and power of their committees are to be lessened under the budget plan and a single appropriations committee, and under the pressure of members of those important committees, they are going to lose some of their zeal for the budget plan and may find in the adoption of this resolution justification for abandonment of the budget.

I hope not. I hope the budget plan will be adhered to. I happen to be a member of an appropriating committee, but notwithstanding that fact I was glad to vote for the budget, and I hope that the budget plan will be adopted and put into force. But it would not occasion surprise if these premonitory symptoms of weeping, these funereal signs, do not in fact forecast an early grave for the budget, which our friends on the majority side were so insistent in supporting a few months ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I intend to vote for this resolution, because I think it is a good policy for Congress to keep in touch with all sources and avenues of information as to departmental activities. I really think that we ought to keep in closer touch than we have done heretofore, because the responsibility of making these appropriations is ours. Therefore I voted for the budget plan and I shall vote for this resolution. Still, at the same time, it will not hurt for us to bear in mind that these Government activities which we propose to investigate and consolidate and coordinate these various bureaus that we hear criticized on the floor of the House from time to time, are not mushroom growths, but they exist by authority of law, laws which Congress itself has enacted. And many Members who indulge in criticism so freely voted for some of them.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. In just one moment. I want to refer to a statement which occasioned the brief remarks that I now desire to make. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] this afternoon, in a discussion of the rule to make this resolution in order, made some severe criticisms of the present administration for its extravagance and its failure to end certain war activities, and made severe criticism of the extravagant expenditures of different bureaus, and so on. Now, when I heard the gentleman's remarks I was forcibly reminded of the fact that at this moment quite a number of letters are on my desk asking me to support the Fess bill. The Fess bill, if adopted, will authorize an appropriation of several million dollars for the extension of the teaching of home economics. At the last session we had another Fess bill, at least the gentleman from Ohio was in charge of it on the floor of the House—the vocational industrial rehabilitation bill—which provides for certain Federal appropriations to be made and an increased bureau personnel here in Washington to administer the activities of the bureau, and it must be remembered that all of these new Federal activities cost money. If the question is asked why the expenses of the Federal Government are growing by leaps and bounds, there is the answer.

Mr. Chairman, only yesterday I received a resolution from a women's club in Texas asking me to support five different bills. I recall that among them was the Sheppard-Towner bill. I believe the Smith-Towner bill was another, which proposes to create a Federal department of education, with a Cabinet officer, and so on. And I know also that among the list was the Fess bill. And this good woman who sent me the resolution closed her letter by saying, "We do not want to get any letter back from you stating that you will give this your careful consideration and attention, but we want to know how you are going to vote on these bills." [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield there?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not my colleague from Texas believe, concerning the Sheppard-Towner bill, that the Congress of the United States ought to do just as much for the good mothers and the little children as we have done for the cattle and the sheep and the hogs that we send to the slaughterhouse? [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. I was not discussing the merits or demerits of any of these bills which I have just mentioned. It will be soon enough to do that when the bills come up in the House for legislative consideration. What I am now emphasizing is that there will not be brought about any economy in Federal expenditures as long as Congress continues to provide for new Federal activities. Indeed, there can not be. It occurs to me that the financial condition of the country is such that there must be the closest scrutiny of all these bills which involve additional expenditures of public money, and as one Member of Congress I intend to act in accordance with that belief.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. All the time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] has expired.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as I think, without exception, all those who have spoken in the time allotted for opposition to the resolution have concluded with the statement that they favored and intend to vote for it, I will not take any further time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the joint resolution for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That a joint committee is created, to be known as the joint committee on reorganization, which shall consist of three Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President thereof, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker thereof. Vacancies occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 1, line 7, after the word "thereof," strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the words "Provided, That if a member of such committee shall cease to be a Member of the Sixty-seventh Congress, he shall thereupon cease to be a member of said committee."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment concerning which I spoke during the time allotted to me during the debate preceding the reading of the bill. It has for its purpose that which the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] says is his purpose, to insure that the membership of the committee shall be composed of Members of the House of Representatives, and in order that that may be sure during the life of the committee, as disclosed in section 3, I have incorporated the language which I submit in the amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does not the gentleman think that when the resolution states that the committee shall consist of three Members of the House of Representatives, if any member of the committee ceases to be a Member of the House of Representatives he will thereby cease to be eligible to membership on the committee?

Mr. GARD. We had quite a long discussion on that when the gentleman was, perhaps inadvertently, detained from the House.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I remember the discussion, but does not the gentleman think the language of the resolution is sufficiently explicit?

Mr. GARD. I do not.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it may be that the committee would have more influence in the Sixty-seventh Congress if it were composed of Members of that Congress. I think if I had my way about it I would appoint on this committee a Member of this House who has had long service in this body, and who is as well acquainted with the various departments of the Government and their history as anyone in the United States. I would name as the minority member of the committee that man beloved by every Member here, CHAMP CLARK, of Missouri. [Applause.]

Everyone knows that the members of this committee will not do most of the important work that the committee is designed to do. A Member of Congress has a lot of work to do, and so far as my observation goes does not have very much superfluous time to learn for himself about all of the different services of the Government. I suppose there must be in some way or other more than a thousand of the different governmental services, and to understand any one of them requires a great deal of time. In the main this committee will select experienced and expert men under it to give advice and information to its members, and then the committee, wisely composed as it will be, will submit its recommendations to Congress. But, as a rule, the committee members themselves will not know about these different branches of the governmental service. In the very nature of things they can not know a great deal. The purpose of this, as I understand it, is to try to coordinate the various branches of the governmental service, to eliminate where elimination is possible, to unify where unification is possible, to coordinate where unification is not possible and elimination is not desirable but coordination is practicable.

The Government service is an evolution at all times. It grows up just as the practice in the House of Representatives grows up. There is not a man on earth who can study the rules of the House of Representatives and get any idea of the procedure of the House if all he knows about the procedure is what he can find by reading the rules. It is a good deal so about the governmental services.

I would like to make this remark: Several gentlemen have stated here that Senator Aldrich at one time said or intimated that a reorganization of the governmental departments would save $300,000,000. Senator Aldrich never made that statement. What he intimated was that if he could run the Government he could save $300,000,000; and if he had had the opportunity to save the $300,000,000 the first thing he would have done would have been to cut off the large appropriations for the Army and the Navy. We can save a great deal more than $300,000,000 if we have got the nerve to do that. [Applause.]

Mr. CARAWAY. I want to be recognized in opposition to the pending amendment. I do not care to argue the merits of the resolution, though I am heartily glad it has come before the House and that it is going to be adopted. I am sure that millions and millions of dollars will be saved in the governmental expenses when this resolution shall have finally brought to the House the information which it is designed to elicit. But the amendment was to clarify the resolution so that no one except Members who are to continue in the House or the Senate shall be appointed. I think the resolution itself makes that absolutely certain that no other person could serve. It says:

That a joint committee is created, to be known as the joint committee on regorganization, which shall consist of three Members of the Senate to be appointed by the President thereof, and three Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker thereof.

Under that language some contend it would be a fulfillment of the requirements of this resolution if at the time of their appointment the members of the committee should be Members of their respective Houses, but that is not what the resolution says. It says, not that they shall be Members at the time when they shall be appointed, but that the committee shall consist of Members of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. Membership in the House or Senate under this resolution constitutes the test of eligibility to this committee.

Mr. CARAWAY. Absolutely, because the committee would not consist of Representatives and Senators if the term of any member of the committee should expire or if for any reason he should cease to be a Member of his respective body. The committee must consist of Members of the House and Senate, not at the time when they shall be appointed, but the membership of the committee shall consist of three Representatives and three Senators. Therefore if for any reason anyone appointed upon this committee should cease to be a Member of his respective body, his eligibility would cease, and he would cease thereby to be a member of the committee. Therefore I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the joint committee on reorganization to make a survey of the administrative services of the Government for the purpose of securing all pertinent facts concerning their powers and duties, their distribution among the several executive departments, and their overlapping and duplication of authority; also to determine what redistribution of activities should be made among the several services with a view to the proper correlation of the same, and what departmental regrouping of services should be made so that each executive department shall embrace only services having close working relation with each other and ministering directly to the primary purpose for which the same are maintained and operated, to the end that there shall be achieved the largest possible measure of efficiency and economy in the conduct of Government business.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A good deal has been said recently on the floor of the House about the reasons why the Secretary of War had caused to be enlisted a larger number of men in the Army than is provided for in the Army appropriation bill. It seems to me, in the spirit of fair play, that each Member of the House ought to have an opportunity to read his reasons why he thought it was his duty under his oath of office and under the law to enlist the number of men for the Army which he did, and therefore I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a brief excerpt from his testimony before the Committee on Military Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The excerpt is as follows:

Secretary BAKER. * * * The Army reorganization act, with which we are dealing at this time, Mr. Chairman, is an entirely different piece of legislation from any that we have ever hitherto had. I need not recall to the members of this committee the fact that that bill differs in every material regard from the recommendations of the War Department and of the Secretary of War. My recommendation was for a very much larger force than 280,000, but the Congress in its wisdom saw fit to fix a very much smaller force. But it adopted language and imposed, as it seems to me, upon the Secretary of War conditions of a kind that had never hitherto been imposed on any Secretary of War. If you will permit me, I would like to call attention to a few of the instances in which this law differs from any we have ever had before and seems to me to express a positive and definite mandate from the Congress to an executive officer.

Section 1 of this act says:

"That the Army of the United States shall consist of the Regular Army, the National Guard while in the service of the United States, and the Organized Reserve, including the Officers' Reserve Corps and the Enlisted Reserve Corps."

Section 2 says:

"The Regular Army of the United States"—then there is this mandatory language—"shall consist of the Infantry, the Cavalry, the Field Artillery, the Coast Artillery Corps, the Air Service, the Corps of Engineers, the Signal Corps, which shall be designated as the combatant arms or the line of the Army." I will discuss that a little further in just a moment.

Section 3 starts out as follows:

"The organized peace establishment, including the Regular Army," evidently as heretofore described, "the National Guard, and the Organized Reserves, shall include all of those divisions and military organizations necessary to form the basis for a complete and immediate mobilization for the national defense in the event of a national emergency declared by Congress."

If that means anything, it means that Congress has declared that the Regular Army as thus described, and which is developed in its detailed description later, shall be so organized and made up as to form a basis for a complete and immediate mobilization in the event of an emergency being declared by Congress.

As you go through this act and take up its later provisions you will find that Congress left no discretion to anybody as to what kind of an Army it wanted to have on hand in the event of there being a necessity for immediate mobilization. For the first time, so far as I know, in the history of military legislation Congress undertook to provide not only the exact strength of the corps of officers of the Army, but the exact strength of the several combatant arms. For instance, in section 12a the Chemical Warfare Service is treated in this language: "There is hereby created a Chemical Warfare Service. The Chemical Warfare Service shall consist of"—it is not may, but shall consist— "1 chief of the Chemical Warfare Service, with the rank of brigadier general; 100 officers in grades from colonel to second lieutenant, inclusive; and 1,200 enlisted men," a perfectly inelastic number.

In the next section, section 13, the same phrases are used, except as to its creation, in reference to the Signal Corps, which, of course, was a preexistent corps. But its personnel is stated in exact and inelastic phrases. It says that "the Signal Corps shall consist of 1 chief signal officer, with the rank of major general; 300 officers, in grades from colonel to second lieutenant, inclusive; and 5,000 enlisted men."

* * * * * * *

The act continues in a similar manner practically with all the combatant arms. The Air Service is dealt with in mandatory language and the number of enlisted men provided for is 16,000. The number provided for in the Infantry is 110,000 enlisted men, in the Cavalry 20,000 enlisted men, in the Field Artillery 37,000 enlisted men, and the aggregate of the enlisted men so provided for comes to about 280,000 men.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, Mr. Secretary, in the reorganization bill after the Spanish-American War, as I recall, the number of men required for a company was fixed in the law, and that was mandatory, too.

Secretary BAKER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Presidents, the Commanders in Chief of the Army, never saw fit to fill all of the branches, even though the total number of men was provided for in the law.

Secretary BAKER. I am not familiar with that legislation or that history, but this seems to me to be the fact, and it is upon this theory that I have interpreted my duties under this act.

When we went into the World War the newspapers and the public discussion of the country were filled with criticisms of Congress and of the various administrations, without reference to their political affiliations, for the lack of preparedness on the part of the country. * * * It seemed to me that Congress, in the light of the experience of the country in the World War, had determined quite definitely and within limits fixed that that opportunity for reproach should not exist either upon the Congress or the Executive, and therefore it undertook to fix the definite size of the Army. They had in view the disturbed state of the world at that time; they had in view the international relations of the United States; they had in view undoubtedly the fact that the National Guard of the several States had been demobilized and discharged from the service of both the Federal and State Governments, and that the only military forces in the country organized were those which were there provided for. I could not treat that, and I can not treat it as a mere gesture on the part of Congress. The country was informed that Congress had appropriated for the Army stipulated in this act, and in mandatory language, and I can not treat that as a gesture, and then, if some emergency arises for such an Army, have somebody say that the Secretary of War did not do what Congress told him to do.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the committee shall, from time to time, report to both the Senate and the House of Representatives the results of its inquiries, together with its recommendations, and shall prepare and submit bills or resolutions having for their purpose the coordination of Government functions and their most efficient and economical conduct, and the final report of said committee shall be submitted not later than the second Monday in December, 1922. The committee is authorized to employ such assistance as it may require, at such compensation as the committee may determine to be just and reasonable, and to make such reasonable expenditures as may be necessary for the proper conduct of its work, such expenditures to be paid in equal parts from the contingent funds of the House of Representatives and the Senate, as from time to time may be duly authorized by resolutions of those bodies.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska if it is the intention that this committee shall report a bill to go on the calendar for action by the House. It says "shall prepare and submit bills or resolutions having for their purpose," and so forth. Is it intended that they shall report a bill which shall go on the calendar?

Mr. REAVIS. The thought I had in mind and one I have now is that there are a number of bills that have been introduced looking to do away with the duplication, overlapping, and coordination of different activities of the Government. My thought was that the entire legislation should be submitted to that committee and that the committee have the power to report bills to the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You can not provide by law what the rules of the House of Representatives shall be.

Mr. REAVIS. That is unquestionably true. The gentleman will see in the resolution that it provides that the committee shall make recommendations. These recommendations might be that the Committee on Rules should report a rule making such a bill in order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They could make a recommendation, but they could not report a bill to the House under this resolution. All they could do would be to submit a bill in their report.

Mr. REAVIS. I realize perfectly that the gentleman from Illinois is correct. The thought I had in mind and the purpose I would like to accomplish is that if this committee spends the time, which I think it will, in the consideration of these matters, it should submit to the House a bill seeking to do away with the useless matters and might recommend to the House that the Committee on Rules make in order some such bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Whatever recommendation they made would be referred to the appropriate committee of the House.

Mr. REAVIS. There is no question about that, and there is nothing in the resolution that would change it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is my view of it.

Mr. REAVIS. And there is no intention of changing it. What I meant to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts was that I hoped there might be some arrangement whereby the committee being in possession of the facts better than any other party that there might be some arrangement made that they might report legislation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They can report the form of a bill as has been frequently done by these commissions, and then that bill is referred to the appropriate committee of the House. The gentleman will pardon me, but I think when the report from the regular committee comes before the House it would have greater support than it would if it came just from the committee of the six gentlemen on this committee, because then it would have the recommendation of the joint committee and also the recommendation of the committee of the House.

Mr. REAVIS. That is unquestionably true.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am hoping, like the gentleman from Nebraska, for results.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I had another inquiry I wished to propound to the gentleman from Nebraska. Ordinarily expenditures from the contingent fund of the House are made only after approval has been had by the chairman of the Committee on Accounts or the entire Committee on Accounts. Was it intended that this joint committee could draw upon the contingent fund of the House without the matter being referred to the chairman of the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. REAVIS. It was not intended by this resolution to permit the membership of the committee itself to violate any rule of the House. The purpose of the resolution is to give assurance to the House that no attempt would be made either to contract for or expend money without the matter having first the approval of the House. The details of the method are of no consequence. It, of course, will be done in the regular and ordinary way. The thought I had in mind was to assure the House that there would be no expenditure without the full knowledge and approval of the appropriate authorities of the House.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I presume I have the right print in my hand and that the amendment to which I am about to call attention is in the correct print.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman is calling attention to the italics?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. I will say that the italics are in the House joint resolution. It is also in the Senate joint resolution, but not as an amendment. The House joint resolution was amended in that particular so as to be the counterpart of the Senate resolution.

Mr. GARRETT. Then that provision is in the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. REAVIS. Yes; but not as an amendment.

Mr. GARRETT. This provides that the committee shall report in December, 1922.

Mr. REAVIS. Not later than that.

Mr. GARRETT. I suppose the committee has given due consideration to that date; that it is not practicable for them to report earlier.

Mr. REAVIS. The date placed in the resolution, December, 1922, was not with the idea of suggesting the time of the report. It was put in to give ample opportunity to the committee to have time enough to consider the things submitted to them. My own judgment is that the report will come before that time, although that is merely an opinion that is practically worthless, with the slight information I have.

Mr. GARRETT. Having some appreciation of the tremendous amount of work this committee will have to do, I have an idea that it will probably not report earlier than it is required to by the resolution.

Mr. REAVIS. That is, its final report?

Mr. GARRETT. That is the usual experience, so far as my observation has extended, in respect to commissions. What caused me to call attention to it is this: I think it would be very desirable, if possible, to have a report earlier than that. That means that it will come at the short session of the Congress; that is to say, two years from now.

Based on our experience here, we know it is extremely dubious about getting as important legislation as will be recommended by that committee through at the short session of Congress. It seems to me, if it is at all possible, there should be a report in time to have that legislation ready so that the annual appropriation bills for the succeeding fiscal year can be adjusted to the situation. I do not know that I could improve upon the date. I am merely suggesting this for the gentleman's consideration.

Mr. REAVIS. The thought in the mind of both Senator SMOOT and myself in the drawing of this was not to indicate by the language that the report should come in at the beginning of the short session. That date was put in there as marking the longest time that the committee could take under the resolution. I see the force of the gentleman's argument, and I think that would be very persuasive with the committee when it came to consider the proposition, and that if it were possible to make a report before that it certainly would do so, because I think we would be justified in taking it for granted that the men who are appointed on this committee, whoever they may be, will at least have some other activities in Congress they would like to attend to, and they certainly would not want to delay this. That would be my judgment—that they would not want to keep it in the hands of the committee any longer than is necessary. Unless the gentleman feels that the date should be changed, I hope very much that an amendment will not be made to it, because I am fearful that if we make any amendments to this resolution and it goes back to the Senate we may get the matter tangled up with the appropriation bills or something else and never get it passed. I do not mean by that that I would inveigh against any necessary amendment, but I hope it will not be deemed necessary.

Mr. GARRETT. I will say to the gentleman that I of course have not offered any amendment, and I am perfectly willing to follow the judgment of those who have given much more thought to it than I have had opportunity to give—that is, more study to its details—and who have better opportunity of knowing the amount of time that probably will be required to do this tremendous work. Of course, we can not be at all certain as to how long the first regular session of the Sixty-seventh Congress will be, and it would probably be impracticable to fix the date, say, as June, 1921, because that Congress might have concluded its work by that time, and unless it were a practical thing to fix it in 1921, in December, or January 1, 1922, or March 4, 1922, it would be perhaps as well to leave it as it is. If the gentleman does not think it would be a proper limitation to fix it any later than March 4, 1922, then I would have no basis on which to suggest an amendment.

Mr. REAVIS. I fear it would embarrass the passage of the resolution.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment—and I should think probably in the judgment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]—there will be an extension of time in which to make this final report. I would guarantee that the final report will not be made by December, 1922, and that is no reflection upon the committee. The date here is an admonition to the committee, but if gentlemen suppose that you are going to change the methods and organizations of the Government by some sleight of hand trick—practices and organizations which have grown up in a century of time, and more recently very rapidly in a war period—and that this will be done overnight, then they have another guess coming. If this committee amounts to anything it will just get well started in the work by the time it has to make the final report, and if it is doing good work we will want to go ahead. I have no doubt that it will be doing good work. Meanwhile, it can bring in a preliminary report, or as many preliminary reports as it desires, and submit bills to Congress, or other recommendations for our action. The date comes in such a way that it would give this committee authority to make its report and have it signed after the usual summer vacation following the long session of the Congress. For one, I hope that a year from this coming summer we will be able to adjourn in July and let this committee finish up its work as far as it can during the vacation following, and give the members time to sign the report after they come back the first week in the new session.

I would like to make this inquiry of the gentleman from Nebraska, which I did not do before, but which probably has already been answered. We have before us on our desks the House resolution as reported. We are considering the Senate resolution which is on the desk of the reading clerk. Are the two identical?

Mr. REAVIS. Absolutely. The House resolution is a verbatim copy of the Senate resolution, introduced by Senator SMOOT. I made the copy myself after consultation with him. Subsequent to that time the Senate resolution was changed and the language in italics to be found in the copy of the House resolution, on page 2, was placed there by the House Judiciary Committee to conform to the language of the Senate resolution.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, to call the attention of the gentleman from Nebraska and also of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who raised the question by inquiry, to the matter of the payment of the expenses to be incurred by this committee. I feel sure that it will not be the purpose of the committee when appointed, nor is it the purpose of the proponents of this resolution, to change any of the existing methods of taking money out of the contingent fund of the House, but if gentlemen will read this section as it is written and construe it technically, as legislative matters are usually construed, I think they will conclude that the resolution gives this committee authority to expend money directly, without submitting the matter to the Committee on Accounts. I think that is so for this reason, although I may be wrong. The resolution provides—at such compensation as the committee may determine to be just and reasonable, and to make such reasonable expenditures as may be necessary for the proper conduct of its work.

The committee doubtless intended to say—as from time to time may be duly authorized by resolution of these bodies.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suggest that the gentleman read the rest of it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But that is not what it says—

such expenditures to be paid in equal parts from the contingent funds of the House of Representatives and the Senate, as from time to time may be duly authorized by resolutions of those bodies.

Now, that refers to the contingent fund of the House and Senate as may from time to time be authorized by those two bodies.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman suggest to me how any money can be paid out of the contingent fund by this resolution except on a resolution from the House?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know. The gentleman is giving here rather extraordinary powers to a new committee. It is, under construction, possible on an audit of the Treasury Department upon the voucher issued by the chairman of the committee. How can the gentleman say under the technical language employed in this resolution that that would not be a proper voucher?

Mr. REAVIS. Here is what the resolution says, and I again say it from the language of the resolution. It speaks of reasonable expenditures that the committee might incur, and the language of the resolution is:

Such expenditures to be paid in equal parts from the contingent funds of the House of Representatives and the Senate, as from time to time may be duly authorized by resolution of those bodies.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand.

Mr. REAVIS. In view of that language, how is it possible for this committee to make any expenditures from the contingent fund of the House except by the passage of a resolution?

Mr. BANKHEAD. My position is that the language as it appears in the phraseology of this resolution and by the ordinary terms of usage of construction refers more directly to the contingent funds of the House and Senate as may from time to time be authorized, and not to such expenditures as may from time to time be authorized.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman makes so close a construction I can not follow it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I stated it might appear to be a technical construction possibly.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman let me take one line out of this?

Such expenditures to be paid from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives as from time to time may be duly authorized by resolution of that body.

How are you going to pay money out of the contingent fund without a resolution of that body?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is not my purpose to offer any amendment to the resolution, because I respectfully defer to the gentleman in his wish to pass the joint resolution unamended. But inasmuch as the statement has been made that the language of the resolution does not change the rules of the House, I though proper to call the attention of the committee to it.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska a question if I may. There is no provision in the resolution I find for the subpœnaing of witnesses or the administration of oaths to witnesses?

Mr. REAVIS. No; there is nothing of that kind in the resolution. But there is general authority for the committee or its agents to make investigation of those departments.

Mr. ROGERS. Does not the gentleman think that such a committee might frequently find itself hampered in carrying on its work if they did not have authority to subpœna witnesses?

Mr. REAVIS. The thought in my mind was that if we ever reached the point where that was necessary, why, it is easy enough to obtain such authority.

Mr. ROGERS. On that viewpoint what is the objection to including it in the resolution now?

Mr. REAVIS. Well, my particular objection now is I do not consider it to be necessary, and my next objection is my desire not to amend this resolution for fear it will be lost in the shuffle that will so soon be inaugurated in the Senate.

Mr. ROGERS. The practical objection, I gather, outweighs the theoretical one.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the officers and employees of all administrative services of the Government shall furnish to the committee such information regarding powers, duties, activities, organization, and methods of business as the committee may from time to time require, and the committee, or any of its employees when duly authorized by the committee, shall have access to and the right to examine any books, documents, papers, or records of any administrative service for the purpose of securing the information needed by the committee in the prosecution of its work.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the joint resolution to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration Senate joint resolution 191, had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment, with the recommendation that the resolution do pass.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time; was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. REAVIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that House joint resolution No. 339 be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

INCREASING FORCE AND SALARIES, PATENT OFFICE.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 611.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be, and the same is hereby, discharged from the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11984) entitled "An act to increase the force and salaries in the Patent Office, and for other purposes"; the said Senate amendments be, and the same are hereby, disagreed to by the House and the conference requested by the Senate agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, the status of this bill is as follows: The bill passed the House the latter part of the last session; went to the Senate, where it was amended several times.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield before he proceeds further?

Mr. FESS. I will yield.

Mr. GARRETT. Is it the purpose of the gentleman to yield some time to this side?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. He is not going to move the previous question?

Mr. FESS. No. It was amended in the Senate several times and came back, and the committee in charge asked to send it to conference. There was objection to it, however, and the Committee on Rules simply report a rule to send it to conference. If the gentleman from Tennessee wants some time, I will yield within my hour such time as he desires.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not personally desire any time, nor do I know any member of the Committee on Rules who does. There is no opposition in the Committee on Rules to the resolution, but the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is opposed to the resolution and he desires some time to oppose it, and if the gentleman will yield to me——

Mr. FESS. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennesse to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman from Texas desires 15 minutes.

Mr. FESS. Will not 10 minutes do?

Mr. BLANTON. This is quite a big bill.

Mr. FESS. I will yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, when this bill was before the House for passage the following colloquy occurred between myself and the chairman in charge of it. In answer to my question, I read from the RECORD the following reply:

Mr. NOLAN. The Assistant Commissioner of Patents at the present time receives $3,500. By the adoption of the amendment his salary is now increased $1,500 a year. The five examiners in chief receive $3,500, and the increase for them in this bill makes an increase of $1,500 a year.

Mr. BLANTON. Then beginning with the chief clerk under the next section on down the raises have been relatively how much?

Mr. NOLAN. The chief clerk at the present time gets $3,000 and he is raised $1,000 to $4,000. The law examiners get $2,700 and they are raised to $4,000 each, or $1,250. The classification examiner receives at the present time $3,600 and he is raised to $4,200. The examiners in chief, $3,500, and are raised to $5,000. Those are the five examiners in chief provided in section 1.

Mr. BLANTON. So they approximate from $1,000 to $1,500 raise?

Mr. NOLAN. Yes. In some cases $600.

There are 1,048 employees provided for in this bill in the Patent Office. That is quite a substantial increase in the number of employees in that bureau. The bill as it passed the House seeks to pay to the Commissioner of Patents $6,000; to the first assistant, $5,500; to another assistant, $4,500; to 5 examiners, $5,000 each; to 6 examiners, $4,000 each; to 3 examiners, $3,900 each; to 47 more examiners, $3,900 each; to 40 assistant examiners, $3,300 each; to 30 more assistant examiners, $3,100 each; to 30 more assistant examiners, $2,900 each; to 40 more assistant examiners, $2,700 each. And so on down the line for the 1,048 proposed employees in this Patent Office.

I do not blame the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN], who is chairman of the committee in charge of this bill, for seeking to get every single cent he can for the employees of this Patent Office. They are brothers of his, affiliated in an organization where the oath says that "You have got to stand by the membership of the organization. When it comes to the interest of the organization, you must stand by your affiliated brother and do everything you can for him." The employees of this Patent Office are members of the employees' union, affiliated with the members of his union, the International Molders' Union, of which he has been an officer for 13 years. He holds his card in his pocket now, an honored officer of that organization. Through the American Federation of Labor they are brothers. I do not blame him. He is carrying out the oath of his brother union members in trying to get everything he can for them. But the question is for Congress to decide whether in the day of reconstruction, whether in the day when all of us have promised all the people that we are going to get back to normal conditions, whether in time when cotton has gone down from the war maximum of 46 cents a pound to 9 cents, and even some grades of it to 6 cents a pound—and can not be sold, and a market can not be found for it—at a time when wool has dropped from the war maximum of 72 cents a pound down to 15 cents, and the local warehouses of this country are bulging out with it, and it can not be sold for any price, though it means a whole year's income and livelihood for a lot of big-hearted American citizens who help clothe the 105,000,000 of the United States; at a time when you can buy mutton chops now even in Washington—and that is the highest place on God's green earth—for 30 cents a pound, while they used to cost you 60 cents; in this day of reconstruction, when all men must keep busy, and if they hold their jobs they have got to stop all this monkey business and go to work; in this day of reconstruction, when people are going to accept less salaries than they have been getting and work more hours a day than they have if they expect to earn a livelihood for themselves, wives, and children—at such a time is it proper to increase these salaries at from $600 to $1,500 increases each per year?

The distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] has told me of a noted jurist who sat on the circuit bench of Virginia for years as a distinguished jurist, trying men for their lives and trying property rights running into the millions of dollars, receiving how much salary? Sixteen hundred dollars a year. He could give that kind of distinguished service to his country for $1,600 a year. Why, the distinguished gentleman from Missouri, Judge RUCKER, served in his State as a distinguished jurist, trying men for their lives and trying property rights running up into the millions, and received $2,000 a year for his service. You have governors in States, nine in number, that receive less than many employees in this bill are to receive. You are proposing to grant from $600 to $1,500 increases a year each. Are you going to do it? What is the power that is making you do it? What is causing you to do it? It is against your program. It is against your policy. It is against your preelection promises. What is causing you to do it? Is it because of the threats that have been put in the papers that even so great a man as our beloved friend, Congressman ESCH, has been put out of Congress because he refused to obey orders? Is that influencing any of you, my friends? Is that influencing you? I want you to answer to your people, because they are going to make you do it. What is causing you to grant all these increases? Is it necessity? Why, the Patent Office is not overcrowded just now. You have been taking the reports during the war years. During the war, when the mind of every human being in America that was loyal was working overtime to try to find means to bring about a successful culmination of war, there were lots of patent applications reaching the Patent Office. They were coming from every part of the country. Why, lawyers, doctors, and preachers, even, and blacksmiths, and farmers, and merchants, and clerks were thinking about patenting something to help the Government. They were sending applications here, and your constituents and mine were doing this. The Patent Office was crowded. But the war is over, and that stopped. We have gotten back to normal so far as patent applications are concerned. Is it not better to let this bill lie in the pigeonhole and do nothing about it? I am appealing to you as good, honest representatives of the Government, with good, common business sense and judgment. Do you not think you ought in this day of reconstruction let this bill stay in the pigeonhole at least until your new President comes in, and you can find out what his policy is going to be, until you can find out whether he is going to keep your preelection promises to the people as to economy and yet grant them a fair living wage?

I am in favor of granting a living wage to everyone who earns it. I am in favor of making the blue sky the limit on wages in this country, provided the amount received is earned and value received is given for it.

I want to see all paid according to their earning capacity. I can fill every department of that Patent Office inside of 10 days or 2 weeks with able, efficient constituents from my district who would be glad to have their positions at the present salaries paid.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. HUDSPETH. If I understand my colleague correctly, he stated the object of this bill was to increase the pay of the Patent Office officials?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; all the employees; all the way from $600 to $1,500 increases apiece.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I notice the salary of the Commissioner of Patents is cut from $6,000 to $5,000 in this bill. Is that correct?

Mr. BLANTON. In what bill?

Mr. HUDSPETH. The pending bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about the bill that passed the House. You have the bill as it passed the Senate, and it was the Senate that reduced the House proposal of $6,000 to $5,000. All my remarks have been concerning the bill as it passed the House, in which this House voted to give the Commissioner of Patents $6,000, which was a raise of $1,500 a year; and the object of sending this bill to conference is to try to impose upon the conferees the duty of holding out for the raises granted by the House. If that bill goes to conference, our conferees, I take it, will insist on obeying the instructions received from this House and insist on the bill as it passed the House, because that is the policy of all the conferees of this House, to carry out the will and instructions of the House. It is a question whether you are going to put this kind of legislation on just now, even if you should deem it advisable later. If so, what is the objection of extending the same increases to all the departments of the Government? Is not the scientist in the Department of Agriculture just as much entitled to a $1,500 raise as the examiner in the Patent Office? If you pay them increases running up to $1,500 a year, you should extend to the other employees of the Government the same kind of increase. Do you not think it is better to wait until these departments are reorganized? Do you not think it is better to wait until the budget commission gets to work, and until this special committee that we have just authorized by a vote of this House unanimously to-day gets to work? Do you not think it would be better to wait a while before we pass this legislation?

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. VENABLE. Assuming that what the gentleman says is true, what is the gentleman's concrete proposition? What does he propose to do about it?

Mr. BLANTON. I propose to let this bill die right where it is for the present session of Congress. Let us get our breath. Let our Government get its breath.

Mr. VENABLE. And refuse to send it to conference?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. Let us do everything else that is necessary to kill it. Let it die a natural death. Let us see whether the action of the majority party in this House agrees with the expressions they have made on this floor. If those expressions are sincere—and I have no reason to believe otherwise—they will let this bill die, and I say that action ought to meet with the approval of the steering committee of this House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, I would remind the House that this bill was very fully discussed on its merits when it passed the House by a large majority. The distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] at that time made the same objection that he is making now. I do not believe that anyone, at least anyone in the House who knows me, would feel that I hold any brief for union labor, nor is it necessary for me to defend the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN], the able chairman of the Committee on Patents. But I must say that I think than any allegation to the effect that in forwarding this bill he is observing his oath as a union man is something which should not have been said upon this floor, because I believe that in forwarding this bill he is carrying out his oath to the United States of America. [Applause.]

I would remind the House of what was brought out when the bill was discussed on its merits, namely, that the Patent Office is an office of experts. I would remind them that the force in the Patent Office under any conditions has never been adequately paid. I would remind them that the patentees of this country, many of them and most of them poor men, have paid fees which have more than repaid the expenses of the Patent Office and returned a large surplus to the Treasury. I would remind them that the number of employees in the Patent Office has never been adequate to keep up with the current business, so that it has always been months behind, and in some important divisions of the office more than a year behind, which results in great damage, sometimes irreparable damage, to the patentees and applicants before the Patent Office.

Any Member of the House who attended the meeting of the Committee on Rules, by whose instrumentality this bill was first brought before the House, would have found there representatives of all the greatest industrial interests in this country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, large interests, indicating the importance of this bill. That certainly was not an exclusive representation of the interest of labor unions. In fact, gentlemen, I do not want to use any harsh terms, but that allegation is simply absurd. All that those who advocate this bill wish is to get good service and efficient service in the Patent Office.

It was shown in the hearings that the examiners, who are men who have come in from the ranks and have learned the Patent Office and learned the workings of the Patent Office, are almost always hired when they go out by the great manufacturers and those whose business it is to deal with patents. In private employment their pay is several times the salary they are earning here. When the gentleman from Texas talks about the earning power of these men he will find that the good men in the Patent Office can always earn in private employment more than they can earn in the Patent Office.

Now, it is very essential, in getting good patents, to have good men who know the state of the art, and who can learn the state of the art from the records, and who will award good patents, which will not need litigation to establish them.

Those are the reasons why this bill should be put through. The matter was fully argued on the merits, and it seems to me from my knowledge of the case that there are no two sides to it. The salaries contained in the House bill are not extravagant. They are only necessary to get good men in the Patent Office. The Senate bill has cut down those salaries to a great extent, and the conferees will take into account both the bills and the present conditions of the Patent Office, and I am sure that any man who wants a good Patent Office and wants to secure a good service to the United States and the patentees of this country will support this rule. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS], a member of the Committee on Patents.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I had not intended to speak upon this resolution, but in view of some of the statements made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], as a member of the Committee on Patents I deem it proper that I should say something in addition to what was said by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT]. In the first place the Committee on Patents of the House held extensive hearings upon this bill, embodied in a record of over 300 pages. They went into the question thoroughly and conscientiously, and after doing so unanimously reported out this bill.

There was not a member of the committee opposed to it. Then after a full discussion of the bill in the House, as has already been stated by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT], it passed by an almost unanimous vote. As I recall there were only eight votes cast against the bill in the House at the time of its passage. Now it is simply proposed to send the bill to conference, and of course it will come out later for final action if the conferees agree.

The bill contains several important provisions besides those dealing with the increase of salaries and personnel. I am for economy, and I am never in favor of increasing governmental salaries as a charitable proposition or as a favor to the employees. I do not think it is justified except from the standpoint of the interests of the Government and of the people whom the Government represents, but I am fully convinced, as were the other members of the committee, that we have such a justification in this bill.

The pay of the employees of the Patent Office has been increased only 10 per cent in 72 years. In 1848 the pay of primary examiners was fixed at $2,500 per annum, which at that time was the pay received by Members of the House of Representatives. Considering that the requirements of these places were so exacting, and desiring to procure a high class of examiners, Congress fixed the pay of primary examiners in the Patent Office at the same sum which the Members themselves were receiving. Since that time, as I have stated, the pay of examiners has been increased only 10 per cent. The result is that there is such a turnover in the department that it is not doing the work that it should do, and that the country rightly expects it to do. The records show that at least 25 per cent of the employees of the Patent Office resign every year, and that in addition to the fact that for the past fiscal year the volume of business in the Patent Office increased 36 per cent over what it was the preceding year. The business of the office has been increasing all along at an enormous rate, during which time there has not only not been any increase in salaries, but practically no increase in the number of employees authorized.

The Patent Office occupies the peculiar position of perhaps being the only department of the Government which is not only self-sustaining but which annually pays a profit into the Public Treasury. Since the creation of the Patent Office it has put into the Public Treasury over $8,000,000 more than has been paid out for the Patent Office.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Can the gentleman inform me if with the reductions made by the Senate there is an increase in the salaries of Patent Office employees, or a decrease; and if so, how much?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Some of them were restored to the present salaries, and some of them were made to be slightly in excess of the present salaries; but, in that connection, I will say to the gentleman from Texas that the Senate amendment reduced the number of employees in the Patent Office about 15 per cent below the present personnel.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Under the bill as passed by the House what is the average increase in the pay of Patent Office employees?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I am not prepared to state the average increase, but the total increase for 1,048 employees is $511,000. That, however, is made up by an increase in the initial filing fee of $5, together with a provision for charging for making copies, and the additional fees that will come in by reason of this will more than offset the increase in salaries provided for in the bill.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Then there is nothing taken out of the Treasury by this bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. No. This bill will not only not result in any additional burden on the Treasury, but the Patent Office will still, as heretofore, pay more into the Public Treasury than it takes out. And with regard to these additional fees, which take care of the increased cost, I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the very people who pay these fees are willing to pay the increase and are urging the passage of this bill. For instance, the National Association of Manufacturers, consisting of more than 5,000 manufacturers; the Chemical Society, with 13,000 members; the Engineering Council, with 45,000 members, together with the National Council of Research, the organizations which will have more to do with the Patent Office and which are more interested than anybody else, are urging the passage of this bill and insisting that it be passed as speedily as possible and in the form in which it originally passed the House.

I could quote from these various interests and authorities and give in detail many very cogent reasons why this relief should be given, and given at once, but deem it unnecessary to do so.

However, last night I picked up the Scientific American, one of the highest-class scientific magazines in this country, and it contained a lengthy article on the needs of the Patent Office; and the editor of the Scientific American supplemented this article by an editorial strongly urging the passage of this bill in the original form as it passed the House, and saying that it did not provide for sufficient increases of salaries and employees. Furthermore, in a display note the editor succinctly deals with the subject in the following manner:

The question has been asked very often of late years, "What is the matter with the Patent Office?" Almost as many different answers have been given as distinct answers. Certainly the office is ridiculously undermanned and underpaid; certainly it finds it more than difficult to get Congress to pay serious attention to its plaints. Mr. Wyman, we think, puts his finger on the root of the trouble when he points out that where other departments spend and are expected to spend many millions against receipts that are practically negligible, the Patent Office is always looked to for a profit. The Government pays for every conceivable kind of research and investigation and propaganda; but patents, on which our whole industrial system is founded, pay for themselves and pay a profit. We have not space here to discuss this point more fully; we return to it on our editorial page.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACK. If this resolution is agreed to, will it be in order to move to agree to the Senate amendments?

The SPEAKER. No; this disagrees to the Senate amendments and sends the bill to conference.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this bill was considered at considerable length, debated, and amended at the last session of the House. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] then presented his views to the House at some length and embodied his views in a motion to recommit the bill and demanded and received a roll call on his motion. After full consideration of the subject, with a somewhat large attendance of the House at that time, the gentleman from Texas got 6 votes in favor of his proposition as against nearly 300 opposed to it. I do not believe that the judgment of the House has changed much since that time.

What does this propose to do? The bill which is now sought to be sent to conference proposes to somewhat increase the number of employees in the Patent Office, the pay of some of the employees, and to raise the additional money by imposing additional costs and expenses upon those who deal with the Patent Office. It was the general desire of patent attorneys and applicants for patents throughout the country that there should be better service in the Patent Office. They then suggested that they would be glad to pay more for the service rendered to them and have that money expended in higher salaries and for more employees in the Patent Office.

Congress, or this body at least, took them at their word and embodied these suggestions in the bill which the House passed, and which is now sought to be sent to conference. It is not like taking money out of the Public Treasury. Here are men who want service and who want sufficient employees to render them efficient service. They want men of sufficient experience, and they want to pay them enough to keep them in the service of the Government, where they will be worth something to them. They do not want men to go there to learn and then take other positions outside.

Now, this proposition to-day is to send this bill to conference. There ought to be no objection to that. It is customary in this House, where a matter has been gone over and threshed out in debate and amended at one stage of the proceedings, when it comes back that it shall go to conference and then the House can afterwards pass on the conference report and not keep interrupting at all the various stages of the bill. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the conferees be instructed to agree to Senate amendments 1 to 48, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the conferees be instructed to agree to Senate amendments 1 to 48, inclusive.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up the time of the House at this late hour in the day, but these Senate amendments from 1 to 48 relate to the salaries of the commissioner and the various employees in Patent Office. They reduce to some extent the schedule of salaries that was provided in the House bill, but not to an unreasonable extent, and that is why I favor them. It must be remembered that this bill was passed in the House several months ago and that since then the financial conditions in the United States have undergone a very substantial change. We do not get a daily paper, Mr. Speaker, any day of the week but what we read of reductions of wages that are being put into effect throughout the United States. I regret that the situation is that way, but nevertheless it is true, and we should not overlook these general economic conditions when we come to fix Government salaries.

We are also reminded every day of figures that show that commodity prices are constantly on the decline and that the cost of living has been reduced very substantially during the last several months.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. In a moment. This decrease in the cost of living in itself amount to an increase in salary. If there has been, for instance, a reduction of 20 per cent in the cost of living from the high level of the war, then that to the average salaried man amounts to an increase of 20 per cent of his salary, because the dollar purchases 20 per cent more. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. There are a number of reductions in the number of employees in the amendments to which the gentleman refers. Does the gentleman believe that these reports in the newspapers about a change in working conditions and wages would have any effect upon the number of employees in the Patent Office?

Mr. BLACK. Not necessarily so, but still the industrial conditions which prevail, I dare say, will affect the business of the Patent Office as well as the Post Office Department and practically all other departments of the Government. We are now asserting in speeches and extension of remarks and in every other method that we can think about, our devotion to economy, and the only way that we will ever get on that highway will be to begin to travel on it. In my judgment the amendments of the Senate are reasonable and will give these patent employees a reasonable compensation. For that reason I hope that my motion to instruct the conferees to agree to these Senate amendments will be agreed to. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to instruct the conferees.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the motion to instruct the conferees.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to instruct the conferees.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLACK) there were—ayes 17, noes 47.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays, and pending that I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is evident that there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to instruct the conferees.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 54, nays 213, not voting 164, as follows:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 15, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou hast given us but little time. Thou dost require great things at our hands. A mighty task is before us. Tremendous responsibilities weight us down. Who are sufficient for these things? In the midst of life are changes and uncertainties. We look to Thee, O God, God of our fathers, who has presided over councils of state. We pray Thy blessing upon us that we may fill up the measure of our time with the largest measure of service to our fellow men and to the glory of Thy Name. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

TRAVEL EXPENDITURES OF AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement showing travel of officials and employees of the department on official business during the fiscal year 1920, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXPENDITURES UNDER FEDERAL AID ROAD ACT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement showing expenditures under the Federal aid road act during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 191) to create a joint committee on the reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 407) authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1920, on the 20th day of said month, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11984) entitled "An act to increase the force and salaries in the Patent Office, and for other purposes," and agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee, Mr. NOLAN, and Mr. LAMPERT managers at the conference on the part of the House.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—COTTON FACTORS.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I rise to make a brief explanation.

During the debate on the 13th instant the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] made a statement in regard to the practices of cotton factors and the practices of the Federal Reserve Board in relation thereto. I stated to the Senator that I thought he was mistaken in so far as the New Orleans branch of the Federal Reserve Board was concerned. I find that I was mistaken and that the Senator from Tennessee was entirely correct in his statement of the case. I wish to make this correction.

PETITIONS.

Mr. MYERS presented a petition of the Orchard Homes Woman's Club, of Missoula, Mont., praying for the enactment of legislation for the protection of maternity and infancy, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 3574, United Mine Workers of America, of Klein, Mont., in favor of amnesty for all political prisoners, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I present a telegram from a convention of farmers lately assembled in my State, and I ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the telegram.

The telegram was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

CANDO, N. DAK., December 14, 1920.

Senator MCCUMBER,
Washington, D. C.:

Over 300 farmers of this vicinity have been in convention here considering matter of prices of their produce. Farmers are anxiously watching Congress and looking to Congress as their last hope for relief against inevitable bankruptcy. Official and speculative deflaters, in order to create fear among farmers and force them to unload and reduce prices of their products without regard to cost of production or law of supply and demand, are using all available propaganda, much of which is without foundation in fact. The result will be a ruination of the agricultural industry of the United States if Congress does not promptly and efficiently act in the premises. Resurrect the War Finance Corporation to the end that credits may be extended to foreign countries desiring to purchase our surplus that can furnish satisfactory security. Place an embargo on the importation into the United States of all products which our farmers produce in sufficient quantity to supply the needs of our people, and in that manner not only protect our market but also insure to the American producer the benefit of the credit thus extended. Make the act of selling futures covering articles produced by the farmers of the United States a criminal offense on the part of the seller and his agent, if the seller does not at the time of the sale, in good faith, own and have in the United States the actual article covered by the future sold, and in that manner shut out of our markets the wind injected therein by the speculative deflater, whether he be citizen or foreigner. The American farmer is the best producer and consumer in the world. The agricultural industry is the backbone of our country. The American wheat grower was not dealt fairly with during the war, but he accepted the bitter given him because of his patriotic zeal for victory. After victory and because of the distress of the world, and believing that his Government would at least leave him in no worse position that it placed him during the war, he continued to produce every possible pound of foodstuff at continually increasing cost of production. The American farmer now believes that he is within his rights in demanding and of right is entitled to remedial legislation protecting his market.

J. J. KEHOE,
W. F. BACON,
D. F. MACLAUGHLIN,
Committee.

Mr. POINDEXTER presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from bankers in the city of Toppenish, Wash., praying for the enactment of legislation placing an embargo on wool, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from bankers in the city of Yakima, Wash., praying for the enactment of legislation placing an embargo on wool and mutton, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of sundry American Indians praying for the enactment of legislation which will grant and guarantee to them the rights and privileges of citizenship, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 4649) to repeal section 7 of the act of October 6, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Appropriations.

A bill (S. 4650) to grant certain lands to the city of Miles City, State of Montana, for use by said city for park, recreation, community, and camping purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 4651) granting a pension to Carriston W. Looper; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 4652) granting a pension to Ida L. Fay (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 4653) for the relief of E. W. McComas; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 4654) granting a pension to Adella M. Porter; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 4655) granting an increase of pension to James B. Waters; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 4656) for the relief of Hubert J. Stanley, alias John H. Lash (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 226) authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to the dead of the First Division, American Expeditionary Forces, in the World War; to the Committee on the Library.

THE COLOMBIAN TREATY.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Concurrent or other resolutions are in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the inquiry I am about to make does not come under the head of "concurrent and other resolutions," but I should like to ask some member of the Foreign Relations Committee—I do not see the chairman of that committee present—whether there is any disposition to bring to the Senate for action the pending treaty between Colombia and the United States? It does seem to me that this session of Congress should not adjourn until that treaty has been disposed of. It would be an act of justice to a friendly nation that we should dispose of that treaty.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations present, and I therefore hope the Senator from Utah will defer the question, or at least the request for an answer to his question, until the chairman of that committee is in the Chamber.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I suppose that the Senator from Utah really means to say that we ought not to adjourn this session of Congress until that treaty shall have been ratified?

Mr. KING. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator from Utah does not mean that. The Senator from Utah knows that this session shall adjourn—and I think the Senator from Washington, having read the Constitution, knows that fact—on the 4th of March, and I feel that the ratification of that treaty is a matter of unfinished business that ought to be disposed of before we adjourn.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator from Utah mean to say that it would be a friendly act to the State of Colombia to refuse to ratify the treaty?

Mr. KING. Responding to my friend from Washington, I will answer that question in the negative. I think that we ought to ratify the treaty.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is what I assumed, and I was just going to suggest to the Senator from Utah that it is not likely that the treaty will be ratified at this session of Congress.

Mr. KING. I can not believe that the Senate of the United States will refuse to do justice to a friendly nation and will refuse to ratify the treaty.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, is the chairman of a subcommittee having the Colombian treaty in charge. I had a consultation with him a few mornings ago with a view of ascertaining whether the treaty would be considered at this session of Congress. He is very anxious to submit it and have it ratified, as I understand the Senator from Utah is; but there is some serious objection to the consideration of the treaty at all; and I need not remind my friend from Utah that such objections will, if persisted in, prevent the ratification of the treaty at this short session.

Some time ago I undertook to investigate the facts surrounding the acquisition of the Panama Canal, and, upon the assumption that that treaty would soon be presented for consideration, I prepared an address upon it. It is my intention, whether the treaty is before the Senate for consideration at this session or not, to incorporate that address in the RECORD before adjournment; but from what I know about the situation, I think my friend from Utah will have to postpone his vote for the ratification of the treaty until the new Congress comes in, when the treaty may or may not be ratified.

ASSOCIATION OF PRODUCERS OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.). Morning business is closed.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 611, being House bill 13931, the bill which was before the Senate on yesterday.

Mr. CALDER. I ask the Senator from Minnesota if he will yield to me to ask for the consideration of a resolution which comes over from yesterday? I am sure it will not take more than a minute or two for its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no resolution coming over from yesterday.

Mr. CALDER. I know that is technically true, but I simply ask the Senator from Minnesota if he will yield to me to present a motion in reference to the resolution. I am sure that action on my resolution will not take more than a moment or two.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator from New York yield to me? I wish to make merely a few remarks on the bill the consideration of which is proposed by my colleague, as I must return to a committee which is in session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13931) to authorize association of producers of agricultural products.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I have not time to discuss the Sherman antitrust law fully as it may apply to the pending bill, but I wish to submit a few observations upon the measure as I must, in a few moments, return to a committee which is taking testimony on the cable situation. However, before mentioning the legal problems involved, let me suggest for a moment what the object of the pending bill is. I might say that many of the States—I have not time to go into detail—New York among others, have within the last year or two, in encouraging such farmers organizations as are here proposed, passed laws permitting them to exist. Such bills are pending before the legislatures of many States and will undoubtedly be passed. There is an aspect of interstate commerce involved, of course, for the States can not authorize shipments of products to market from one State to another. All that is asked in the pending measure is that Congress shall legalize such selling agencies, reserving in the Department of Commerce and Labor or the Department of Agriculture, whichever the Senate may decide, the right to supervise them and prevent their abuse so as to unduly increase prices.

I think it will be admitted that one of the gravest economic questions which exists to-day so far as the farmers of the country are concerned is that of marketing. Aside from those products which may be sold any day upon an exchange, the farmers of the country have been producing yearly hundreds of millions of dollars worth of products which must be sold, transported, and delivered to consumers on which the price the consumer pays is inordinately high as compared with what the farmer receives.

I wish I had the time to illustrate some of the discrepancies. For instance, statistics show that in the State of New York the farmer receives about 6 cents a quart for his milk, whereas the consumer pays 14 cents. Similar conditions exist in the West. Take the potato crop and many other crops, including the apple crop. This year they are rotting on the ground, because of no coordinated scientific system of marketing enabling the consumer to buy those products. There is to-day no question that is occupying the attention of local State officials and of legitimate, conservative farming organizations as much as the question of cooperative marketing.

Look at the condition in California. I can remember only a few years ago when the fruit producers of California were bankrupt all the time. They had no facilities for marketing their products and no agents to furnish the products to the country as the country required them. There were no storage facilities and no coordination, but each man proceeded to dump his stuff upon the railroads. Consequently the markets were glutted; people could not buy all the products when they were glutted, and at other seasons of the year they had to pay enormous prices and many times could not get fruit. Now the producers have real scientific, businesslike organizations. They have built their own warehouses for the handling of their fruit; they have their own agents; they guarantee deliveries of good oranges and other fruit so that any man can buy from one of those farmers' organizations and know that the product will be good. The same thing to some extent applies to apples. The result has been that the public has paid less according to the standard prices of the country, and the producer has received more. It will be found to-day that the difference between what the fruit producer receives and what the consumer pays is less than applies in the case of most other products. It represents a small, fair profit over and above the actual handling cost. Why? Because they have their skilled agents.

Mr. President, I can not stop to go into this matter in detail, but the farm bureau organization, which is one of the greatest organizations in this country, the grange, and many other organizations have taken up the subject and are doing a great deal along that line—for instance, in the sale of butter, as has been done in my State, as my colleague [Mr. NELSON] explained yesterday. They need to do it in the case of potatoes and many other products. Every autumn in my State potatoes are dumped on the market; there are not sufficient facilities for handling them, and there is no organized selling system, and as a consequence the farmer ordinarily makes no profit on his production.

One thing is sure, that the farmers of this country have got to be fairly prosperous or the country will not be prosperous. Those in the cities can not go on making money unless their activities are based upon a fairly prosperous, independent agricultural industry.

There is no State in the Union in which this question was more discussed during the autumn than in Minnesota. We had a square issue, not between Democrats and Republicans but between the fairly conservative people, represented by the Republicans on the one side and on the other by the Nonpartisan League, representing state socialism and state ownership of all industries. I hold in my hand the platform of that party which made the square issue which was decided by the people of Minnesota after thorough discussion. The program of the Nonpartisan League embraced "public ownership and operation of railways, steamships, banking business, stockyards, packing plants, grain elevators, terminal markets, and all other public utilities, and the nationalization and development of basic natural resources, water power, and unused land, with the repatriation of large holdings." There you have it. It is a socialistic state ownership program, involving the means of distribution and natural resources.

I do not believe that the Government can go into such businesses and compete in the interest of the people with private enterprise. I believe that private enterprise must operate the industries of this country, that there must be the individual hope of gain and of betterment of condition, and the enterprise incident to the splendid American spirit in order to make them successful. But, Senators, we are going to have one or the other. Either the farmers are going to organize and have good and stable market conditions, which I believe they have the ability to establish, or we will have state socialism. We can take our choice.

Now, you know and I know that all the farmers of this country or all the small producers in any line of business can not combine and control the food products of this country. We know, furthermore, that the farmers of the community or of the State who are adjacent to a big market can organize, can procure better marketing facilities, warehouses, and agents, and can produce their products and put them in the hands of the consumer a great deal cheaper than it is being done now, and they will get the benefit of it, and we who are living in the cities will get the benefit of it.

The Republicans of Minnesota advocated and the State campaign was decided upon the principle of cooperation in marketing facilities among farmers, rather than State ownership of these facilities. I do not pretend at all that the Government can legislate prosperity to the farmer, the laboring man, the manufacturer, or anybody else, nor am I willing that the attempt shall be made. But the Government can permit, aid, and encourage the self-enterprise of the producer and the farmer to establish marketing conditions which will benefit him as well as the consumer, and we should not prevent that. I am not in favor of selecting one class of people in the country and legislating for their particular benefit, or exempting them from the general laws of the country; but if there is any one question that is vital to the production of this country and to the interest of both the consumer and the producer it is better marketing facilities in this country, and they must largely be procured through cooperation of the farmers themselves. They can do it, and in my opinion they have the intelligence to do it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator one question?

Mr. KELLOGG. One question; yes.

Mr. EDGE. Granting that all the Senator says as to the necessity for organization is true—and I believe it is—what is the reason, from the Senator's viewpoint, that this particular class of persons should have an immunity from prosecution not granted to any other class of citizens?

Mr. KELLOGG. For the same reason that we granted it to exporters, who are marketing men, and who necessarily come in competition with other marketing men—exactly the same reason; no other.

This bill is not the only bill that the Congress has passed. The Congress found it was necessary for the American manufacturer and producer to compete in the markets of the world; and, as I said on the floor of the Senate the other day, the Governments of Europe are buying through commissions. Even before the war, many of the large concerns of Europe as to many of our products were combining and buying through commissions, because they could beat down the American market as against a multitude of unorganized sellers. That appeared when we passed the bill permitting combinations in foreign trade. We authorized incorporations to act as central selling agencies for all producers. Why should we not authorize agreements or selling agencies for farmers, both domestic and foreign, provided we protect—as we did in that bill—the American people against monopoly?

All that this bill does is to provide that they may cooperate, either with or without capital stock—in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce, such products of their members; and such producers may organize and operate such associations and make the necessary contracts and agreements to effect that purpose, any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

But it is not left there. A limitation is placed upon how much this corporation shall earn—8 per cent, which, I am sure, in view of the profits made by many corporations, is entirely reasonable. There is no limitation placed upon what a foreign selling agency may make, or what other corporations may make. I think this is entirely reasonable.

The members are only allowed one vote each, in order that it may really be a cooperative institution. It appeared by the testimony that it was necessary to permit corporate organizations by reason of the large number of people interested, and the necessity to have some corporate organization to handle the business of the selling agencies; but, in order to protect the American people, it is provided that the Federal Trade Commission shall have full authority to decide that they are monopolistic, or unduly restrain trade, and to enjoin them if they do.

But it was said by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] that they may not know whether they have violated the law or not until they are haled into court. That is exactly the trouble. In other words, find an indictment first, and determine whether there is reasonable evidence of the man's guilt afterwards. That is the way they have been doing. These people have been hauled up and indicted in various States, some under State laws and some under Federal laws, and the legislatures of the States have promptly passed laws legalizing their activities. Now, I do not believe in the practice of indicting a man first and afterwards determining whether there is reasonable evidence of his guilt. It is a serious thing to indict an American citizen, and it is very rarely that there is a conviction under a statute of that kind, regulating business.

In order that we may protect the American people it is provided that if the restraint of trade or the lessening of competition is to such an extent that the price of the agricultural product is unduly enhanced by reason thereof the commission shall serve notice and may proceed in court to enjoin it and protect the American people. What the consumer is interested in, of course, is paying a fair price, and I do not believe that the doors should be thrown open for any class of the community to organize and combine to unduly elevate prices. There is ample opportunity for protection here if there exists any possibility that the farmers of this whole country could combine in one organization or in a dozen organizations which should conspire with each other to control the food supply of the country.

The farmers must have better marketing facilities, the consumer must buy his product cheaper, taking into consideration the cost of production, and the farmer must be prosperous, or 35 per cent of the people of this country will not produce sufficient food for the balance. We might as well make up our minds to that. There never was a nation on the face of the earth where agriculture decayed and the nation remained prosperous and great.

I do not claim that the farmers have not made profits in the past. They are not making them to-day, however, and they are in an appalling condition. What they want to do is to organize selling agencies and get all the advantage they can from coordination in selling agencies, which is for the benefit of the farmer as well as the consumer.

There is a good deal in what the Senator from North Carolina said, that we shall not be able to run the business of this country with indictments or lawsuits. I have had five or six years of experience along that line, and I believe that a bill that I introduced, or the principle of it, will some day have to become a law, whereby there will be some supervision over the large corporations of this country which will restrain them and regulate them, rather than let them do as they please, and then seek indictments.

I am not in favor of permitting the unlimited organization of monopolies to throttle the American people, but I am in favor of permitting reasonable coordination and cooperation among the farmers in order that they may get a better market and lessen the cost of placing their products in the hands of the consumers of this country, which undoubtedly can be done. In the last year or two the best minds of the country have been concentrated and are now being concentrated upon this great problem, and I believe it is the greatest hope for the people of this country and for agriculture.

I do not think there is any great danger to the people in this bill. It is fairly guarded. I do not pretend that it does not make some changes in the Sherman Antitrust Act. I do not consider that a holy document that can not be touched when the business conditions of the country demand it. I am in favor of preserving its principles for the protection of the American people, but I am also in favor of modifying it, as we have done several times, and especially as we did in respect of foreign trade when it was necessary for the real benefit of the American people and the development of trade and markets. One of the changes is incorporated in this bill. It is required that it shall be shown that these restraints are monopolistic to such an extent that the price of agricultural products is unduly enhanced by reason thereof. Well, why should it not be shown? Why should not that appear? If it is not enhanced, if the price is lowered, there can not be any injury to the American people, unless it is used for monopolistic purposes to exclude somebody from the business.

With these safeguards in the bill, the farmer has what I think the business man is entitled to—a chance to work out this problem—and, then, if his organization is not legal, he has an opportunity before he is indicted to go before the proper tribunal and present the facts. It is very difficult for a business man or a farmer to tell whether or not he is violating the Sherman Antitrust Act in its criminal provisions; and it appears by the hearings on this bill that they are not willing to accept the risk of a technical violation of the criminal provisions of the Sherman Act in order to organize reasonable selling agencies, which, I believe, are protected by this bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have been a little confused during the last three or four days with reference to the object of some of the legislation which has been proposed. For instance, the other day when we were discussing the revival of the War Finance Corporation some of the advocates of the measure suggested, in the specific case of cotton, which I imagine applies to wheat and other things in the same way, that they were advising the farmers in their part of the country to refrain from growing cotton, and they were advocating a measure whereby the Government was to aid these farmers in holding their crops, even as against the proposition of a forced reduction in production. I was wondering if the Senator is of the opinion that it is wise for Congress at this time to do anything which will, through the aid of the Government, enable the farmers, the manufacturers, or any other class of our people to hold their products until such a time as they feel it is proper for them to sell.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I am not of the opinion that the Government should enter into a conspiracy with farmers or anybody else to hold products for the purpose of forcing the price up, and this bill does not authorize anything of the kind. It authorizes cooperation in collective processing, preparing for market, handling and marketing products in interstate and foreign commerce. That is the object of the bill, and that is what the bill is really for. It has been pending quite a while before Congress, and, as I said, many of the States have adopted the principles of the bill.

Congress did it some time ago, except that it left indefinite one clause. Congress provided that such horticultural or agricultural organizations might be organized, "not having capital stock or conducted for profit or to forbid or restrain individual members of such organizations from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof," and so forth; that is, they should not be forbidden from carrying it out, but the question of whether this was for reasonable profit was left in doubt in the Clayton Act, and the Government in some cases has claimed that if it was for reasonable profit it was illegal under that bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, if I may be permitted further, I am very heartily in favor of granting every legitimate right to farmers and every other class of our people to which they are entitled. I realize, however, that we have in the past indulged in what is known as class legislation. A few years ago the tendency of the country was to legislate in favor of the corporations of the country quite largely. We know now that that kind of legislation was absolutely wrong. For a number of years we have been attempting to eliminate labor organizations, for instance, from the general operation of the laws of the land. At one time we associated with that legislation the word "farmer," in order to enlarge the class, when all of us knew that the farmers were not asking for it, and that it was of doubtful benefit to them.

As I said to begin with, in asking the question, I have been confused at some of the legislation, especially as illuminated by the arguments which have been made in support of it during the last few days. I repeat that I am in favor of granting every legitimate right and offering every proper encouragement to agriculture; but when the Senator proposes to amend the Sherman antitrust law—because I take it this is a proposal to amend it so that it shall not apply to one class of our people—I am wondering where it will stop. How can we make legislation of that kind general?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I am compelled to leave in a moment, and I have not time to listen to any speeches put in the body of mine. I am perfectly willing that Senators should make speeches in their own time. I have not the time to answer any more questions.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me just to make a correction?

Mr. KELLOGG. I am going to make a correction first, and then the Senator can make his afterwards.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator prefers that I should make mine afterwards?

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator pleases.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. KELLOGG. This bill does not exclude entirely a class of people from the antitrust law. It does no more than was done in the foreign trade act. This bill has not been inspired by the present apparent necessity of maintaining prices of farm products, or anything of the kind. This bill was introduced during the last session, when prices were very high all over the country, and there was no demand for increased prices. It was inspired by a legitimate investigation and trial by farmers in organizing reasonable selling agencies and coordinating their efforts to place their products in the hands of the consumer. That is the real force behind this bill.

In the State of New York they indicted a lot of farmers under the State law, and the legislature took the subject up and inquired into it, and legalized the private organizations; and that has been done in many States.

As I said before, the experience of the conservative, fair-minded farm organizations of this country, like the grange, the farm bureau, and many other organizations which I could name, which are not socialistic, and are not asking anything from the Federal Government, shows that the greatest field for their ability and activity is the field of marketing their products, and certainly the prices we are paying in the cities, and have been paying, should demonstrate the same facts.

That was the real object of this bill. I am not going to advocate—I do not now—abrogating the Sherman Act and permitting people to organize to throttle the American people by holding their products and demanding any price they see fit. However impossible that would be for the farmers of the country, I would not permit it, and they do not ask it. If you will talk with the ablest of the farmers of this country who have discussed this subject you will find they are not state socialists; that they are in favor of the Sherman Act; that they want to develop a legitimate marketing business and make the farmer independent and thereby make the people independent.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask a question here? I want the Senator's opinion.

Mr. KELLOGG. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to call the Senator's attention to line 11 on the first page, the last clause, "any law to the contrary notwithstanding." I think that some have rather been misled by the idea that there is really a law that is contrary to the provision. It is a provision "that persons engaged in the production of agricultural products * * * may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock, in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce such products of their members; and such producers may organize and operate such associations" for this purpose. Is there any law to the contrary now? That is the real gist of the whole question.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will answer that question, and then I shall close.

I believe that under the law now reasonable cooperation in marketing and marketing facilities is permissible and that companies may be organized. There is some question as to just how far they may go, and there is a dispute between district attorneys and the representatives of these organizations as to whether they are legal or illegal, but I suppose nobody will know absolutely until there is a decision of the Supreme Court.

It is quite possible that the principles of the Northern Securities case, if carried out to a legitimate end, might prevent a selling agency from being organized which it is claimed has the power to raise prices, whether it exercises the power or not. This, in that event, would change the rule so that they might cooperate in marketing provided it is not found to be monopolistic and to the injury of the public in unduly enhancing prices.

I do not think that is an unreasonable regulation and I believe that in the main that is now authorized by the Sherman Act. I do not pretend to say that this does not make some changes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator let me ask him one question?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; I will answer one question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I merely wish to ask the Senator if, in his opinion, the powers of supervision which are given in the bill will not protect the consumers of this country against monopolistic prices on the part of agricultural cooperation and association just as effectually as the application of the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law would protect them?

Mr. KELLOGG. I think they will; and I may say, further, that if it should ever appear that the provisions of that act did not, Congress would not be slow to amend it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, this bill was intended to, and will, encourage organizations of farmers for the cooperative sale of farm products. It expressly declares that they "may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock, in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce."

It will prove, I trust, of great value both to those engaged in farming and to those who buy their products. Anyone who has studied or even casually observed the marketing system of the farmers of the country must know that as a rule it has been unscientific and unsatisfactory. Producing in many instances commodities that are to be consumed during a 12-month period, they throw those commodities upon the market as individual producers and they are absorbed by middle men buying collectively from the individual farmers and, after gathering them together, selling at largely increased prices to the consumer.

All the farmers are competing with each other in a disorganized system of sale, in a system of sale in many instances without accurate knowledge of the value of the ultimate market and without business organization or business preparation to place their products in the hands of the consumers or to obtain from the middle men a fair return for their money.

The bill practically invites them to organize. I hope they will organize in every county and every State in the Union. I hope they will organize in localities to cooperate in the marketing of their products.

Secretary of Agriculture Wilson at one time declared that an investigation of the subject led him to the conclusion that what the farmer sold for $1, as an average when it reached the consumer cost the consumer $2. This has been due to unscientific sale by the farming classes resulting from their utter lack of organization and cooperative selling. If the farmers will in their localities make organizations broad enough for extensive cooperative selling the whole tendency will be toward enabling them to carry their products from the middle men more nearly to the ultimate consumer. While the farmer as the result of organization will receive more compensation for his labor, the ultimate consumer may expect to receive his product as a rule at a smaller cost.

We have organized in the Department of Agriculture a Bureau of Markets, with a view to helping bring from the producer to the consumer the products of the producer. Most of the States have organized market bureaus. I hope to see this carried to the extent of an agent of the State market bureau in every county in my State and in other States, where the farmers will be aided in the adoption of better business methods for the cooperative disposition of their products and be aided in disposing of their products more directly and immediately to the ultimate consumer.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator at that point?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I remind the Senator that about 1915, I think it was, some of us favored an amendment to the appropriation bill coming from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, providing for an initial appropriation of $10,000 and authorizing the Post Office Department to make experiments and investigations into the question how best to promote direct dealing between producer and consumer. They did make that investigation. That was not only in the interest of the producer, but it was in the interest of the consumer, and that includes pretty nearly everybody. Some suggestion is made about this being class legislation. Everyone is interested in the subject, not only the farmer.

That appropriation led to experiments, and finally other appropriations were made in subsequent bills, and that work continued. The Post Office Department were putting into use trucks and other means for carrying products from the farm directly to the producer, and it was proving an immense success and a great advantage to the public generally, both the consumers and the producers. But in the last Post Office appropriation bill, in another branch of the legislative department of the Government, that item was stricken out entirely, so that we no longer have that means which was provided for the benefit of the public generally in the distribution of farm products.

I believe I am correct in stating that the item providing for the development of facilities for promoting direct dealings between the producer and the consumer was stricken out of the last Post Office Department appropriation bill, or was not put into it when the bill originated at the other end of the Capitol, and therefore that whole effort has fallen to the ground. It means all the greater necessity for this kind of legislation, in order that the producers may cooperate for their advantage and for the good of the public.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I say a word?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield with pleasure to the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is true that Congress made an appropriation of $300,000 several years ago for the purpose of experimenting in truck service between producer and consumer. That was continued for the second year. It was discontinued at last because the department itself refused to recommend it—in fact, suggested that it was not a success. We well remember that there was considerable of scandal connected with that proposition and the method in which it had been conducted. Congress has always been very anxious and very willing to contribute to the actual object which the Senator from Florida has suggested, namely, to do what it properly could do to reduce the spread between the cost and the selling price.

I mention this simply to show that the reason why it was not in the bill the last time was because it had proven very unsatisfactory to the department itself, as represented by the Postmaster General, and they refused to recommend it.

Mr. FLETCHER. That, I understand, covered the broad question of the use of trucks, but the fundamental idea, the principal thought, was that the department should develop a means whereby it could be done without loss to the Government for promoting direct dealing between producer and consumer. That has never been a failure. The use of the trucks brings up another question for other purposes, and of course I do not care to go into that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But the trucks referred to were operated for that express purpose and no other purpose; that is, that was the intention of the Congress. The Government has expended $600,000 on that very particular thing. I am not condemning it as a general proposition, I am simply recording the fact as it occurred with reference to that appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it has been suggested that as a result of the proposed cooperative selling by farmers there may be a holding of their products. I would be gratified, I believe it would be a public benefit, if that class of farm products which are harvested but once a year could be held by the farmers to be disposed of from time to time as the consumers need the products. I can not conceive that the prompt sale of a product which is harvested but once a year and which will be consumed during a 12-month period by the public—I can not conceive that the prompt sale by the farmer as soon as he harvests that product, passing his product not to the consumer but to the middleman, is in any way conducive to lower prices to the ultimate consumer. I believe the farmer would receive better compensation if he could market more gradually, and the consumer would buy at a better price.

Now, why the necessity for this legislation? It is said that the provision "any law to the contrary notwithstanding" takes these organizations out from under the Sherman antitrust law. I think it does. I want it to do so. I understand that the bill legalizes cooperative action by farm associations, that it will free them from indictment under the Sherman Antitrust Act, and will free them from attack of any kind except that provided for in the bill. I want to see that done.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it not a fact that if that is not done there is no necessity for the passage of the legislation?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know. I am not willing to commit myself upon that, but I do say that I think it does, and I want it to do so. That is one of the reasons why I want it passed.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not a doubt that the Senator from Georgia is correct. The object of the bill is just as he says it is, and I have not any doubt that the wording of the bill will be construed in that way.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it will. I would certainly construe it in that way myself. I think it wise to pass such legislation. I will give my reasons for that now.

The leading cases in the Supreme Court, to which reference has been made, are the Standard Oil case, the American Sugar Refining case, and the Steel Corporation case. In each one of those cases there were dissenting opinions. In the first two Justice Harlan dissented. In the Steel case my recollecction is that three of the justices—Justice Day, Justice Pitney, and Justice Clarke—dissented, and two of the justices did not sit—Mr. Justice Brandeis and Mr. Justice McReynolds. So that the principles enunciated in that case are still in a measure the subject of further inquiry.

They declared in the first of those cases what was called the rule of reason, which was that a combination must be an unreasonable and undue restraint of trade in interstate commerce to sustain an indictment or to justify legal procedure.

Now, the farm population are in most instances scattered through the country——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to read, as it has not been read, I think, from what is known as the Clayton Act, showing that these corporations have been exempted from the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will come to that in a few moments. I do not think they have. I have that provision here before me, and I will come to that in connection with my discussion, if the Senator will allow me.

The farmers, as a rule, are scattered through the country, and they are easily deterred and discouraged about making cooperative business organizations. Instead of being discouraged, I think they should be encouraged.

The Senator from North Carolina suggests that in the Clayton Act we have taken care of this subject.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I did not say that. I am in favor of the bill, but it is insisted here that we propose now to exempt them from the Sherman antitrust law, when we have already tried to exempt them, whether we have done it or not, in section 6 of the Clayton Act.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We have in a measure exempted them under section 6 of the Clayton Act, but I will call attention to why the pending bill goes substantially further than the Clayton Act did.

The Clayton Act, in section 6, provides that—

Nothing contained in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations, instituted for the purposes of mutual help, and not having capital stock or conducted for profit—

It has been found necessary in western States to perfect such organizations by corporations and with capital stock. I believe that the first suggestion of this legislation came from the West, from organizations of that kind. I am not sure that the language I have quoted is broad enough even as to organizations other than corporations having capital stock. This bill proposes to make it so clear that there can be no doubt on the subject; this bill is intended to invite cooperative selling by farmers' organizations, and clearly shows that they can be interfered with only as the terms of the bill provide. I think that would, undoubtedly, be the effect of the language "any law to the contrary notwithstanding."

However, the bill then goes further. It provides specifically for the application of the "rule of reason" to these organizations. It provides that if, by their operations, they should unduly enhance prices they can be enjoined. They have, however, the advantage of knowing that they are not to be indicted, that their work will continue without interruption, unless, either by investigation on the part of the Department of Agriculture or the Federal Trade Commission, whichever is finally determined upon, the decision is rendered that their organization has gone to an extent where it unduly enhances prices. Then they may desist from that part of their work which is condemned and go on with the remainder; and they can only be legally stopped through the restraining order of a United States district court judge if they insist upon continuing their work.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will it interrupt the Senator from Georgia if I ask him a question?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to do so because I wish to get the construction which he places on this measure. On page 2 of the bill, beginning with line 6, is the following language:

Second. That the association does not pay dividends on stock or membership capital in excess of 8 per cent per annum.

Then, the first part of section 2 reads:

SEC. 2. That if the Federal Trade Commission shall have reason to believe that any such association restrains trade or lessens competition to such an extent that the price of any agricultural product is unduly enhanced by reason thereof, the commission shall serve upon such association a complaint stating its charge in that respect, to which complaint—

And so forth.

I believe in marketing organizations, provided that they can be organized in such a way as will be just both to the producer and the consumer. Evidently it was the purpose of the draftsman of this bill to limit the profits which might be derived from such associations to 8 per cent on their capital stock or to 8 per cent upon the value of their membership. However, is that going to reach the situation? Suppose that a dozen men who are engaged in the same enterprise were to form such an organization. Under the terms of the organization, if there were $100,000 of capital stock, the association would be limited to 8 per cent, or if the cost of membership was $1,000 per member then they would be limited to 8 per cent on twelve times $1,000. I think I properly construe that, do I not?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think so.

Mr. POMERENE. I assume, of course, that in practical operation it will be the purpose of the 12 men to sell to the association, and the association then will sell to the public; but what is there here in this language to prevent the 12 men from entering into some sort of an arrangement outside of their association whereby they will not sell to the association, to use an extreme case by way of illustration, for less than twice what would be regarded by all fair minds as a fair price for their products? Is there anything to prevent that?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In the first place, Mr. President, I desire to say that I do not anticipate any such plan of organization. I would regard the association managers as stupid if they allowed 12 men to select a class of commodities—take, for instance, wheat—and induce the association to pay those 12 men twice the market value of the wheat. What would they do with it afterwards? They would be in competition with the remainder of the wheat production of the country.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, with all due respect to the Senator, that is not answering my question. I am taking a purely hypothetical situation, and I am not concerned about the stupidity of the men who might do the thing; I am looking to the power. Have these men the power to form an organization, and on the business of the organization itself earn 8 per cent, and its membership boost the prices to any point which they may see fit? I care not whether it is a dozen men or a thousand men. I desire to ascertain what this means.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will answer the Senator that those men can not do what he suggests. It will be utterly impossible for them to do anything of the sort. Moreover, the bill further provides for investigation into their conduct by the Federal Trade Commission or by the Secretary of Agriculture, and they could be reached in that way.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia is just touching upon the question that I had in mind. Bear in mind, please, that the language of section 2 of the bill relates only to the investigation of the association; it does not go to the investigation of the acts of the members.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if 12 men joined together to act in that way that itself would constitute an association.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Georgia and to the Senator from Ohio that if some of the members of the association organized a side matter they would be afforded no protection under this act. The association is restricted in its profits to 8 per cent. If some other kind of a combination is organized outside of the association by some of its members they may possibly fall afoul of the Sherman Antitrust Act or other prohibitory acts.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One of two things would be true: They would either be an association under this act and subject to investigation by the Federal Trade Commission or they would be outside of the act and subject to indictment under the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. POMERENE. Now let us see. I am interested in understanding this matter. I want some relief if we can provide it, and I am going to try to provide relief if we can get it, but I do not propose to lend myself knowingly, if I can, to a measure which may be so construed as to make things worse than they are.

Let me illustrate. We have mentioned wheat. Let me give another illustration. Suppose, for the sake of the argument, that in the District of Columbia the dairymen organized an association of this kind. It is true that on its face the bill provides that such an association shall not earn more than 8 per cent, but there are ways of doing things and whipping the devil around the stump. The babies in Washington need milk.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator wishes to ask me a question, I will be glad to have him ask it.

Mr. POMERENE. I am getting to it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hope the Senator will get to it.

Mr. POMERENE. But I wish to lay a foundation for it.

Now, let us assume for the sake of the argument, that after this organization is formed their milk goes to the association. They can sell it at such a price as will net the association and its members 8 per cent on the capital invested or on the value of their membership, but suppose they say "We are not going to sell to individuals; we are going to sell to this association alone," and some of them, although it may be a mere minority, it may be one, says "I am not going to sell my milk to any outsider; I am not going to sell my milk to the association for less than $1 a quart."

Of course, everybody recognizes that is unreasonable; it is an extreme case that is not likely to happen; but it is possible to unduly boost prices. I want the dairymen not only to make a reasonable profit, but I want them to keep the milk within the reach of the babies, if they can do so. What is there in this bill which is going to prevent the dairymen from in some way or other—it may be in some way similar to the Gary dinners or something of that kind—boosting the price of milk so as to put it beyond reach.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is the Senator through?

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. When the Senator gets through I will be glad to answer him.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator is very indulgent, but I think we both want to get at the right solution of the problem. The amendment which I would suggest to relieve the situation would be to insert, in line 11, on page 2, after the word "association," the words "or its members," so that affairs of the members can be investigated as well as this entity called an association.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if that were done, it would broaden the entire bill to the members of the association. I am scarcely prepared to say at present that it would apply to them. I am scarcely prepared to say that the bill would cover the situation of members that undertook to combine outside of the association and make two combinations; first, the members agreeing that they will only sell to the association at an exorbitant price, and then the association to sell making only 8 per cent. If the bill did cover such a situation, then the members would themselves already be subject to investigation, and their primary organization could be suppressed under the bill by investigation on the part of the Federal Trade Commission. If, on the other hand, the bill does not apply to such an association of the members, they would all be subject to indictment under the Sherman antitrust act. So they are either under the bill or they are not under the bill. If they are under the bill, they are subject to the investigation of the Federal Trade Commission. If they are not under the bill, it has not affected them at all. I will add, however, that I do not personally see any objection to adding the language that the Senator from Ohio suggests.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator whether he construes this language so that an association would not be guilty of enhancing the price unless they paid more than 8 per cent dividends? I do not so construe it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not; no.

Mr. LENROOT. They might be guilty of enhancing prices, although they might not make a cent of profit or pay a penny of dividends.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think so. I think the 8 per cent provision was put in simply to discourage any effort by an association, or by those who put their money into the association, to make money for themselves. The real work of the association is not to make money for its stockholders. The contribution of the money by stockholders is to facilitate sales for members who may not be stockholders at all; and I think that is simply a deterring provision, to prevent those who put in the money from taking advantage of those who did not put in the money, where the corporation acts for a large number of members in helping to dispose of their goods.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think there is a misapprehension concerning the significance of that provision to which reference is made, referring to dividends at the rate of 8 per cent. The impression seems to prevail, I gather from the discussion here, that this is for the purpose of limiting the prices which may be charged for the products sold by the association. That is not the purpose of it at all. The matter of the prices that may be charged does not come in here. That provision is incorporated by reason of a practice observed in the organization of these associations. The farmers sometimes find it exceedingly difficult ot get the proportionate subscription of money to put the plant in operation. It requires more or less capital to conduct a selling agency. Some of them, therefore, contribute their capital, and they have thus a capital stock. The plan of all these associations is to pool all their products, and to divide ratably among the members the total avails of the operations, whatever they may amount to.

For instance, there are a hundred members, and each contributes exactly the same amount. The avails, whatever they are, the profits of the business, are divided proportionately. If one contributes 50 per cent, he gets 50 per cent of the profits, whatever they are; if one contributes only 5 per cent, he gets 5 per cent of the profits, and so on down the line. But it is found necessary to get in capital, and the provision is that those who contribute the capital shall get only 8 per cent on their capital. Then, after that 8 per cent on the capital is paid, the remainder of the avails, of the profits, whatever they are, is divided ratably among the members. It is not intended by any means—that ought to be understood perfectly—that these corporations shall not make more money than 8 per cent upon their capital stock involved, and that they must graduate their prices so as not to produce more than that return.

The matter is illustrated, for instance, by the raisin growers' association in the State of California. Here are a lot of people engaged in the business of growing raisins. The organization of this association and the establishment of agencies throughout the United States, as they have them, with bonded agents and with warehouses and all that kind of thing, calls for the investment of capital. Some of the members of the association are rich enough to take some capital stock. Others are not rich enough to do that. So those who are rich enough put in money in order to proyide the necessary capital for the operation, and on that money capital thus contributed they get 8 per cent annually, and the rest of the profits of the business are divided ratably among the members; and it is such an organization as that that is contemplated here.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And the 8 per cent limitation is intended as a protection to the membership who are not capital owners against the membership which may be large capital owners.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; the Senator is correct about that. Now, under section 6 of the Clayton Act an association can be protected only when it has a membership without capital stock; and it was intended to extend this to associations that have capital stock, but that did not pay more than 8 per cent on that capital stock, the remainder of the avails to be divided exactly as the avails are divided among the associations organized under section 6 of the Clayton Act.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I shall not take more time. I hope we can reach a vote. I really did not intend to take so much time; but Senators have asked questions, and this has led to discussion and consumed time.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I think it ought to be frankly acknowledged by every Senator that this bill does repeal the terms of the Sherman Antitrust Act so far as the associations named in the bill are concerned. That is the object of it, and unless that is done I can see no purpose in the bill. I believe it ought to be done.

We have heard much during this debate concerning the alleged clarification of the Sherman antitrust law; that the "rule of reason" now prevails; and it was stated in debate yesterday that the provisions of this bill with regard to unduly enhancing prices are practically analogous to the construction of the Sherman antitrust law as it now is interpreted by the Supreme Court of the United States.

I can not agree with that. It seems to me that the so-called "rule of reason" of the Sherman antitrust law has made of that law a piece of legislation that no one understands, and that no one can tell whether he is violating it or not until a court passes upon the individual and particular case.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And the Supreme Court judges themselves differ about it.

Mr. LENROOT. Exactly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In their latest decision they stood three to four, I believe.

Mr. LENROOT. The so-called "rule of reason" of the Sherman antitrust law is defined to be that the Sherman antitrust law prohibits an unreasonable or undue restraint of trade. What is an unreasonable or undue restraint of trade no living man can tell, except as the courts may apply this so-called "rule of reason" to the particular facts in a particular case.

As to whether or not these associations should be exempted from the Sherman antitrust law, we hear it said that this is conferring a special privilege upon one class of the American people, and that there ought not to be any such discrimination. What was the original purpose of the Sherman antitrust law, Mr. President? What is the object of the Sherman antitrust law? The object of the Sherman antitrust law is to cure an evil, and where an evil does not exist the Sherman antitrust law ought not to apply. This Congress has observed that rule in regard to the Edge bill. It is exactly the same principle. Why, some of the same Senators who urged that exemption in the Edge law believe—and if they think that these farmers' organizations are injurious, they are correct in saying so—that this ought not to be conferred upon farmers; but it is a privilege of exemption in one case just exactly as much as it is in the other.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. Does not the Senator see a distinct difference between an exemption that provides entirely for business beyond the seas, in competition with business men of other countries, and an exemption which clearly provides for business within the boundaries of the United States?

Mr. LENROOT. Not in the exemption. There may be a distinction as to the reason for the exemption. The Senator from New Jersey and I may disagree. I may believe, as I do believe, that farmers' organizations should be exempted from the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law just as fully as combinations of exporters, because they are both in the public interest.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, does not one deal entirely with the exercise of that privilege in dealing with purchasers in other countries of the world, while the exemption for the farmers here is, as I understand, for the purpose of dealing in farm products with the people of our country in our own markets?

Mr. LENROOT. That, again, only goes to the reason for the exemption and not the exemption itself. The Senator urges the exemption in his case. Why? Because he took the position that it would be beneficial to have the Sherman antitrust law exempt that class of business; that is all.

Mr. EDGE. Across the sea.

Mr. LENROOT. Across the sea. It does not make any difference where it is; if it is beneficial to the public that any class of business men or producers should be exempted from the antitrust law, they should be exempted.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I might suggest to the Senator from New Jersey that he admitted by the introduction of his bill that the class of people whom it relieved were, prior to the enactment of that bill, subject to the terms of the antitrust law.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly; and unquestionably they would be.

Mr. POINDEXTER. He admitted that they were one of the classes covered by the act, and he introduced the bill for the purpose of relieving them from the effects of the act.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I must differ with the Senator from Washington. The principle of exemption for American producers, either farmers or manufacturers or what not, when their activities are beyond the sea, was established, if I am not mistaken, by the passage years ago of the act known as the Webb-Pomerene Act; and the so-called Edge Act simply followed up that policy, already established, in order that their activities abroad could be financed.

Mr. LENROOT. However that may be, Mr. President, there is only one reason—there could be no other reason—for the exemption of combinations of exporters. That reason was that that combination would not be harmful to the public; and if, upon the other hand, a combination of farmers is not harmful to the public, there is exactly the same reason for the exemption of farmers' associations as there is for the exemption of combinations of business men in the export business.

Mr. EDGE. I agree absolutely with the Senator, if their activities, as in the other case, are entirely in disposing of their goods abroad.

Mr. LENROOT. The question is not whether they are disposing of their goods abroad. The question is, Is the combination harmful or helpful to the people of the United States? That is the test and must be the test.

Of course, if the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] believes that farmers' organizations, doing the things it is proposed that they be permitted to do under this bill, are harmful, then of course the Senator is correct in saying they should not be exempted from the provisions of the Sherman law. But the Senator is incorrect in saying that we must have a law of general application, and that it shall apply to all alike, because it does not now apply to all alike, and combinations under the bill which bears his name are now exempted from the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. EDGE. Not doing business in America.

Mr. LENROOT. That has nothing to do with the question. They are exempted from the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law in so far as certain business is concerned, just as it is proposed as to these farmers' organizations.

Then, again, Mr. President, I think we should all bear in mind that the Sherman law as now interpreted does not now apply equally to all. For instance, we will take the United States Steel Corporation, which has been given a clean bill of health by the Supreme Court as not being in violation of the Sherman antitrust law. Does anyone believe if the 10,000 or more stockholders of the United States Steel Corporation had done the things through association and combination the United States Steel Corporation as a single entity did that that association or combination would not have been declared in violation of the Sherman antitrust law by the Supreme Court? I think every lawyer will admit, must admit, that if those same things had been done by a large combination of individuals the Supreme Court would have held that to have been in violation of the Sherman antitrust law.

Industry can form great corporations, like the United States Steel Corporation, and various other kinds of corporations. Stockholders of competing businesses may join in one great corporation, and they may transact business and be exempt by reason of their corporate capacity, entering into one single entity, where the Sherman antitrust law will not apply.

It is not possible, it is not practicable, for the farmers to do likewise. Farmers can not do business by forming large corporations as industry can. And ought not farmers be permitted through association to do the same things at least that stockholders are permitted to do through the means of corporate organization? So that that is a very compelling reason, it seems to me, why they should be treated differently.

As to the Sherman antitrust law as interpreted by the Supreme Court, with the "rule of reason" that we now have, we appear to have come to a state where there is no possibility apparently of curing the evils that the Sherman antitrust law was designed to cure. The Standard Oil Co. controls the price of oil to-day perhaps more effectually than it ever did. What evil that the Sherman antitrust law was designed to cure has been cured through the administration or enforcement of that law? Whether it can be done or not I am not prepared to venture an opinion now, but we seem to have reached a stage where the administrative part of this Government has given up the idea of reaching the great trusts and combinations which are really injurious to the public and are devoting their time to prosecuting associations of farmers and others where they believe they can secure a conviction through technicality.

Reference has been made a number of times to the indictment and prosecution of certain fruit growers in the State of California. I was in California last fall when those indictments were handed down. Those prosecutions are being conducted to-day. I venture the opinion that in so far as reasonable prices to the public are concerned there will be more relief to the public from undue prices under the provisions of this bill than any relief that has ever been had under the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law.

Now, with reference to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. Did I understand him correctly to say that he would provide that not only the association or combination shall be held to be guilty of an unlawful practice if they enhance the price unduly, but that any individual member of a farmers' association who may exact or receive what the Federal Trade Commission may believe to be an unduly enhanced price shall also be guilty?

I do not believe that the Senator from Ohio would desire to have a law apply to a farmer, a producer of agricultural products, that he would not apply to a manufacturer, a business man, or any other class.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator misapprehended the purpose that I had in mind. Maybe I did not make myself clear, but my purpose was to provide that if the Federal Trade Commission was to take jurisdiction with a purpose of investigating and determining what they would do, they should have the right to investigate the individual member as well, in his capacity as a member of the association.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not question that; but if I understood the Senator correctly, he would give to the Federal Trade Commission the same power of control over the price exacted by an individual member for his product that he would over the association. If I am incorrect in that, I would be glad to be informed.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the principle of the Senator from Ohio would make the members of a corporation who had stock in one of these associations personally liable, like members of a partnership, and it would in that respect be utterly destructive of all corporation law. One of the objects of creating corporations is to so provide that individual stockholders may not be personally liable, except in proportion to the amount of stock they hold or in cases of double liability. In the case of a partnership, however, each partner is liable for all the actions of the firm, and this would be a discrimination; this would put the farmers in a different position from the stockholders or members of any other corporation in the country.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, so far as investigating the activities of the members of the associations or corporations is concerned, certainly it seems to me that that authority is granted under the bill as it now stands. That would necessarily follow, that in determining the lawfulness of the action or activities of a corporation or the association itself, the individual activities of the members must be investigated. But the test will be—and I do not think it ought to go any further—is it due to the formation or the action of this association in any way, directly or indirectly, that prices are unduly enhanced? If so, they come within the ban of the bill and within the jurisdiction of the commission.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think I stated pretty clearly before that I was in favor of these marketing organizations. If it means simply a proper distribution of the products at reasonable rates I have not any objection to it.

But as I see this bill, in the way it is now framed, there is nothing in it to prevent a combination of men who are dealing in food products—and I refer to the dairymen—from getting the most exorbitant prices, and doing it at the expense of the babes of the country. If I am wrong about that, I would like to have it pointed out wherein I am wrong. I want to do the right thing, but it does seem to me that the Congress ought to give some consideration to the welfare of the poor, who must buy, and of the babes of the country, who ought to live and prosper and grow to manhood and womanhood.

If this bill is going to take care of that situation, then I am going to favor it; but if it is not going to take care of that situation, I scarcely know what ought to be done. I realize the influence that is back of this bill, and I want to help it if I can. In many respects it has my sympathy; but other people have my sympathy as well. I recognize the fact that that is a very impolitic thing to say; but I try to say what my sense of duty impels.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if I follow the argument of the Senator from Ohio, he seems to be of the opinion that if this association pays a certain price for an agricultural product to the members of that association, and then sells it at only a reasonable profit, the association is exempt from the provisions of this bill. I do not so understand it at all. As a matter of fact, the association might not make one penny of profit, but if, through means of this association, the producers receive two or three times what their product is worth, the provisions of this bill as to an enhanced price immediately apply.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, that is just one of the things that I want to be sure of. I do not believe the present bill will do what the Senator from Wisconsin suggests it will do.

Mr. LENROOT. Let us see.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator pardon me just a minute? I used the illustration a while ago of the dairymen. Suppose the dairymen simply use their association as a sort of a shield by which to protect them in some sort of an arrangement—it may be expressed, it may be implied, it may be one of those things that happens whereby they may hoard, or they may do something whereby they get a price which all fair-minded men would grant was an exorbitant price, an unconscionable price, and the consumers of milk are made to suffer by reason of it. Is it the judgment of the Senator from Wisconsin that this bill meets that situation and will prevent it?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly. Mr. President, what would be the test in the case the Senator suggests? We will say an association is a selling agency for all the milk producers in a certain locality, so that there is but one selling agency, and there is one price fixed. The question that would be at once asked and determined is, Is it because of the existence of this association that there is an undue and exorbitant price the consumer is compelled to pay for milk? Would he be compelled to pay it if this association did not exist?

THE MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY—LIVE-STOCK COMMISSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 3944) to create a Federal live-stock commission, to define its powers and duties, and to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live stock and live-stock products, and for other purposes.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, it is the purpose of those in charge of the bill to accommodate the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] by laying it aside temporarily, but we want to have a unanimous-consent agreement entered into if it can be done. If it does not break too much into the discussion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], I should like to present a request for unanimous consent that we may vote on the bill now before the Senate, known as the packers bill, on Monday, January 24 next.

I will state the reason for putting the time so far ahead at present. It would undoubtedly be reached for a vote before that time, but the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], who is very much opposed to the legislation, is sick and can not be here until after the holidays. We want to take no advantage of the Senator from Illinois, but want to give him ample time. I have consulted with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and various Members of the Senate, and there seems to be no objection to the proposed agreement. It will require a roll call, I assume, and if there is any objection to it it can be made now.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I understand the so-called packers bill is brought up now for the purpose of disposing of the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, and after that is disposed of the bill which we have been debating this morning will be again placed before the Senate.

Mr. KENYON. We will lay the packers bill aside temporarily as soon as the unanimous consent is secured.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am not in the habit of trying to interfere with the consideration of bills. I like to have them acted upon promptly; and I do not think anyone can accuse me of trying to filibuster. But the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and myself seem to be a good deal at variance as to the proper construction to be placed upon the language of the bill which has been under discussion. I would just a little bit rather that that bill should not be voted upon this afternoon. I would like to investigate the subject somewhat further.

Mr. KENYON. The unanimous-consent request which is now pending has nothing to do with the bill which the Senator from Wisconsin has been discussing.

Mr. POMERENE. I did not hear the request of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. The request I am making for unanimous consent relates to the so-called packers bill and has nothing to do with the bill under consideration this morning. We are asking unanimous consent to vote on the packers bill at a certain time.

Mr. POMERENE. I made my observation in view of the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota

[Mr. NELSON] as to his understanding about the other bill. I am not making any objection to the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement for the information of the Senate.

The reading clerk read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 4 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Monday, January 24, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill (S. 3944) to create a Federal live-stock commission, to define its powers and duties, etc., through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition, and that after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than five minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than five minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question. The unanimous-consent agreement provides for voting upon the bill on the 24th of January. I myself have no objection to fixing that date, but what does it mean in reference to the disposition of other business between now and the 24th of January? Does the Senator propose to keep the bill continuously before the Senate during the intervening time?

Mr. KENYON. No; one of the objects to be accomplished is that we can transact other business. Apparently there is a disposition to debate the bill at great length.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If an effort is made to take up other business, if this is agreed to, there will be no resistance on the part of the Senator?

Mr. KENYON. Not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harrison	McNary	Simmons
Beckham	Heflin	Moses	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Henderson	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Hitchcock	New	Smith, Md.
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Capper	Kendrick	Nugent	Smoot
Curtis	Kenyon	Overman	Spencer
Dial	King	Page	Sterling
Dillingham	Kirby	Phipps	Sutherland
Edge	Knox	Pittman	Townsend
Fletcher	La Follette	Poindexter	Trammell
France	Lenroot	Pomerene	Underwood
Gronna	McCumber	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Harris	McKellar	Sheppard	Walsh, Mont.

Mr. KING. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is detained on account of official business, and that the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] is detained on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The Secretary will read the request for unanimous consent submitted by the Senator from Iowa.

The reading clerk read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 4 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Monday, January 24, the Senate will proceed to vote without further debate upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill (S. 3944) to create a Federal live-stock commission, to define its powers and duties, etc., through the regular parliamentary stages, to its final disposition, and that after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than five minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than five minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand from the reading that no vote can be taken on the bill until the 24th of January?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The wording of the agreement is not later than 4 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Monday, January 24.

Mr. JONES of Washington. And no vote is to be taken on any day before January 24?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of course not. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am sure that is not the interpretation that has already been given to unanimous-consent agreements of that character. It says "not later than 4 o'clock on January 24."

Mr. KENYON. It is the intention to vote on January 24, not later than 4 o'clock.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then it is understood there will be no vote prior to January 24?

Mr. KENYON. There will be no vote prior to that time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But the unanimous-consent agreement would permit a vote before that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On that date.

Mr. KING. If there is any controversy in respect to that matter, I suggest that it be amended, because the clear understanding is that no vote shall be taken until that day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement so that Senators may assure themselves of its import.

The reading clerk again read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. KENYON. If it is not clear, simply make it read that on January 24 the vote shall be taken.

Mr. SMOOT. It is the regular form.

Mr. KENYON. This is the regular form that has been used heretofore.

Mr. KING. That language has been construed heretofore as meaning that day, and I am entirely satisfied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the calendar day that is mentioned, and the proposed agreement is in the usual form. It seems to be clear enough unless the author of the unanimous-consent agreement wishes to change it.

Mr. KENYON. I do not care to change it. I think there is no question raised by anyone trying to secure any other construction than what is plainly intended, the 24th of January, and nothing else will be attempted to be done of course.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I suggest that the suggestion offered by the Senator from Iowa be adopted to make it perfectly plain that on that day——

Mr. KENYON. There is nothing else intended.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. At not later than 4 o'clock.

Mr. KENYON. The Secretary may make the change.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I wish to inquire why the date of January 24 is fixed in the proposed unanimous-consent request. In figuring it out, we know that the Congress will close on the 4th of March. Does the Senator who made the request know whether it is possible to get the matter up in the House and get it through in this Congress if we put it off until such a late date in the Senate?

Mr. KENYON. I do not know what it may be possible to do in the House. There is no reason why the House should not proceed during the intervening time, if they desire to do so. I will state the reason for fixing that date. I think the bill could be forced to a vote long before that time, but the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is ill and unable to be here. He is very strongly opposed to the measure. We do not want to take any advantage of him and want to give him every opportunity to come here and make his fight against it. There are other Senators who are compelled to be away for a week or ten days in the middle of January, who are interested upon the other side of the bill. It was simply to accommodate everybody that we fixed this date. I realize that the date is late. I wish the bill could be voted upon long before that time, but under the circumstances it seems to be impossible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I just wish to say a word as one of the members of the committee which had the bill under consideration. I had hoped that it would be possible to vote upon the bill before January 24, but, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has stated, certain Senators are away, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is ill, and we do not wish to take any advantage of any Member of this body. It is not only possible but it is probable that the date suggested will be too late for the other House to pass the bill at this session, although it will give them considerable time.

At first I was not in accord with the postponement of this measure to the late date proposed, but as the friends of the measure and those who are the sponsors of the bill and have done more to advance it than have any others concurred in this action, I said that I should not oppose the unanimous-consent agreement to take a vote at the late day suggested. I simply desire the RECORD to show my position.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

The unanimous-consent agreement is as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on the calendar day of Monday, January 24, 1921, at not later than 4 o'clock p. m. on said day, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill (S. 3944) to create a Federal live stock commission, to define its powers and duties, and to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live stock and live-stock products, and for other purposes, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition, and that after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than five minutes upon the bill or more than once or longer than five minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. KENYON. I ask the Senator from North Dakota if he will not now ask that the unfinished business may be laid aside?

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the unfinished business may now be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ASSOCIATION OF PRODUCERS OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13931) to authorize association of producers of agricultural products.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Minnesota that I am not going to object at this time to the consideration of the bill, but I desire to make a statement before unanimous consent is granted for the consideration of the bill. There is a bill pending here to incorporate nitrate plants of the Government. I think it is of very great importance, and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who reported the bill and is in charge of it, gave notice on yesterday that after the packers bill was disposed of he intended to ask for the consideration of the nitrate bill. The Senator from South Carolina is not on the floor just now, and I do not suppose if he were he would care to contest with the Senator from Minnesota as to the consideration of his bill; but I did not want the statement of the Senator from South Carolina to be foreclosed by taking up the pending matter until he came back. I only desire to say that some of the Senators on this side of the Chamber who are very desirous of having the nitrate bill considered do not want to waive any rights which we may have in the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill asked for by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]?

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I do not wish to object to the consideration of this bill, although I had hoped to have taken up to-day a measure of very great importance, being Order of Business No. 602, Senate bill 3259. It is a bill which is known as the maternity and infancy bill. I anticipate that the bill will cause very little debate and will be very promptly passed. I hope that I shall have an opportunity, when we shall have disposed of the measure which we shall shortly have before us, to move the consideration of the measure which I have named. I repeat I anticipate that it will cause very little debate and be promptly disposed of. I shall make an effort this afternoon or to-morrow at the close of the morning business to have that measure placed before the Senate for its consideration and decision.

Mr. SMOOT. I have only just entered the Chamber, and I ask the Senator from Maryland is he speaking of Senate bill 3259?

Mr. FRANCE. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think that I may be prepared this afternoon to offer an amendment to that bill; and if so, I desire to offer it this afternoon, in order that it may be printed by to-morrow.

Mr. FRANCE. It would be very helpful if the Senator would do so. I believe the amendment is one which will improve the administrative features of the bill very materially, and I shall be very glad to have it printed, in order that the Senate may have the amendment before it to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] for the consideration of the bill named by him?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13931) to authorize association of producers of agricultural products.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, with respect to the fear of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] that the provisions of the bill as drawn will not reach a situation such as he has outlined, I wish to call his attention to the fact that the only business that an association organized under this bill can do is in the preparing, handling, and marketing of the products of its own members. A member dealing with this association, selling his products to the association, will be, to an extent, dealing with himself; he will be selling to an association that represents him. If the association should pay to its members an exorbitant price for their products and then sell to the public even only at a slight advance, it would clearly, it seems to me, be within the jurisdiction of the commission to make an order requiring the association to desist from paying an exorbitant price, as well as selling at an exorbitant price. It must be so; it can not be otherwise; because certainly the provision with reference to 8 per cent dividends has nothing to do with the proposition, Does the existence of the association unduly enhance prices to the public? If it does, the commission can reach back; and it would be no defense on the part of the association that it paid its members almost the same price for the products that it charged to the public. So, it seems very clear to me, that in order to reach the evil of which the Senator from Ohio very properly complains, which might exist under some circumstances, the bill makes ample provision.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator contend that under the language of the bill farmers who effect an organization may deal only with that organization and through that organization? In other words, may not a number of organizations combine in a nation-wide or state-wide combination of organizations of different classes embraced in the bill for any purpose which is embraced within the words "marketing" and "processing" and disposing of or selling?

Mr. LENROOT. That question was raised yesterday, and I am glad to give my opinion for whatever it may be worth. I think that under this measure there might be various kinds of organizations, and that they could all combine into one new organization. I do not believe, however, that under the terms of the bill an organization of wheat farmers could combine with an organization of cotton growers and the association of wheat growers sell cotton or deal with it in any way.

Mr. KING. But could they combine with the millers or with the warehousemen?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly not. A miller would not be within the terms of the proposed law at all, nor would a warehouseman.

Mr. KING. Could they not combine for the purpose of erecting mills and warehouses in order to grind their grain and then store the product and hold it for an indefinite period for the purpose of disposing of it?

Mr. LENROOT. They might, for instance, subscribe to the capital stock of an elevator; they could do that; I have no doubt about it.

Mr. KING. Might not the ranchmen—that is the word that is used in the bill—erect packing establishments, buy refrigerating cars, and do all the things that the packers now do and take care of the by-products, and for that purpose launch out into all sorts of business and combine for the purpose of maintaining prices and creating monopolies with respect to the commodities in the production of which they are engaged?

Mr. LENROOT. They could not, for this reason: As I said a moment ago, the members of the association are confined to dealing in the things produced by their own members—in agricultural products. They can not combine these associations and attempt to monopolize the food products of the country as the packers do; they can not go into the wholesale grocery business; they can do nothing of that kind. They are confined to dealing with the things that the members themselves produce; that is all.

Mr. KING. I think the interpretation of the Senator is the one, doubtless, which the members of the committee desire to have placed upon the bill, but I doubt whether that interpretation is the one which will be followed.

Mr. LENROOT. I think, if the Senator will examine section 1, there can be no other interpretation. The language is:

> That persons engaged in the production of agricultural products as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, or fruit growers may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock, in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce, such products of their members—

And so forth.

In other words, one member of an association, as I view the terms of the bill, can not buy a thousand bushels of wheat in the market and deal with it through the association. So there can not be the slightest danger of a situation arising such as the junior Senator from Ohio suggests, that the farmers or the ranchmen might grow into a colossal monopoly greater than that of the meat packers.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I rose to say something with respect to the inquiry made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], but before doing so I desire to advert to the colloquy precipitated by the question addressed to the Senator from Wisconsin by the Senator from Utah. The evil of combination, as we understand it, has always arisen from the combination of corporations—that is to say, from various associations combining. This bill does not permit the combination of various associations at all. I am inclined to think that, perhaps, the bill is weak in that respect. I think there ought to be a provision for the federation of marketing associations on the plan of the California Fruit Growers' Association; but this bill does not permit that. It does, however, beyond a doubt, permit a number of hog raisers, if they see fit to do so, to erect a packing house in which their own product will be treated, but such a packing house can not engage generally in the purchasing of hogs on the market, the product of others not belonging to them. So I apprehend that the fear that may enter the minds of some that associations of farmers will become formidable rivals of the great packing institutions of the country has very little foundation.

This measure is very restricted. In the first place, the association must be one of persons and not of corporations. If it were an association of associations, a federation, the federation would not be handling the products of its members, because its members would be the associations, which would have no products of their own; they would simply have the products of some one else, namely, members of those associations.

Now, Mr. President, a word or two with respect to the views suggested by the inquiry of the Senator from Ohio.

It is an error to suppose that this bill is intended to remedy the evil arising from the exaction of high prices by the producers of agricultural products. That is an evil, if the evil exists, to be taken care of by some other legislation. This legislation does not undertake to reach that. This legislation authorizes combinations of growers or producers of agricultural products; but inasmuch as a combination of that character might result in the exaction of unjust, unduly high prices by the association, provision is made that this association shall not exact high prices. But, Mr. President, when the members of that association—not the association itself, but the members of that association, outside of the association—engage in some arrangement or device by which prices are unduly enhanced, they are in the same situation as a similar association or combination by producers of agricultural products who are not members of the association at all, and are to be dealt with in exactly the same way.

To illustrate for the benefit of the Senator from Ohio, here is a man engaged in the dairy business. He does not join any association at all. His neighbors all join the association. Now, if the association charges unduly high prices for its products or otherwise restrains trade, it is brought under the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission; but the man who is not a member of the association at all, if an amendment such as is suggested by the Senator from Ohio is incorporated in the bill, will not be subject to any control whatsoever. In other words, the matter of controlling the prices charged by individuals is a subject of entirely different legislation, and, it seems to me, has no place here at all. It would be quite unjust, it seems to me, to bring before the Federal Trade Commission a member of this association who has conducted his business in a way that is not in accordance with good morals, while his neighbor, who is not a member of the association, is at perfect liberty, at least so far as this law is concerned, to do as he pleases.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. Now, we have this situation: My contention has been that under the present framework of this bill the members of the association, while continuing their membership in it, could go on and exact exorbitant prices for their products from the association.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. From the association?

Mr. POMERENE. From the association, and that they would not be amenable to the law or to the public for those exactions. When I make that suggestion the very able Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] tells me that I am in error; that under this bill, if these members do exact excessive prices they would be amenable to the law just as the association would be. He is one friend of the measure; and now here is my very able friend, the distinguished Senator from Montana, who tells me that this bill will not meet that situation; that if there is such an evil as exacting too high prices, it must be met by other legislation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me one moment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator, I know, wants to be right about that.

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly I do.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We want to get this correct. I was not talking about the members selling to the association at all. If the Senator presents that problem, the answer to that is quite different from the one I gave. He suggested a case where the member was not selling to the association at all, but was selling outside of the association.

Mr. POMERENE. Who?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understood that that was the case that the Senator put.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, no, no. My position was that it was within their power to sell to this association at a very exorbitant price, and do that not by way of a conspiracy, but I used the illustration—perhaps while the Senator was out—that it might be under some sort of arrangement such as was used during the so-called Gary dinners.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But if the Senator will pardon me for just a moment, that is where the error comes in. The members do not sell to the association at all. This plan does not contemplate that the members ever do sell to the association.

Mr. POMERENE. It contemplates the same thing—in other words, that they are to dispose of their products through this association. That is what it means. It means that, if it means anything at all.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator will pardon me, let me tell the Senator the theory of the thing. They do not sell their products at all. Indeed, the association would have no power to buy under this language. There is no provision here under which an association of this character could buy the products of the members at all. It will simple handle them for the members. The members come in, and they turn in their products to the association, and the association sells them, and divides among the members whatever avails there are. That is the plan. They never sell to the association; and the Senator will find that there is no warrant in the bill for his assumption.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me ask the Senator, then, this question. Perhaps it will clear up what seems to be a difference between us. Does the Senator now claim that these individuals can go ahead, by virtue of this association, and get, let us assume, for the sake of the argument, an exorbitant price, an unconscionable price, a price that places the consumer absolutely at their mercy——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. By no means; by no means.

Mr. POMERENE. Just let me finish my question, please. Do I understand the Senator to say that that thing could be done?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not say that it would be done. My question is, Could that be done under this bill?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator must not understand me so, because the bill expressly provides that it shall not be done, and if it is done the association is brought under the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. POMERENE. No; it is so with respect to the association itself——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. POMERENE. But there is no such provision here with regard to the individual members of that association.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is exactly what I am talking about. If these members sell their products outside of the association they are in the same situation as anybody else outside of the association; and I assert to the Senator that they can not sell inside of the association. They do not sell to the association at all. There is nothing in the bill which will authorize an association to buy the products of its members.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me put another question to the Senator to see whether we can clear up this matter. This contemplates profits.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly; of the association, to be divided among its members.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes. Pardon me; just let me finish my question. It contemplates profits, which are to be distributed either by way of dividends on the stock, if there is a capital stock, or by dividends to the members on the price of their membership. Now, if there are no sales to this association how can there be profits to the association?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Why, I thought I made it perfectly clear. The members of the association turn in their products. Take the ordinary creamery association. Everybody understands how it runs. The creamery association is organized, with certain members. Each member turns in his milk every day. That milk is tested for butter fat. That butter fat is converted into butter, and the butter is put upon the market by the association and sold. The expenses are paid, and there is a certain surplus at the end of the year, or at the end of the month, or at the end of the quarter, or whenever the distribution is made, and those profits are divided among the members in accordance with the amount of butter fat that each one contributes. That is the way the thing works. The members do not sell their milk to the association at all at a fixed price or at any price. They simply take their distributive share of the avails of the operation.

Now, Mr. President, these combinations, these associations which the bill authorizes, can not go into the business of buying the products of their members or of anybody else.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I trust I have made the matter clear. Accordingly, I will say to the Senator from Ohio, the association has nothing whatever to sell except the products of its members, and the members do not sell anything to the association, so they can not charge exorbitant prices to the association; and if they sell outside of the association they are just the same as a man who does not belong to the association, and amenable to whatever laws are applicable to the case.

I now yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not sure that I understand the construction placed by the Senator from Montana upon this bill. I do not agree with him if I do understand him correctly in asserting that the association may not buy the products of its members.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let us see, if the Senator will take up that matter with me. This bill provides:

> That persons engaged in the production of agricultural products, as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, or fruit growers, may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock—

How?—

> in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce such products of their members.

Now, how does that authorize the associations to buy the products of their members?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not think the word "collectively" there, giving to it its proper qualifying meaning and interpretation, would forbid the association to purchase from the capital stock which it has the products of the farmers; and the farmers could sell, for instance, their milk or their wheat to this corporation for a price which they, as directors of the corporation, should fix and get their profits thereupon the sale, and then, after the corporation had processed it, converted it into flour, and held it for an indefinite period, and sold it and made a profit, they could receive a dividend not exceeding 8 per cent upon the capital stock which they had in the corporation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But the Senator must point to something in the bill that will permit that. All that this association is entitled to do is to process the products of its members, to prepare those products for market, to handle those products, and to market those products. It does not make any difference about the word "collectively." "Collectively" is a matter of no consequence. Those are the sole powers of this corporation. Now, when the Senator says they can go out and buy the products——

Mr. KING. I think, if the Senator will pardon me, that where a corporation is organized to process or to prepare for market or to handle or to market products, it has the power to purchase them; and I do not think any construction of the powers of a corporation, if you authorize a corporation to do those things, would restrict it so that it would be prohibited from purchasing.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator is a very able lawyer, and I can not see quite how he could reach the conclusion that a corporation with powers of that character could transform itself into a commercial organization. This is really in the nature of a commission business. That is what it is.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me say that it was perfectly easy for the Congress of the United States to put in the word "purchase" if it wanted to authorize it. Of course, a court would say that the Congress did not put that word in there or did not put anything else in there which signified purchasing, and accordingly the corporation, whose powers are always construed strictly, would not have those powers.

Now I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I can answer along the same line my good friend from Montana. The fact is that the word "purchase" is not there, and it is significant that there is not anything in the bill denying the right to purchase. Let me suggest to the Senator further that it provides for an association. Ordinarily associations have certain well-defined powers. I take it that these associations can do business just about as they choose, because in the first place it says this is for "collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate or foreign commerce, such products of their members; that such producers may organize and operate such associations and make the necessary contracts and agreements to effect that purpose," and so forth. Suppose an association get together and, after they have taken counsel together, say, "Well, now, we think that the title of these products should be in this association, and we think we can buy from these members." Is there anything here denying that power? Then it says these associations when organized can make the necessary contracts and agreements to effect that purpose.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I would like to answer that question. I say to the Senator that there is not anything in the bill denying to them that power.

The Senator is a good lawyer, and he knows that in England a corporation is presumed to have every power that an individual has, except such as are expressly denied to it in the law, but in America the rule is quite the contrary; a corporation has no powers except those which are either expressly or impliedly conveyed in the law. So I answer the statement of the Senator from Ohio that it is not forbidden in the law to do this thing; that that is not the question; the power is not given to it in the law.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me suggest to the Senator that I do not think he is quite complete in his statement. He is speaking about a British corporation, and he is contrasting a British corporation with an American corporation. Of course, all students of the subject know that an American corporation is limited in its corporate power to powers which are conferred upon it by the State. But this refers to associations "corporate or otherwise." That is the point about it, and if his argument applies to the corporate organization—and it does not do that—it applies to associations which are "corporate or otherwise." I insist that under the circumstances these associations can be formed whereby they can buy from their members, and these members can charge exorbitant rates. I want to be liberal with all these organizations, but if it be so that they can charge rates which are concededly unconscionable, my friend the Senator from Wisconsin says that under those circumstances they are amenable to this law, and my good friend the Senator from Montana says they are not.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator must not misstate the situation.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not intend to do so.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It does not make any difference, so far as the rule of construction is concerned, whether it is a corporate organization or whether it is an association authorized by the statute, an association not corporate in its character. Such a statutory organization, whatever it may be, has only such powers as the statute expressly or impliedly gives to it, and no others. So the rule would be just exactly the same. But if the Senator is correct—and I submit that he is in error—that the association may buy the products of its members, and may give exorbitant prices to its members for the products, it will be obliged, then, to charge the consumer exorbitant prices, and that, of course, is the case the Senator is contemplating.

Of course, the association becomes amenable, then, to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission, and when it is charged with having exacted exorbitant prices of consumers, it will be no answer for the corporation to say, "We were obliged to pay these exorbitant prices because our members exacted them of us." That would be a foolish answer to make.

So far as the consumer is concerned, it is a matter of no consequence to him whether the corporation can or can not buy the products of its members. Nor would the operation of the act be in the slightest degree different. If the Senator contemplates the case of members selling their products to the association, then the case is amply taken care of by the bill as it stands now, because the association would be subject to the order of the Federal Trade Commission, and in that way the members, of course, would be reached, and they would be obliged to abate their prices to the corporation.

Mr. POMERENE. If that is true, then would the Senator object to an amendment making this applicable to the members as well as the association?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I would, Mr. President, simply because of the reason I gave, that it would then make the members of the associations amenable when rivals of the members, not members of the association at all, would not be amenable, and the law would not be fair in its operation. If you speak about members dealing outside of the association, you should make it applicable to everybody outside of the association.

UMI

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator, it having, of course, escaped his very acute mind, that men outside of the association, if they conspired to restrain trade, if I can recall the language of the Sherman law, or entered into a conspiracy to monopolize any part of interstate commerce, would be amenable under the Sherman antitrust law, and could be prosecuted criminally under that act?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; and so if, outside of this association, they entered into a combination, the fact that they were members of this association would give them no immunity whatever.

Mr. KING. That was the question I desired to ask the Senator, whether he thought that immunity would be granted to members of the organization if they should enter into conspiracies outside of the organization or association which they organize?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I can not think so for a moment.

Mr. KING. I do not dissent from that view, but I wanted the Senator's exposition of that matter.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is to say, they would be amenable to all the laws to which other people outside of the association would be amenable.

Now, I want to submit a few general observations on the bill, and they will be brief. I make no apology whatever for the position I take that the Congress of the United States may, without the slightest reproach, pass legislation of this character. Much has been said in a scornful way about this being class legislation. I have heard the same with reference to legislation which exempted organizations of laboring men, wage workers, from the effect of the Sherman antitrust law act.

Mr. President, I insist there is an essential difference between great combinations of capital, often referred to as trusts, whose exactions gave rise to the sentiment which produced the Sherman antitrust act, great aggregations of capital and associations of individuals, not of money but of men, for the purpose of securing higher wages or better conditions of working, and associations of farmers for the purpose of marketing their individual products.

These are so essentially different, Mr. President, that they may very properly be dealt with, and any evils growing out of them may very properly be dealt with, on an entirely different basis and by entirely different legislation. In fact, Mr. President, I think that it is undisputed history that the Sherman Antitrust Act never was, in its original inception, contemplated as a means of interfering either with associations of workingmen for the purpose of securing better wages or better working conditions, or associations of farmers for the purpose of marketing their prducts cooperatively, and I say that if there are evils in associations of farmers looking to cooperation in the marketing of their products, or of wage earners for the purpose of improving their condition, those evils are to be dealt with in some other way and by some other law than that law which was intended to curb the exactions of great monopolistic combinations of capital.

No one who has the history of the Sherman Act in mind will be able to recall the particular evils from which this country was suffering in the eighties by reason of combinations of farmers, and I say it never was intended to apply to associations of that character, and the sense of the people from that time down to this has been in accord with that idea, because until within the last six months, so far as my acquaintance with the subject is concerned, no man has ever attempted to prosecute associations of farmers for cooperative marketing under the provisions of the Sherman Antitrust Act, which has now been in force for 30 years, because even if they are within the letter of the Sherman antitrust law it was recognized upon all hands that that law never was intended to reach to associations of that character, and for abundant reasons I undertake to say that it is next to impossible, if it is possible at all, for the farmers of this country to organize an association which would be monopolistic in character or which would be able to exact exorbitant prices for their products.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but my recollection is a little different from the statement made by the Senator, that it was not intended when the Sherman antitrust law was passed that it should be applicable to labor unions and, possibly, to agricultural interests. I am not clear yet what the intention of Congress was, but the Senator, if he will pardon me, will recall that during the discussion the question was raised as to whether the act did apply to labor organizations and to agricultural organizations, and Senator Sherman offered this proviso. May I trespass on the Senator's time?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am glad the Senator called attention to it. I was going to elaborate the subject myself.

Mr. KING. The proviso was as follows:

Provided, That this act shall not be construed to apply to any arrangements, agreements, or combinations between laborers, made with a view of lessening the number of hours of their labor or of increasing their wages, nor to any arrangements, agreements, associations, or combinations among persons engaged in horticulture or agriculture made with a view of enhancing the price of their own agricultural or horticultural products.

This amendment was offered later by Senator Aldrich, and on March 27 of that year, 1890, the bill was recommitted to the Judiciary Committee, and later it was reported out with a multitude of changes. The exemption clause which had been attached to the bill by amendment before the recommittal to the committee was eliminated from the measure, and that action was confirmed by the Senate and, of course, by Congress, and the bill emerged in the form of the present act.

The Supreme Court of the United States, as the Senator will remember, in the Loewe against Lawlor case, used this language:

The act made no distinction between classes. It provided that "every" contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade was illegal. The records of Congress show that several efforts were made to exempt, by legislation, organizations of farmers and laborers from the operation of the act, and that all these efforts failed, so that the act remained as we have it before us.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I recall that history very well, and the Senator will find, if he follows it up, that it was withdrawn upon the very solemn suggestion of an eminent Member of the Senate to the effect that it was entirely unnecessary because the act could not by any reasonable construction be made to apply to those classes. That is why it was withdrawn.

Mr. POMERENE. I may say to the Senator that I went into that pretty thoroughly myself at one time, and while statements of that kind were made, it was afterwards recommitted and was entirely redrafted, so that it was general in its application.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly. That is exactly the situation. Those who were urging the exceptions to the original act were induced to withdraw their insistence upon the suggestion of the friends of the act that it could not possibly be given a construction so as to embrace them. It is a fact that the Supreme Court afterwards held, so far as labor organizations were concerned, that it did include them. I still insist that it never was the spirit of the act, but the matter came about in just that way.

There is just another word I desire to say in connection with this. The Supreme Court has held that the Sherman Act does not extend to every combination in restraint of trade, but only to those which unduly restrain trade. Accordingly it becomes a question for the court in every particular instance to determine whether or not a particular combination does or does not restrain trade. It has been held almost universally, and has been accepted, that under that definition these ordinary farmers' cooperative marketing associations do not come under the Sherman Act, because if they restrain trade at all they do not unduly restrain trade.

So we are not really amending the Sherman Act so as to give liberty of action to associations which would otherwise fall under this condemnation. We are simply making a legislative declaration that combinations of farmers of this character are not combinations which unduly restrain trade; but if they do in any manner unduly restrain trade, we have provided a remedy in the bill so that the restraint shall not go beyond the limits.

That is the purpose of the act. It is not even a concession that the associations do now fall under the provisions of the Sherman Act, but it merely removes whatever doubt there may be with respect to that particular matter.

Take the organization generally known as the Equity, which does a very excellent work all through the Northwest and furnishes an association through which farmers may market their own products. Of course they are subject to many restrictions and many embarrassments and much competition from the old organizations, which at one time had a monopoly of the business. The farmers throw their products all together, market them together, and divide the avails. Now, in a certain sense those individual farmers, by the association, have restricted competition. They do not compete with each other individually, and yet the price of wheat, as a whole, is probably not and undoubtedly not seriously affected by these associations, thus preventing competition among individual members. I apprehend that the court would hold that that is not a combination in undue restraint of trade; and yet it does, as a matter of fact, restrain trade to some extent; at least it restrains competition. It simply effects, and this is in the nature of a legislative declaration that in the opinion of the Congress—and that becomes the fixed law—combinations of this character are not in undue restraint of trade.

As I said, nothing was urged at the time the Sherman law was originally under consideration by Congress concerning the evils from which the country was suffering by reason of these organizations, nor has anyone even in this debate undertaken to put a supposititious case of injury to the public interest by the permission of the existence of organizations of this character.

Indeed, everyone concedes that so far as they have yet gone in this country their operation has been wholly beneficial. Take the great California Fruit Growers' Association. It furnishes to the country a constant supply of the citrus fruits that it markets. The raisin growers organized an association whose operations were under consideration by the Federal Trade Commission, which reported that whether it was a combination coming under the Sherman Act or not, no harm had been done to the public, up to the time the investigation occurred at least, by reason of its operations.

Take the fruit-growing industry in the Northwest. The Bitter Root Valley in my State was extensively advertised some years ago as a great place for the growing of apples, and that they produced a high quality of fruit and in great abundance. Nothing was said, I undertake to say, or little was said in those advertisements that was not true. That valley is remarkable in its capacity for the production of fruit of a high character of that nature, and yet the business has gone to pieces.

Farms are deserted, the orchards are no longer productive to any great extent, and simply because there was no system of marketing the product. An abundant food supply of that character could be furnished the public, of which it is now entirely deprived. Evils of much the same character beset the fruit grower in the State of Washington. The rich Yakima Valley is by no means as productive as it might be if there were a possibility of the growers getting together and marketing their supplies in common. One can very readily understand that an individual can not inform himself concerning the conditions of the market throughout the country as can a great association and combination of growers.

I submit, Mr. President, that far from any evils resulting to the public by reason of the organization of associations of this character they will contribute very largely to an increased food supply for the people of the country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator resumes his seat may I interrogate him for my own information?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think the bill would exempt from prosecution under the Sherman law any individuals or any association organized under the bill which created a monopoly or developed a monopoly in any of the products referred to in the bill?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is very carefully taken care of by the amendment offered by the Senate committee, reading as follows:

> Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize the creation of or attempt to create a monopoly or to exempt any association organized hereunder from any proceedings instituted under the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, on account of unfair methods of competition in commerce.

If any one of these organizations should resort to any monopolistic practices or attempt to drive any rival out of business or resort to corruption in the case of purchasing agents or anything of that kind, they would all be subject to the operation of the Federal Trade Commission act.

Mr. KING. Would they be subject to the operations of the Sherman law?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Undoubtedly; it so provides.

Mr. KING. If they should seek to create a monopoly?

Mr .WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that the language which he has just read is not repealed, or at least a cloud be cast upon its applicability to acts which constitute monopolies, by the words found on page 1 of the bill, in lines 10 and 11, the words being—> and make the necessary contracts and agreements to effect that purpose, any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

Would not those words seem to imply that any sort of contract or agreement might be entered into by these associations or organizations, even though the effect of such agreement or organization was to create a monopoly which might be denounced by the Sherman antitrust law?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should say not, upon two plain rules of construction. One is that if there is any inconsistency between two provisions of the act, the later one prevails.

Mr. KING. I had that in mind as probably a reconciliation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So if that is the case, the other would wipe it out. The second is that a specific provision outweighs a general provision. We have a general provision of the act, first, that "any law to the contrary notwithstanding," and then we have a specific provision that the Sherman law and the Clayton law shall remain in operation so far as indicated in that section. So I do not believe there is any danger of a monopoly. As a practical proposition, there is not any, and if there were, as a practical proposition, it is taken care of by the concluding portion of the act.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the debate has revolved around a legal aspect of the case as to whether or not it will come under the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law. Of course, in our legislation we pay attention to this sort of thing, but there is not on record in all the history of agriculture in the country a case where an association, combination, or organization of farmers in our great staple products, such as are common to a vast area, has ever been accomplished that has had an appreciable effect upon the price of their commodity in its general market aspect.

It is true that some local organizations have taken a part of a great crop, and by eliminating the middlemen and certain local and incidental expenses have gotten a better profit to themselves under a given price than they would have gotten otherwise; the net to them was greater, but they have not increased the market price.

If time permitted this afternoon, I think I could demonstrate that it is an impossibility, involving both the physical and moral aspect, to organize the farmers of America in the sense that the law had in contemplation when we passed the Sherman antitrust law. I wish to suggest some of the difficulties.

In the first place, you have men engaged in the production of wheat and of cotton whose financial resources are as varied as the season, whose capacity is as varied as they possibly can be. Not only that but the product of the farm is subject not to the control of the producer, but is subject to the greatest extent to the season. Take the artificial producer, the manufacturer, to curb whom that law was primarily passed, or its intent was to curb him—combinations of capital in artificial production. Every manufacturer can produce to an inch, yard, or pound his crop. He can control his season, because it is an artificial season. He can produce to the foot in lumber, to the yard in textile, to the pound in steel. Not only that, but he can control the quality of his crop. He can produce according to the order of his science whatever he desires to be produced, according to the character of the work in which he is engaged.

If the manufacturer, the artificial producer, finds that he, in conjunction with those who are engaged in like business with himself, is producing too much for the market, he can almost instantly agree to arrest production and fix the output to suit the demand. Not only that, but, being a few in number and the aggregate of their output being as great as the commerce of the world, it is easy for manufacturers to get together, to parcel out the commercial regions to themselves, to agree upon a price, and to furnish their product according to their own will by regulating the amount of manufactures which they put out. So, to repeat what I have already said, they can control the quality and quantity of their output and its price.

Now, as to the natural producer, the farmer, not only has he no capital invested in brick and in mortar, in stock sold, but the principal capital the American farmer has invested is the land of this country and his own muscle and credit from somebody else. The major portion of his expenses are incurred in buying material that is essential to produce the crop. He has but one turnover in 12 months as against the artificial manufacturing producer, who has a commercial asset at the end of every 24 hours to meet the liabilities incurred by him in production. The farmer or the natural producer incurs his expenses when he plants his crop, when he puts his seed into the ground. He then must take the chances of nature as to the quality and quantity of the thing which he produces.

Not only that, but the larger percentage of the farmers are in debt for the production of their crops, and yet have no control over them so far as the time and place of marketing is concerned. The man the farmer is owing demands that he meet the obligation incurred in production. The result is that the great fundamental industry of this country, upon which everything else rests, is carried on by those who by the very nature of the case can not organize, and therefore are the victims of those who are organized and who are in a position to demand their profit.

I have a communication here which has just been issued by the Department of Agriculture which shows a startling condition of affairs. The Secretary of Agriculture himself says that no other business in the world could stand such a shrinkage in value as that which now exists as to agricultural products. The difference between the crop produced in 1920 and the crop produced in 1919 as to quantity was largely in favor of the 1920 crop; perhaps it is 33⅓ per cent on the average for all production in this country, in favor of the crops of 1920 over that of 1919. The great shrinkage in value is in excess of $5,000,000,000; and adding the increased volume of production, the cost incurred, and the shrinkage in price it will approximate 35 per cent net loss to the farmers of this country in the aggregate amount received for the two crops, representing $5,000,000,000 of loss.

I have heard it said about the farmer on this floor during the debate that he must take his loss along with other people. That would be a fair view to take of the matter if the farmer had the same facilities for recouping the losses which he sustains as have other people. Let me call attention to a fact, not a theory. Last year cotton sold in my State—and I am going to refer to other staple products that are in the same condition—at the mills around 40 cents a pound. Cloth was manufactured from that cotton and sold to the world at large, and the mills of New England and the South made an average profit of 300 per cent, most of them declaring stock dividends, and thereby, through the decision of the court, getting rid of paying excess-profits taxes. Now mark. Let us take the mathematical and logical condition that exists. Certain mills in New England and the South have announced that they have cut the price of cloth—and I want Senators to pay particular attention to this—33⅓ per cent. The raw material out of which they had made that cloth has gone down 200 per cent. Now, if they were making 300 per cent out of 40-cent cotton and they cut their prices 33⅓ per cent and cotton goes down 200 per cent, they are making a larger percentage of profit out of the low-priced cotton, in spite of the fact that they have cut their prices 33⅓ per cent, than they did out of the 40-cent cotton.

Who has the farmer beneath him to enable him to recoup himself by charging his loss off in the next sale that he makes or in the purchase of his next raw material? It is small encouragement to the farmer of this country, knowing his condition, as he does know it, to be met with opposition whenever an effort is made here to encourage him in his disorganized condition, as he will be disorganized as long as farming is subject to the caprices of nature and to the different financial conditions in which the farmers find themselves. It is small encouragement to intelligent boys of the country to go back to the farm and be the hewers of wood and the drawers of water at the mercy of organized capital the world over, with not even the Government taking a stand and recognizing that the farmer is in a class by himself, and one upon which the whole superstructure of our civilization rests.

Senators stand here and argue whether farmers' organizations of this country should come under the Sherman antitrust law, and consume time drawing nice legal distinctions; but in all the history of agriculture in this country and elsewhere no case is on record where the farmers have ever been able to combine and get justice, much less to perpetrate injustice.

It is said that everything else in this country has sunk pari passu with farm products. That is not true. Everything moves along the line of least resistance, and that means that the poor devil on the farm, having no capital resources, having no friends save himself and those dependent upon him, when the financial crisis comes, his paper in the bank, being the weakest, is the first shaken out. So wheat and other grain, cattle, and wool and cotton were the first to feel the effect of the unfortunate cataclysm which unfortunately was brought about in part by those who should have been attempting to stem the tide rather than to precipitate the avalanche.

Now, here comes a measure for the purpose of showing the attitude or, as the Senator from Montana has said, of expressing the opinion of Congress that the farmer should not come under the restrictions of the Sherman antitrust law. I am not a lawyer, and sometimes I thank God I am not.

Mr. THOMAS. So do the lawyers, perhaps.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; some of them may, because they would not feel easy in honest company. But I want to state that it would be, it seems to me, a fine piece of statesmanship and patriotism if we could devise some means in this room—for means have not been found outside of it—by which the farmers could organize and at least put themselves in a position where they could protect themselves against just such conditions as now exist.

The party on the other side has committed itself to a high protective tariff—to do what? In platform after platform they have declared that industries which were not able to stand the competition and inroads of older and more highly organized ones abroad were entitled to the protection of the American Government to enable them to make a profit until they could get on their feet and fight for themselves. Have the farmers a less right to ask that the Government shall provide means by which they may be protected against the inroads of capital and organizations that ruin them?

I think it is to the credit and honor of this body that we are saying to the farmers of the country that we recognize the fact that as the producers of that out of which all the others must live, it being impossible for them to come under the terms of the Sherman antitrust law in fact, we will make it legal for them to be immune from the operation of the law.

I have sat here and listened until I have almost lost hope that Senators will study the actual conditions. They come in here with fine-spun theories, indulge in broad and general statements, and say "let the farmer take his medicine along with other men during the readjustment period following the war." During the war how many millionaires were added to our great millionaire population and from what classes did they come? Who knows of a single farmer who has become a millionaire because of the conditions brought about by the war? Although they number about 33⅓ per cent of the entire population of the United States, not one farmer became a millionaire; and now from the very peak of what seemed to be reasonable prices for that which they had to sell they are hurled into the very abysmal pit of ruin and disaster. Yet they are quietly told by men sitting in the United States Senate, "take your medicine."

Mr. President, the conditions in this country are frightful beyond expression. Although the farmers have been hurled from the very peak of prosperous prices within a period of six months to prices far below those antedating the war, yet we see men stand here and say "this is inevitable; the same condition has followed every war, and it will follow every future war." There was not a gun fired in America at an enemy; not a single piece of property on the American continent was destroyed by the enemy; not a business nor a vocation nor an avocation was invaded by the presence of a foreign foe; but, on the contrary, all of our resources were left untouched and were even developed, perhaps, and quickened by the influx of the lifeblood of commerce, namely, an abundance of money, and we have now after the war a condition in which there is a greater cry than during the war for production. During the war we were asked to produce to kill; after war we were asked to produce to make alive.

Then we held up every man and forced him with the threat of being branded as a slacker to buy Liberty bonds and to engage in the prosecution of the war; now, when we have triumphed, under the providence of God and the bravery and valor of our troops and because of the boundless resources of our country, with thousands in Europe and elsewhere in the world shivering in the cold and starving, we say, "Let them take their medicine, both the American people who helped win the war and those whom we helped to conquer."

We could find plenty of resources to whip the enemy, but we can find no resources to make alive a prostrate world, and the reason is not far to seek. Then it was a threat of political and of commercial death to all from a foreign enemy. Now it means the opportunity of these grafters who take advantage of the situation and put into their pockets the spoils that come from the wreck of business.

It is just as much our duty now, in the disorganized state of world society, to hold our hands on the financial and commercial throttle and see that justice is done and the condition met as it was when the sinister shadow of the Hun fell athwart the hope of the world; and here we are haggling about the Sherman antitrust law, breaking the heart of the farmer, sending millions to bankruptcy and ruin, taking our own American children out of the schools, taking the pictures from the walls and the carpets from the floors, and blighting the hopes of thousands of American homes, because we say it is not according to our policy to interfere in such matters.

This bill was not introduced during the time of peak prices. It was introduced because of the equity and justice that underlie the impulse that caused it, that is as eternal as the hills, that recognizes that the farmer is in a class to himself, subject in his production to the law of nature, while the manufacturer is subject to the law that he himself creates; he can open the throttle and turn the wheels or shut them down as he pleases; but the farmer, when he puts the seed in the ground, must wait upon the wheel of the seasons and the movings of the gods.

Mr. President, I have gotten tired to death of this eternal carping about the farmer being subject to the operation of law, to the very same processes that others are. In the great staple products, such as wheat and other grains, wool, and cotton, when did you ever know him to fix his own price and get it? Whom does he wait upon? A set of speculators that sit in the exchange places of this country, most of whom do not know a wheat straw from a cane reed, or a cotton stalk from a Jimsonweed. They sit down and take the produce of the farmers as the dice in a box, and gamble at their sweet will upon the hopes of 35,000,000 Americans. That is all right; that is your law of supply and demand, that fluctuates as much as 33⅓ per cent of the average value of a crop in a day; and yet you coolly mock the farmer by saying "Take your medicine," the portion poured out by a gambling and scheming world, sacrificing him to meet their selfish greed.

I hope that every Member of this body will read the report of the Secretary of Agriculture. It is a sane, fair warning. Thank God, the world is making progress along educational lines. We talk about the high cost of living. I say here in the Senate Chamber this afternoon that the time has passed forever when the farmers of this country will live in bare huts and bear the burdens of the civilization of this country, produce its wealth, and yet not share in the wealth they produce. Universal education has raised the vision of all men to a higher point and it has poisoned all meaner choice. The comforts and conveniences of modern life and the luxuries that the genius of man has made possible in a cheap and popular form they are going to have, and have a right to have. If we are wise, we will make the law such that they can have them according to good, democratic law; but they are going to have them. It is not a question of the high cost of living; thank God, it is a question of the cost of higher and better living. Every man in this Chamber should devote himself to bringing about that condition; and yet we stand here, not to attempt to solve the great problem that stares us in the face but to quibble over some technical relation of a proposed law to another law that has been passed!

This is not socialism, but a right to demand at the hands of the Government certain things that the Government itself took over. In 1914 we took over and made a Government function the banking of this country. We placed in the hands of seven men the fate of America. They can lend to whom they please, extend credit to whom they please, withhold it from whom they please, under the terms of the law. And what are we confronted with now in this good year 1920, when in the spring every farmer was asked to produce, produce to feed the starving millions of the earth that were taken out of production by the exigencies of war? What are we confronted with now? We responded, borrowed money at the peak of prices, and planted the seed that has resulted in the largest crop we have had since the war began; and now we are asked to take $5,000,000,000 less for a bigger crop than any one we made during the war!

It is said that the law of supply and demand is operating. I want to make one suggestion. I want to ask a question of this body of men who talk about inflated currency. They say that the producer was demanding $5 for one unit of goods, and therefore that he was asking an exorbitant price. What in the name of reason and common sense is the difference between a man that asks $5 for one unit of goods and a man who asks five units of goods for $1? There is just as much profiteering to-day in cash as there was in commodities six months ago. If I increase the purchasing power of my dollar to a point where $1 will buy five times as much as it did before, I am profiteering in dollars just as the other fellow had profiteered in commodities. You hear no cry against that; no; but when sheep were bringing $8 or $10 or $12 a head the sheep grower was a profiteer, and now, when the man who has the money can buy twelve or fourteen times that many sheep for that many dollars, he is not a profiteer but a patriot!

What is the difference? If I, in all good faith, went to work and spent the money necessary to produce this crop, and bought the materials to produce it at the peak of prices, and then, when the 12 months is over and I come to sell it, I have to sell it at a fifth or a sixth of what it cost me, somebody is profiteering, because the man who is purchasing is getting five times as much for his dollars as I got for my dollars when I bought; yet there is not a word of criticism about the profiteer in dollars.

Mr. President, without regard to the aspect of this bill as to whether it comes within the Sherman antitrust law or whether it does not, let us pass it by all possible means in the encouragement of the agricultural interests of this country, in order that there may be an abundance for the American people and for export into the world at large, with a fair and just profit to those who produce it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am in favor of the pending bill and expect to vote for it. I am not going to discuss it. I merely want to refer to a statement made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] this morning about one of the objects of the bill being to secure the means to hold cotton for higher prices.

Inadvertently the Senator is mistaken about the situation which exists in regard to the holding of cotton, in my section of the country at all events. A few weeks ago, about the time I left for Washington, there were on hand some 241,000 bales of last year's cotton that those who owned the cotton had not been able to sell at all for any price. It is not a question of holding for a better price; it is a question of getting a market for the cotton at any price, and for fear that the statement of the Senator might lead to an erroneous opinion about the matter, I wanted to clear it up.

Unquestionably most of the cotton farmers in the South would have been delighted to sell their cotton and had no desire to hold it for better prices. But they could not sell it at all. There was an absolute lack of demand for the cotton, and of course the reason that this legislation is desired is to furnish a market for cotton.

I also want to call the attention of the Senate to another proposition about the question we are now discussing. It is contained in a telegram from Memphis, my home town. It is addressed to me here, and says:

> Railroads propose early date another heavy increase rates on grain. Present rates excessively inflated. Can you arrange conference with Senate Committees on Interstate Commerce and Agriculture?
> L. P. COOK,
> President Memphis Merchants' Exchange.

Of course, every additional burden placed upon grain will interfere with what it is purposed to do by these bills. I merely read this telegram for the information of the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, lest I should be misunderstood from what I stated this morning, as it has been interpreted by others who have followed me, I desire to ask the indulgence of the Senate for just a moment, because I am as anxious as anyone can be to get this matter out of the way.

My criticism this morning was directed to some of the arguments that had been presented to the Senate during the last week or 10 days—the reasons which were given by some Senators for permitting what they termed a change in the Sherman antitrust law. I said, among other things, that it had been stated on the floor by some Senators that it was the province of the Government to enable the farmers, the growers of cotton being mentioned particularly, and I suppose it would apply to other agriculturists in the same way, to hold their products until they could get what they believed was the proper price for it. I know one or two Senators stated that, and that the advice would be given to their constituents that no more cotton should be raised, if that was the only way they could secure the price which they thought was right.

Mr. President, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the arguments which have been made upon this bill, and I am convinced that my first impressions about it are right. I do not think it is a provision which violates the real intent and purpose of the Sherman antitrust law. I agree with the Senator from Montana, especially under the decisions of the Supreme Court, that only undue restraint of trade was prohibited, and that any act which is passed by Congress which clarifies that purpose, and thus prevents the numerous indictments and threatened suits, is most desirable.

I realize, as every man who represents an agricultural constituency realizes, and especially as every man must realize who has lived practically his whole life upon the farm, that there are handicaps to the farmer which are not experienced by other business men. It is impossible for him to have the understanding, even the simple understanding which business requires, looking to farming and marketing under the most favorable and desirable circumstances, unless he can cooperate with other farmers.

It is possible that this act does repeal the Sherman antitrust law in certain particulars, but I do not believe that is a necessary conclusion. I think it makes clear, I repeat, the decision of the Supreme Court as to undue restriction of trade. I know from my own experience that there should be a better understanding among the farmers. They should not, and they do not, ask Congress to pass laws which would give them improper advantages, such advantages as are condemned by the Sherman antitrust law.

I have known for many years, as I think all of us have known, that there are good and bad trusts or combinations. It has been very difficult to pass a general law which would discriminate between the good and the bad, and I have always opposed ever since I have been in Congress any general law or rule in the nature of law laid down by Congress which works to the disadvantage of a portion of the people of the United States.

Most of the special privileges which have been granted and which are asked for have resulted and will result in detriment to the beneficiaries whom it is sought to help, because our Government, if it is to endure, must deal justly and fairly with all of its citizens, and because a man happens to represent an agricultural constituency or a laboring constituency or a manufacturing constituency he has no right, in my judgment, to ask for a law which would be detrimental to the other reputable classes of the people.

I do not think this proposed law is detrimental to the general welfare, although I have at times been confused, as I have said, while listening to the arguments pro and con of men carried away with their zeal for their political standing in their States and communities, who have, it seems to me, gone far wide of the real purpose of this legislation.

Farmers I know anything about, those who have organized, are only asking for such rights as are absolutely essential to the successful performance of their profession. Without the right to determine the best market, without the right to cooperate in production and disposition of products, the farm will continue to be a very unprofitable, unsuccessful place where men and women can work.

Evidently there must be a middle ground. There must be a place where you can not apply the original doctrine of no combinations. But when we have that definition restricted, and the general good protected, as is the case in this bill, we are not only aiding the farmers, giving them what actually belongs to them, but we are aiding all of the people of the United States, because our hope as a nation and the hope of the world rests upon successful agriculture.

Of course, I want again to protest against the false doctrines which have been uttered here many times during this discussion, asking for improper things and claiming that this measure probably grants things which would be detrimental to all of the people of the United States. Of course, it is unnecessary, probably, for me to make this statement, but inasmuch as I was not able to complete the interrogatory which I submitted to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] I felt that it was important that I should make this statement.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask that the amendments of the Committee on the Judiciary may now be acted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the committee amendments in their order.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 9, strike out the words "Secretary of Agriculture" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Federal Trade Commission"; on line 13, after the word "thereof," strike out "he" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the commission"; on line 14, after the word "stating," strike out the word "is" and insert "its"; on line 25, strike out the words "Secretary of Agriculture" and insert the words "Federal Trade Commission"; and on page 3, line 8, strike out the words "Secretary of Agriculture" and insert the words "Federal Trade Commission," so as to make the first paragraph of section 2 read:

That if the Federal Trade Commission shall have reason to believe that any such association restrains trade or lessens competition to such an extent that the price of any agricultural product is unduly enhanced by reason thereof, the commission shall serve upon such association a complaint stating its charge in that respect, to which complaint shall be attached, or contained therein, a notice of hearing, specifying a day and place not less than 30 days after the service thereof, requiring the association to show cause why an order should not be made directing it to cease and desist from so restraining trade or lessening competition in such article. An association so complained of may at the time and place so fixed show cause why such order should not be entered. The evidence given on such a hearing shall be reduced to writing and made a part of the record therein. If upon such hearing the Federal Trade Commission shall be of the opinion that such association restrains trade or lessens competition to such an extent that the price of any agricultural product is, or is about to become, unduly enhanced thereby, it shall issue and cause to be served upon the association an order reciting the facts found by it, directing such association to cease and desist therefrom. If such association fails or neglects for 30 days to obey such order, the Federal Trade Commission shall file in the district court in which such association has its principal place of business a certified copy of the order and of all the records in the proceeding, together with a petition asking that the order be enforced, and shall give notice to the Attorney General and to said association of such filing. Such district court shall thereupon have jurisdiction to affirm, set aside, or modify said order, and may make rules as to pleadings and proceedings to be had in considering such order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, on page 3, line 18, to strike out the words "Secretary of Agriculture" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "Federal Trade Commission"; and on page 4, line 7, after the word "thereof," to strike out the proviso in the following words: "Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall apply to the organizations, or individual members thereof, described in section 6 of the act entitled 'An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' approved October 15, 1914, known as the Clayton Act," so as to make the second paragraph of section 2 read:

The facts found by the Federal Trade Commission and recited as set forth in said order shall be prima facie evidence of such facts, but either party may adduce additional evidence. The Department of Justice shall have charge of the enforcement of such order. After the order is so filed in such district court and while pending for review the district court may issue a temporary writ of injunction forbidding such association from violating such order or any part thereof. The court may upon conclusion of its hearing enforce such order by a permanent injunction or other appropriate remedy. Service of such complaint and of all notices may be made upon such association by service upon any officer or agent thereof engaged in carrying on its business, and such service shall be binding upon such association, the officers, and members thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a separate paragraph at the end of section 2:

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize the creation of, or attempt to create, a monopoly, or to exempt any association organized hereunder from any proceedings instituted under the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, on account of unfair methods of competition in commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This completes the amendments of the committee. The bill is as in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the fact that section 2 leaves to the Federal Trade Commission the power to fix the place at which a hearing on any complaint against one of these associations or corporations should be held. I think it quite important that the hearing should be held in the county where such association or corporation has its principal office, and I desire to suggest that we add, on page 2, in line 20, after the word "article," the following words:

And the place named for the hearing shall be the county of the principal office of such association or corporation.

Mr. NELSON. I think that is a good amendment and should be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 20, after the word "article," insert the following words:

And the place named for the hearing shall be the county of the principal office of such association or corporation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that he place the word "within" after the words "shall be."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is better. It will then read, "shall be within the county of the principal office," and so forth.

Mr. KING. May I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that I can conceive of cases where the operations of the organization might be in some county outside of the one within which it was organized, and the interests of the public, as well as the interests of the persons being investigated, might best be served——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The principal office would necessarily be the place from which it conducted its principal business.

Mr. KING. Suppose the charge is that a certain corporation has unduly restrained trade, or has improperly prohibited competition, and that its activities in which it has offended the statute have been in some other county than that in which the headquarters of the organization are located. Does the Senator think that, notwithstanding that fact, the hearing should be in the county where is the principal office of the corporation?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The general rule is that a corporation is proceeded against at its principal office, and I think it hardly possible to conceive that one of these associations could have its principal activities outside of the county of its existence. I really believe that this plan for jurisdiction is best.

Mr. KING. I can conceive of many corporations which might be formed under the bill whose sales and the marketing of and the processing of whose products might be outside of the State, even, in which the corporation is formed. I do not think the Federal Trade Commission has abused the authority which it now has in conducting such hearings, and to compel it to institute its investigation in a given county might be unwise and might be prejudicial to the interests of the Government.

I express no opinion, because the matter has not occurred to me before; but it seemed to me we could well afford, if the bill is to pass, to leave the Federal Trade Commission unlimited authority to conduct the examination where the interests of the public would best be served.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would be willing to modify the amendment to the extent of saying "the Federal judicial district." I think that would certainly broaden it sufficiently, if that modification would be acceptable to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I make no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, but it seems to me that there may be cases in which, if the amendment shall obtain, the investigation would cost a very much greater sum than otherwise.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would like to ask the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] if he thinks it would be sufficient to say "within the Federal judicial district"?

Mr. NELSON. That would be satisfactory.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I will change the amendment so as to read "Federal judicial district."

Mr. NELSON. It would allow the hearing to be held within the Federal judicial district where the parties or the headquarters of the association were located, instead of dragging them all here to Washington before the Trade Commission. I think it is a good amendment modified in that way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 20, after the word "article," insert a comma and the words:

and the place named for the hearing shall be within the Federal judicial district in which the principal office of such association or corporation is located.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. NELSON, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. OVERMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

PROTECTION OF MATERNITY AND INFANCY.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3259) for the public protection of maternity and infancy and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I do not know that it will have any parliamentary effect, but I gave notice on yesterday that immediately upon the completion of the pending legislation I would ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3390) to provide further for the national defense; to establish a self-sustaining Federal agency for the manufacture, production, and development of the products of atmospheric nitrogen for military, experimental, and other purposes; to provide research laboratories and experimental plants for the development of fixed-nitrogen production, and for other purposes.

As I stated, I gave notice that I would call up this bill, and I hope the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] will allow it to be taken up at this time. I do not think it will take very much time to dispose of it.

Mr. SMOOT. It can not be passed to-night, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; but we could make it the unfinished business, so that it could be discussed.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not any objection to that at all.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not ask to take it up for the purpose of trying to pass it to-night, unless everyone is of the same opinion that I am, and that does not seem to be the case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will say that while the notice of the Senator from South Carolina was purely informal and not binding, the Chair was under a misapprehension. The Chair thought the Senator from South Carolina said "at the close of the unfinished business."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I meant the bill which has just been passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not understand it. The Chair having recognized the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], and he having moved to take up the other bill, the Chair must put that motion.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the Senator from Maryland perhaps will yield for this nitrate bill to come up with the understanding that if it develops too much opposition we may take some other action.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator from South Carolina yield? Was not the Senator's notice that he would move to take up his bill following the packers bill?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; I meant when the bill which we have been discussing to-day was disposed of. That was my intent. My language may have been unfortunate. I want to be perfectly frank. I considered the bill we have just disposed of to be the unfinished business.

I think we can reach an agreement with reference to this matter. If the Senator from Maryland will withdraw his motion, I am sure that whatever is to be done in reference to this bill will be developed directly as to what disposition shall be made of it. I have no desire to retard the passage of his bill any more than he would have a desire to retard the passage of my bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This was the language of the Senator from South Carolina on December 14:

I wish to take this occasion to serve notice on the Senate that when the unfinished business is disposed of—

And so forth.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I was thinking that the Nelson bill was the unfinished business. That was my purpose.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Maryland, as these seem to be the two bills contending for the right of way, that some of the Members on this side are very anxious to get early consideration of the nitrate bill which the Senator from South Carolina is seeking to call up, and possibly we might reach an agreement, if that bill be taken up as the unfinished business, that the Senator from South Carolina might lay it aside temporarily and allow the Senator from Maryland to proceed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I would be very glad to do that.

Mr. FRANCE. As I have made my motion, I would be glad to have that motion prevail, and then I shall be very glad to lay my bill aside temporarily and allow the Senator from South Carolina to proceed, with the understanding that if his bill promises to occupy an undue amount of time he will again yield to my measure.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Just to be perfectly frank each with the other, the situation is this: I am not sure that the bill which the Senator from Maryland is seeking to have considered will pass very shortly. I do not know of any very serious opposition to it. If the nitrate bill is made the unfinished business, and it promises to have some opposition, I shall be very glad to ask to have it temporarily laid aside and allow the other bill to receive whatever consideration it is entitled to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is now 10 minutes past 4 and I did not expect either one of the bills to be called up to-night. I have not the papers here to go on with a discussion of either measure. I do not intend to take very much time on either of them. I have no disposition whatever to interfere with the passage of either, except to the extent of speaking briefly and giving my views. I would very much prefer, if there is going to be discussion to-night, and I am compelled to speak, to take up the maternity bill; but I think there will be no time saved at this time of day by taking up either bill. Therefore, it seems to me that if we allow the maternity bill to be made the unfinished business and then adjourn, and take up the bill to which the Senator from South Carolina refers in the morning hour to-morrow, perhaps we could finish it in those two hours.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator from Utah that the nitrate bill has practically a unanimous report of the committee so far as I know. I think it undoubtedly has the votes here, but it is likely to bring on some discussion. It could not be disposed of to-night, and the Senator would have time enough anyway; but if it is taken up, why not let one of the bills be discussed to-night?

Mr. SMOOT. It is so late now that we can not do much on either one of them, and it seems to me there would be no time gained. Let us make the maternity bill the unfinished business.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It will only take a moment to do as the Senator from Alabama suggests. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] is perfectly willing that that course shall be taken, and I therefore move, if he will allow me, to take up the bill to which I have referred, the nitrate bill. Then I will ask that it be temporarily laid aside to allow him to go on with his bill whenever he sees fit.

Mr. FRANCE. That course is agreeable to me.

Mr. SMOOT. To make the nitrate bill the unfinished business?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Why not do it the other way?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I wish to suggest that we ought to be perfectly frank. I think the bill which the Senator from South Carolina has in charge is a bill which will require some time. There will be some considerable discussion on it. I hope the Senator from Maryland will not insist on his motion at this time. I do not like to be put in the position of voting against his motion, but I would have to vote against it at this particular time, and I think others who are friendly to his measure are in the same situation. I believe the bill reported by the Senator from South Carolina should at this time be made the unfinished business and that we can save time by doing that. I sincerely hope the Senator from South Carolina will so move.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know what time the Senator will save by doing that. I can not see it. If I were the Senator from Maryland and wanted my bill passed—and there is no particular opposition to it that I know of—I would move to make it the unfinished business. I do not think there is any disposition on the part of anyone to stop the passage of either one of the bills. Simply because the Senator from North Dakota thinks that the farmers of the country are interested in one bill, and the women of the country are interested in the other, perhaps the bill in which the farmers are interested should be first disposed of.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course the Senator from Utah knows a great deal more than does the Senator from North Dakota——

Mr. SMOOT. I never stated that.

Mr. GRONNA. Just a moment. But the Senator from Utah must not speak for the Senator from North Dakota. The Senator from North Dakota has taken considerable time to study the bill which is now being presented to the Senate. Let me say to the Senator from Utah that I know—and I state it in good faith—that the bill will require some discussion. On the other hand, the bill which is now desired to be considered by the Senator from Maryland I do not believe will consume as much time as will the other measure. For that reason I stated that we could save time by first considering the latter measure.

Mr. SMOOT. I think in all probability it will take more time to consider the bill of the Senator from Maryland than the one now pending.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I desire to state to Senators on the other side of the Chamber that I think I am entitled to at least ordinary courtesy. Although my language was, perhaps, unfortunate when I made the statement that I would call up the nitrate bill immediately upon the conclusion of the unfinished business, I had reference, of course, to the bill that was then being discussed and not to the packers bill, for I knew that that bill would involve, perhaps, a long-drawn-out discussion. It now transpires that the day for a vote on that bill has been fixed as the 24th of January.

It is a simple matter of courtesy. If Senators think I am trying to take a short cut on anybody, I desire to say that I have never done that since I have been in the Senate, and I am not going to do so now. I gave notice in good faith that I would call the bill up. Other Senators may have misunderstood the matter. If they have, I desire to say that there is not any sinister motive on my part to try to rush this bill through and to be discourteous to the Senator from Maryland. I have had no such intention.

Mr. SMOOT. No one has accused the Senator from South Carolina of that.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; but they have intimated it and have suggested that the Senator from Maryland stand on his rights. Of course, the Senator from Maryland has his rights, and so have I mine; but there is such a thing as courtesy in these matters.

I gave notice that when the time came I should ask for the consideration of my bill. I tried to explain the matter to the Senator from Maryland. I am perfectly willing to take my chances when the time comes. That is all I ask. I gave the notice in good faith that I would ask that the bill be taken up. That is all there is to it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator from South Carolina take the position that any Senator can get to his feet and give notice that he is going to call up any particular bill, and that that gives him any right?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; it merely gives him the right to have the matter discussed; and if the Senate does not desire to take the bill up, it may reject the request. It has, however, been a custom of the Senate ever since I have been here for a Senator to make a motion in accordance with his notice and then for the Senate to do as it pleased in regard to the matter.

Mr. LENROOT. I have not observed that.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have observed it ever since I have been here, and I have been here some time.

Mr. SMOOT. A Senator has the right to give any notice he sees fit, if he is recognized by the Chair.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As a matter of course I understand that, and so does every other Senator; but it has been the custom here that if a Senator were interested in a measure and he gave notice that he was going to make the effort to have it considered, he might have the privilege of doing so, and then if Senators desired to vote the request down, they voted it down.

Mr. TOWNSEND. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan will state it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What is the motion now pending before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the motion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3259, which motion is debatable after 2 o'clock.

Mr. FRANCE rose.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Maryland wishes to make a statement and desires to withdraw the request, I have no objection, but the matter rests with him.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, under the circumstances and out of courtesy to the Senator from South Carolina, I will withdraw the bill for which I desire consideration, with the understanding that when he obtains consent for the consideration of his bill he will ask that it may be laid aside in order that the Senate may immediately proceed to the consideration of the bill which I have in charge.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is exactly the understanding which I had with the Senator from Maryland, and, dealing with him, I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3390.

Mr. SMOOT. Just a word. There can be no understanding that a Senator shall not make objection to the laying aside of the unfinished business.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I did not make any such statement.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from South Carolina can not make such an agreement. I simply make that statement, not because I intend to object to laying the unfinished business aside, but merely for the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I must amend my statement. I never intimated any such thing as that suggested by the Senator from Utah. I said the understanding was that I would make the motion temporarily to lay my bill aside when its consideration should have been agreed to. The Senator from Utah if he desires to object, of course, will have the right to do so.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah had no reference to the Senator from South Carolina. The Senator from Maryland stated that he would withdraw his bill with the understanding that the unfinished business should be temporarily laid aside whenever it was desired to discuss his bill. Now, such an understanding as that can not be had.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah allow me to say a word?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know what disposition the Senate is going to make of the nitrate bill. This side of the Chamber wishes a vote on it ultimately at a reasonable date. Our disposition is not to interfere with the business of the majority of the Senate, and we shall not do so, if we receive reasonable treatment at their hands. If we do not, we shall use the parliamentary tactics that are available to us. We want to help the Senators on the other side of the Chamber to conduct their business.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], however, the other day gave what he considered a proper notice, although he may have made a mistake in its technique. If the Senate does not desire the bill to which he refers considered, of course, it will vote the motion down. We have no disposition in the world to stand in the way of the motion of the Senator from Maryland nor to prevent his having consideration of his bill, but we do think that we are entitled to the right of way for the nitrate bill. I think the Senate had better run along in such a manner that Senators on this side of the Chamber may work in harmony with those on the other side and attend to business; we are desirous of doing so; but when a Senator on this side gives a notice—it is true that his notice does not carry anything that is legal and binding; it has no binding effect; but we do recognize the courtesy between the sides—I do not think objection should come from the other side of the Chamber, when we are attempting to help the majority in transacting their business.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Alabama I have not any doubt that both the bills referred to will pass within the next 24 hours.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, why not let us have the courtesy of the consideration of the measure to which we think we are entitled?

Mr. SMOOT. That rests entirely with the Senator from Maryland, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator from Maryland is willing that that be done and has so announced.

ATMOSPHERIC NITROGEN.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3390.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3390) to provide further for the national defense; to establish a self-sustaining Federal agency for the manufacture, production, and development of the products of atmospheric nitrogen for military, experimental, and other purposes; to provide research laboratories and experimental plants for the development of fixed-nitrogen production, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Now I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROTECTION OF MATERNITY AND INFANCY.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, as the unfinished business has been temporarily laid aside, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 602, being Senate bill 3259, or I will ask unanimous consent to that effect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3259) for the public protection of maternity and infancy and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, with an amendment.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I think we can very quickly pass this bill. I think that when the Senate has made up its mind to pass a measure debate is really useless, and vice versa; and I think that the Senate has really made up its mind to pass this measure, because it is a measure which I am sure commends itself to Senators.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. KING. I object.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Maryland that I have an amendment which I desire to offer to the bill and to have printed and lie on the table. When I shall have done that I am going to suggest to the Senator that after the reading of the bill we adjourn until to-morrow. There is, I think, no Senator ready to discuss the measure now, unless the Senator himself desires to speak to-night.

Mr. FRANCE. I do not desire to discuss the bill at length.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that time will be saved in that way.

Mr. FRANCE. But I thought that we might be able to pass the bill this evening.

Mr. SMOOT. We can not do that.

Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and ask that it be read, printed, and lie on the table.

The amendment proposed by Mr. SMOOT was read and ordered to be printed and lie on the table, as follows:

On page 1 strike out all of line 10, and on page 2 strike out lines 1, 2, and 3 and substitute therefor the following: "For the use of the Children's Bureau, for the promotion of maternal and infant hygiene, for the administration of this act, and for the purpose of making such studies, investigations, and reports as will further the efficient administration of this act."

On pages 3 and 4 strike out all of section 3 and substitute therefor the following:

"SEC. 3. The Chief of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, acting through the agency of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor (hereinafter called the Children's Bureau), shall be charged with the carrying out of the provisions of this act and the Chief of the Children's Bureau shall be the executive officer. The Chief of the Children's Bureau or executive officer is hereby authorized to form an advisory committee to consult with the Chief of the Children's Bureau and to advise concerning any problems which may arise in connection with the carrying out of the provisions of this act, such advisory committee to consist of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and the United States Commissioner of Education. The Children's Bureau shall have charge of all matters concerning the administration of this act and shall have power to cooperate with the State board authorized to carry out the provisions of this act. It shall be the duty of the Children's Bureau to make or cause to be made such studies, investigations, and reports as will promote the efficient administration of this act."

On page 4, line 14, and wherever thereafter they appear in the bill, strike out the words, "Federal board" and substitute therefor the words "Children's Bureau."

On page 4, line 24, insert, after the word "women," the following words: "all of the members of which advisory committee shall serve without compensation."

On page 7, line 8, after the word "medical," insert the following, "or other suitable remedial measures."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 16, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 15, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Rev. Akaiko Akana, D. D., chaplain of the Senate of Hawaii, offered the following prayer:

Our God and our Father, whose sacred majesty is hallowed on the lips of men and before whose awe-inspiring presence we bow with humble submission: It is with the deepest and keenest sense of gratitude that we pause for a few moments and, in the attitude of prayer, turn to Thee with our special petition for Thy special guidance in and blessing upon the deliberations of this House for this day. We thank Thee for the special privilege and for the sacred honor with which this body of men is crowned of serving as lawmakers for this great Nation of America. Because of the gigantic proportions of its tasks, and the far-reaching moral obligation involved therein, we sincerely pray for Thy wisdom, "lest we forget." Great nations had been in existence before America. They had risen skyward in the splendor of their accomplishment and in the glory of their might. But, because God was forgotten, they fell, and, to-day, the remnant of their broken structures lie heaped upon the ruins of desolation with their names buried beneath and spelled in cold letters on the pages of history. Therefore, let us never forget the verdict of experience, and let our effort be richly blessed with the saneness of Thy counsel; and may the outcome of our endeavor for this day be the transcript of the divine mind and will. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the roll of the committees.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It is obvious there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Fess	Kettner	Nelson, Wis.
Babka	Fields	Kincheloe	Newton, Mo.
Baer	Focht	King	Nolan
Blackmon	Frear	Kitchin	O'Connell

The SPEAKER. On this vote 316 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to suspend further proceedings under the call. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the roll of committees.

The Clerk called the Committee on Agriculture.

EXPERIMENT VINEYARDS NEAR FRESNO AND OAKVILLE, CALIF.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 13402.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, calls up the bill H. R. 13402. This bill is on the Union Calendar. The House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] to please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13402, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13402) for the purchase of land occupied by experiment vineyards near Fresno and Oakville, Calif.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, let the bill be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase and acquire the lands occupied by the department's experiment vineyards near Fresno and Oakville, Calif., now maintained under contracts with the owners of said lands: Provided, That the land purchased for the Fresno vineyard shall not exceed 20 acres at a cost not to exceed $12,000 and for the Oakville vineyard not to exceed 20 acres at a cost not to exceed $15,000; for the payment of which the sum of $27,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is the purchase of land occupied by experiment stations maintained by the Government in California. There are two tracts, having 20 acres in each tract. It will insure the continuation of these experiments conducted by the Department of Agriculture there.

Mr. WINGO. I have listened to the reading of this bill, and it seems this is a bill for the Government to buy somebody's vineyards. Is there any connection between the effect of prohibition on the vine-growing industry and the desire to unload these vineyards on the Government?

Mr. HAUGEN. Evidently there is a less demand for land on which to grow grapes for wine.

Mr. WINGO. If it were not so, why should Uncle Sam take it off their hands.

Mr. HAUGEN. The Department of Agriculture has carried on experiments for about 15 years on the two tracts and there are some 700 varieties of grape stock planted on these two tracts.

Mr. WINGO. Is it advisable for the Government to continue experiments in wine growing?

Mr. HAUGEN. Not for making wine, but raisin grapes and grapes for the table.

Mr. WINGO. Raisins? [Laughter.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Not for drink, but for food.

Mr. WINGO. What is the price to be paid?

Mr. HAUGEN. Six hundred dollars an acre for one tract and $750 an acre for the other.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. BRITTEN. As I understand the bill, it is for the purchase of experimental stations that have been used by the Government?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; for the purchase of the land on which the experiment stations are located.

Mr. BRITTEN. Was the land bare when the Government took it over, and has the land been developed by the Government?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; it has been developed by the Government for 15 years. It is held under contract by the Government.

Mr. BRITTEN. I would like to know what this land was worth when the Government took it over for experimental purposes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I can not answer that question, except to say that the representation is that $600 an acre is a very reasonable price. Of course, we do not authorize the payment of $600 an acre, but carry an appropriation sufficient to pay $600 an acre.

Mr. BRITTEN. What I am trying to develop is the fact that the Government has used this land for 15 years for experimental purposes, and the Government evidently has developed the land in this experimental manner. Now, in the development of these experiment stations has the Government also increased the value of the land?

Mr. HAUGEN. I can not answer that question. As stated in the report—

These experiment vineyards now contain approximately 700 varieties of grape stocks collected from all the vine-growing regions of the world. They constitute the largest and most valuable collection of grape varieties now known to exist. Their value for experimental and scientific purposes can not readily be estimated.

Mr. BRITTEN. Then, to go a little further, what is the necessity of purchasing land at this time, after the Government has had possession of it practically for 15 years?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is in order to continue the experiments. The contention is that the lease is about to be terminated and that the experiments that have been carried on there will cease unless the land is purchased and many of the collections that can not be removed will be lost.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman please tell us under what conditions the land was leased? Can the gentleman tell the House?

Mr. HAUGEN. I rather questioned the authority to lease the land. A mistake may have been made, but the question now is whether we will continue the experiments. My belief is that the department should not have leased the land without authority of Congress or at least without conferring with Congress first.

Mr. BRITTEN. How has the department leased the land for 15 years?

Mr. HAUGEN. It has been leased for 15 years and the experiments have been carried on for that time.

Mr. BRITTEN. And it is deemed wise now to continue these experiments at these two stations?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is believed that the experiments hitherto carried on should be continued.

Mr. BRITTEN. But the gentleman can not tell what the land was worth when the Government took the land over?

Mr. CURRY of California rose.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY].

Mr. BRITTEN. Does the gentleman from California desire to make a statement on the merits of this bill now?

Mr. CURRY of California. I desire to answer your question now.

Mr. BRITTEN. What I wished to develop through my question, propounded to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] just now and now to the gentleman from California, is as to the purchase of this land at this particular time for experimental purposes, when it is shown that the Government has held the land for 15 years for experimental purposes, and evidently has developed the value that is now in that particular land to some $600 or $700 an acre. I would like to know just whether it is necessary to buy the land at this particular time and why the Government, if it is to continue its experiments, should buy this land which has been under lease for the past 15 years.

Mr. CURRY of California. I will answer that question. The land is for sale. The people who own the land were engaged in the growing of wine grapes. The land in the neighborhood of this experiment station has been sold for $800 and $900 an acre. The lease on this land was from year to year. The value of the land has been developed by the people who owned the land in the neighborhood. It was practically given to the Federal Government at a small lease, the Government maintaining one or two men there to have the control of the scientific part of the experiment. The people who owned the land provided the horses and machinery, and they cultivated it and took care of it, charging the Government the exact cost.

Prohibition has come into effect, and the wine industry is dead. We are not trying to make any wine in my State—at least not in my part of the State. There are over 340,000 acres of vineyards in California, about 160,000 acres in wine grapes and the rest in table grapes or in raisin grapes.

Of course, the second and third crop and the culls of the raisin grapes and sweet grapes were used for sweet wine. That is not being done any more. Now, it is proposed, if the experiment station is continued, that these 160,000 acres of wine grapes may be grafted so that they may produce Zante currants and table grapes and other kinds of grapes. It takes four years and $300 an acre to develop a vineyard. There are over $200,000,000 invested in the vineyards in California—not in the wine industry, but in the lands and in the vineyards themselves. The people who own these vineyards went into the business at the express request of the Federal Government. The Department of Agriculture sent and still sends men out to California to advise that this, that, and the other kind of European grapes should be grown in that State. Almost all of this land is in 20, 40, 60, and 80 acre tracts. It is owned by men who have gone onto the bare land and developed it into productive vineyards, making homes for themselves, and—which may surprise some people—building up fine moral communities, where we have some of the best schools and best churches and as moral people as there are in this country. So far as the wine industry is concerned, that industry has been destroyed by prohibition. I think it is nothing but right for this Congress to continue the experiment stations to be maintained by this Government, so that these people may have the advice of the best thought in the Department of Agriculture, that they may go out there and continue these experiment stations and employ these men and to say to these people out there, "On this kind of a wine grape you can graft the Zante currant. On that kind of a wine grape you may graft a raisin grape, and on this kind of a wine grape you may graft a table grape," and permit these people to have the use and benefit of the experiment station. It will not cost much, and it will save this great industry by diverting it to the growing of grapes for raisins and table grapes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BRITTEN. I heard the statement in California this fall that wine grapes brought more since prohibition went into effect than ever before. I want to ask the gentleman from California if that statement is correct?

Mr. CURRY of California. That is absolutely correct, and the reason for that is that some people have induced some of the folks who live in the East to believe that under the Volstead Act they can buy California grapes and make wine at home, and they can not do it legally.

Mr. BRITTEN. That being true, the value of these vineyards is not being destroyed.

Mr. CURRY of California. Absolutely, because the gentleman knows as well as I do that wine will not be made from wine grapes; that the usefulness of the wine vineyards is destroyed; that they will have to be grafted to other grapes or pulled up or else we will have to change the law.

Mr. BRITTEN. One more question.

Mr. CURRY of California. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Why can not the Government go ahead with its experiment station under the lease rather than purchase it at this time?

Mr. CURRY of California. Because they can not lease this land. It is for sale. There are offers for it now. It is being held to find out whether the Government will buy it or will not buy it. The land can not be leased.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman if this is not the same item that went out of the Agricultural appropriation bill in the last session on a point of order which I made against the appropriation?

Mr. HAUGEN. Exactly.

Mr. BLANTON. And that bill went to the Senate, where, if the Senate had thought this was a deserving item, it could have been placed back in the bill, and then it would not have been subject to a point of order on the return of the bill to the House.

Mr. HAUGEN. My recollection is that it was inserted in the Senate, but, in view of the fact that it was new legislation, the conferees did not feel warranted in agreeing to it. They felt that it should be dealt with in the regular way. The committee has reported this bill favorably, and it is now properly before the House.

Mr. BLANTON. It is proposed here to pay $750 an acre for land which our colleague from California tells us was turned over to the Government 15 years ago for scientific experimental purposes, which we all know were carried on for the benefit and in the interest of these very grape growers in California. Our colleague from California likewise tells us that it costs $300 an acre to put land in a state of grape cultivation such as the Government has put this land into.

Mr. CURRY of California. I beg the gentleman's pardon; the Government did not put this land in this condition. It was put there by private people who own the lands, and what the Government did was to pay the wages of this labor.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman admits that the Government did pay the wages of the labor. The Government has put a particular kind of grapes on it for experimental purposes, a variety of 700 different kinds. If the gentleman from California will look at some of the appropriation bills passed during the last 15 years, he will find that a good sum of money has been spent by the department for experimentation in California.

Mr. CURRY of California. There is no such item.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, we are called upon, after the use of this land by the Government in the interest of these private parties, to purchase it of the grape growers for $750 an acre, when the value of grape lands in California has likely gone down.

Mr. CURRY of California. I beg the gentleman's pardon; the value has not gone down.

Mr. BLANTON. I understood it had gone down, but if not, then prohibition has been a wonderful advantage to the grape growers rather than a disadvantage.

Mr. CURRY of California. I have tried to explain that. The wine grapes have been bringing big prices this year, but will not next year. Where we have wine grapes the vines will have to be pulled up unless we can find something to do with the stock.

Mr. BLANTON. I am with the gentleman on the proposition that the Government owes it to these people to help them change their wine grapes to some other kind by experimentation. It should show how to use the land in growing other grapes salable under the law. I am with the gentleman thus far. But for us to say that the people of California who need this experimentation carried on, who need that much help—for us to say that there is any probability of the people of California taking the land away from the Government when the Government is seeking to help them, and that we ought to pay $750 an acre for it, is absurd, and compel us to pay indirect taxes on the property from now on.

Mr. CURRY of California. The gentleman from Texas is a lawyer, and I suppose he knows that Government property can not be taxed.

Mr. BLANTON. They find a way to indirectly tax Government property in the District of Columbia by making the Government pay half of all the expenses here.

Mr. HAUGEN. The land has been used without rental. These people furnished the labor, equipment, and live stock. They were reimbursed only for the actual cost. So the land has been used without rental. I think it is fair to continue it, considering the large expenditure made upon the land.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. What is the estimated yearly appropriation that will be necessary if this land is purchased by the Government?

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman will turn to page 1362 of the hearings he will find that it is proposed to buy 36 acres, with the buildings, and so forth, for $14,650 at Fresno, and 30 acres at $750 an acre, with the buildings, fences, and so forth, at a cost of $39,850, at Oakville.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman has not answered my question. My question is, After we have purchased it, how much yearly appropriation will be necessary to maintain them?

Mr. HAUGEN. The appropriations are made annually for the support of the department and its activities. Appropriation for this station will be carried in the item for experimental stations. It will be up to Congress to determine the amount.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does not the gentleman have any idea of what it would cost?

Mr. CURRY of California. Probably three or four thousand dollars a year.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I notice a statement in the report to the effect that these stations were established specifically to eliminate a disease which the grapes had, and the experiments have been conducted for the last 15 years. Have they found any remedy?

Mr. CURRY of California. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The State of California is quite extensive and is a prosperous and rich State. These experimentations are carried on largely for the benefit of the State of California. I spent some time in California this year, and the Californians took great pride in pointing out to me the fact that land which was worth $5 and $6 an acre years ago is now worth $700 or $1,000 an acre. What I want to know is, if I understand the conditions correctly, why, if California wants these experiments for its own use, it should not buy this land and carry on its own experiments?

Mr. HAUGEN. The same rule might apply to all other Federal experiment stations. The Government has purchased land and maintained experiment stations at Mandan, N. Dak., Chico, Calif., Bethesda, Md., and Beltsville, Md.

Mr. SNYDER. But this applies particularly to these vineyards where the experiments are particularly for the State of California.

Mr. HAUGEN. We have experiment stations all over the United States. This is in harmony with the other appropriations.

Mr. SNYDER. My idea with reference to this matter is that in any other State where experiments have been carried on to the extent they have here, where the benefits of that experimentation is wholly within the State, the Government can well afford to discontinue appropriations of this kind.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. HUSTED. Are these the only vineyards where experimental grape culture can be carried on?

Mr. HAUGEN. There were a number of other experiment stations in California. My understanding is, however, that now the other stations have been abandoned and the experiments confined to these two.

Mr. HUSTED. If there are several other stations where experimental work can be carried on, are those places owned by the Government?

Mr. HAUGEN. No.

Mr. HUSTED. What is the necessity for establishing these stations?

Mr. HAUGEN. They are not now owned by the Government, although the Government has many experiments in progress on them.

Mr. CURRY of California. There were nine experiment stations in California. In the interest of economy and to centralize efforts, all of the other stations were to be abandoned, and have been, and these two retained, simply because it will cost the Government less money and that probably as much can be done. So far as experiment stations are concerned, there is no State in the Union where the Agricultural Department does not maintain experiment stations.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURRY of California. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Does the State of California carry on any experiments with respect to the growing of grape vines, and so forth, on its own account?

Mr. CURRY of California. The State of California, at the University of California and also on the State farm at Davis, carries on experiment stations for all kinds of agriculture.

Mr. SNYDER. Of course, I can appreciate the advantage of having an experiment station——

Mr. CURRY of California. I believe the gentleman's own State, at its university and on the State farms, carries on experiment stations.

Mr. SNYDER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CURRY of California. And I also know that in the gentleman's own State there are a half dozen experiment stations carried on by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SNYDER. But I say to the gentleman now that if one of those should come into this Hall while I am here, asking that it be taken over by the Federal Government, and I have the opportunity to do so, I shall vote against any such appropriation, and insist that the State of New York shall carry on its own experimentations, where the experiment is wholly in the interest of the State.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR].

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I think I can briefly explain the purpose of this bill so that it will be readily understood by everyone. There are many reasons why this legislation should pass, but there is one special reason which seems to me should appeal to everyone. It is that this is a business proposition which confronts us. As stated by my colleague [Mr. CURRY], these experiment vineyards were started in California about 15 years ago. At that time the vineyard industry in that State had not reached the high state of development in which it now exists. The vineyardists were confronted with a disease known as phylloxera, which was sweeping the vineyards of the State, causing untold destruction and disaster. This disease had gained such headway that large tracts of land, hundreds of acres, looked as though they had been swept by fire. It was at that time that the matter was taken up with the Department of Agriculture with the idea of establishing experiment stations in the State for the purpose of investigation to discover, if possible, resistant stocks which would be immune from this disease. The California Wine Association at that time was engaged in the manufacture of wine and also in the production of wine grapes. It had a large acreage of land in the State, and it turned over to the Department of Agriculture these two tracts which by this bill it is now proposed to buy. One tract of 20 acres lies just outside the city of Fresno and one is situated near Oakville, in the district of my colleague from California, Mr. CURRY.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Did the wine association own this land?

Mr. BARBOUR. The California Wine Association is a private corporation. It owned the land.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does it still own the land?

Mr. BARBOUR. It still owns the land.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then these are not individual farmers.

Mr. BARBOUR. I think one would call the California Wine Association an individual farmer. It is a private corporation. I presume it would come within the class of individual farmers. If I may proceed with my statement, I think the gentleman from Illinois will understand the situation fully.

Mr. CURRY of California. The association has sold all of the land that it owned in that county with the exception of these 15 acres.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is the fact.

Mr. CURRY of California. And does not own an acre of land otherwise at the present time.

Mr. BARBOUR. When the Department of Agriculture took over these stations their experts gathered vineyard stock from all parts of the world. They have at this Fresno station, and also at the one at Oakville, over 700 varieties of grape stocks that have been gathered at great expense from all parts of the world. It is with these stocks that they are experimenting, not only for the benefit of the vineyardists of California, but I am told by an expert of the Department of Agriculture who has particular charge of these vineyards that this work is carried on for the benefit of grape growers throughout the United States. The California Wine Association has gone out of the wine manufacturing business. This formerly was its principal activity, and it has disposed of these lands because the manufacture of wine has been prohibited. The association has sold these tracts of land which it owned and upon which these experiments were carried on by the Department of Agriculture. The Government paid no rental, but simply reimbursed the California Wine Association for the work it actually did and for the use of its horses and implements.

The Fresno vineyard, which included the station near Fresno, has been sold for a price much larger than $600 per acre, the price provided for in this bill. The manager of the California Wine Association called to see me at my office when I was at home during the recess and told me that the association has taken back, as a payment on the entire purchase price, these 20 acres which it is proposed by this legislation to buy. The man who purchased the California Wine Association's holdings at this place is not willing to hold it for the benefit of the Government. He is not willing that these experiments should be conducted and carried on there. In other words, he wants to realize something on the value of his property. So the association has arranged with him to take back, as a payment on the purchase price of the entire tract, these 20 acres and give him credit on the purchase price. The association is now holding this tract awaiting the outcome of this legislation.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. GARD. What is the object of having the Government permanently acquire these tracts of land now?

Mr. BARBOUR. That is the only way in which this work can be carried on. There are about 700 varieties of grapes on the land. To an individual vineyardist it would not have any commercial value whatever, for the reason that there are all kinds of grapes growing there—wine grapes, table grapes, sweet grapes, sour grapes, and many other kinds. There is no uniform crop produced. It is merely an experiment station. It is highly cultivated, lies within about 3 miles of a city of 45,000 inhabitants, within a mile of the electric car line, and within a half mile of a paved highway. The price of the land is very reasonable as fixed by this bill.

Mr. GARD. What I am trying to arrive at is the necessity for maintaining this as an experiment station permanently. I see from the report that it has been experimented with out there for 15 years.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Doubtless in that time they have found the cause of this disease called phylloxera, have they not?

Mr. BARBOUR. I have been informed by representatives of the Department of Agriculture that they have found stocks that will resist phylloxera in certain soils in California. We have many kinds and varieties of soil. What will resist the disease in one soil will not do so in another. It is for the purpose not only of carrying on experiments with vine diseases, but also of developing stocks that can be grown profitably in California and in other parts of the United States that these experiments are being carried on. They are also experimenting for the purpose of finding new uses for the grapes, and also new products into which they can be manufactured. Experiments are also carried on for the purpose of discovering grape stocks that can be grafted to the wine-grape roots.

Mr. GARD. What is the price of wine grapes per ton in California now?

Mr. BARBOUR. The price of wine grapes per ton right now?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Well, I could not state what they are selling for right now, but they ran over $100 a ton this fall.

Mr. GARD. What was the price a year and a half ago?

Mr. BARBOUR. A year and a half ago it was not nearly so much as that.

Mr. GARD. What was the approximate price?

Mr. BARBOUR. Probably not over $15 or $20 a ton.

Mr. GARD. And now the price of wine grapes is $160 a ton?

Mr. BARBOUR. But the reason for that, if the gentleman from Ohio will permit, is as stated by my colleague from California [Mr. CURRY]; some of these grapes are being dried and some are sold in what we call in the green state, as distinguished from those that are dried. These grapes are being shipped east and elsewhere, some dried and some green.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-seven minutes.

Mr. GARD. Give the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. BARBOUR. Three minutes will be sufficient, if I can finish in that time.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be allowed 10 minutes additional; a good many of us want some of the information which he can furnish.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will yield the gentleman 5 minutes.

Mr. BARBOUR. These grapes, both dried and green, are being largely shipped out of California. As my colleague stated, somebody has convinced some one else that it is permissible under the Volstead Act to buy these grapes, take them to their homes, and manufacture wine. Recently there appeared an article in the papers that this is illegal and that as soon as the revenue officials are in a position to do so they are going to enforce the law against this form of home brew, as we might call it, made from grapes.

Mr. GARD. And prohibit the sale of malt and hops also.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes. We do not consider the existing situation as to wine grapes at all permanent. While wine grapes have been bringing a great deal more since prohibition became effective——

Mr. GARD. The gentleman stated they are bringing ten times as much. I am only concerned if they have such value at this time, and prospectively their value I suspect will increase as the thirst increases, why the necessity for continuing any experimentation when experiments have all been arrived at, when the source of this disease has been traced out, and as far as I can see there is no further need for experimentation, why the Government should continue the experimentation at either of these places when there is no experimentation necessary?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio that I am advised by the Department of Agriculture that these experiments for the purpose of resisting phylloxera have not been completed. They have discovered some resistant stocks——

Mr. GARD. What is the nature of the contract now between the Government and the California Wine Association about this land?

Mr. BARBOUR. So far as the Fresno vineyard is concerned there is no contract. It might be described as a gentlemen's agreement between the Government and the California Wine Association.

Mr. GARD. The report says they are now proceeding under contracts near Fresno and Oakville, Calif., with the owners of said land.

Mr. BARBOUR. I should qualify my statement, I presume, by saying that there is no written contract. There is an agreement or understanding between the California Wine Association and the Department of Agriculture that the work shall be carried on under the supervision of Government experts, and that the live stock and implements of the wine association shall be used in doing the work, and that each year the Department of Agriculture would pay the wine association for the actual cost of using their horses, mules, and implements. There is nothing paid for the land.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will.

Mr. HUSTED. Were these two stations to be acquired under this bill the most important stations in California for the experimentation with grape culture?

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand so. According to my understanding the others will be abandoned.

Mr. HUSTED. That is quite certain, that the others are to be abandoned?

Mr. BARBOUR. That is my understanding.

Mr. HUSTED. In the gentleman's opinion, would the Government lack adequate facilities for carrying on this work if these stations were not acquired?

Mr. BARBOUR. Absolutely. I am assured by the representatives of the Department of Agriculture that that is the fact.

Mr. HUSTED. It is necessary this work should be carried on for various purposes, not only for resisting such diseases as attack vines but also for the improvement of various kinds of grapes?

Mr. BARBOUR. And to discover new varieties.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Is there now an appropriation received by the University of California from the Federal Government for agricultural experimentation purposes?

Mr. BARBOUR. I can not answer that question. The gentleman should ask the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Does the University of California receive aid from the Federal Government for agricultural experimentation purposes?

Mr. HAUGEN. Such as applies to every State in the Union. We have an experiment station in every State in the Union.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Does the gentleman know the amount California receives?

Mr. HAUGEN. The same amount as Indiana under various acts.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman from California give us any idea of the comparative price received for the wine-grape crop of 1920 as compared with previous years?

Mr. BARBOUR. Well, I think last year they brought almost as high if not a higher price than they did this year.

Mr. MILLER. There is little probability of the wine-grape culture going out of existence in the State of California, I think.

Mr. BARBOUR. Personally, I think there is if the Volstead Act is enforced. I think there is a serious probability of the wine-grape industry going out of existence.

Mr. SNYDER. If the gentleman will yield, he said considerable about the quantity of wine grapes sent East for the purpose of making wine. Has he any idea of the per cent in pounds of grapes that went East as compared with the amount that stayed in the country in which they were grown?

Mr. BARBOUR. No; I have none of those figures.

Mr. SNYDER. Do you think it was 5 per cent?

Mr. BARBOUR. I have no figures whatever.

Mr. SNYDER. Then you do not know when you are making this statement that all these grapes are going East for the purpose of making wine whether it is 1 per cent or 75 per cent?

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not know the exact percentage, but I do know that they have gone out of California by the trainload and sent to the East, and that cash was paid to the growers on delivery at the cars.

Mr. SNYDER. If you know there was a carload, what percentage of all the grapes that were grown for wine is one carload?

Mr. BARBOUR. You will have to ask some one besides me, and I do not believe that anyone can answer that question. It would depend on the size of the entire crop and the size of the particular car.

Mr. SNYDER. I do not know. I have heard of this matter. I do not know that there has been a single car sent East. I am about as wet as they make them, but I do not want the stigma put on the East of taking all the wine grapes when I think 90 per cent of them are used in the State of California.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit? Add to that that it is a confidence game when they buy them. The gentleman from California said that they bought them to make wine with, and could not make wine out of them.

Mr. BARBOUR. It is not my intention to ascribe to the people of California any higher degree of morality than to the people of New York State. I am a native of your State.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to get a little information. If the gentleman knows, about how much of the advantage of this experimentation goes to the people outside of the State of California?

Mr. BARBOUR. I can not tell you the percentage. I am told by the experts of the Agricultural Department that these experiments are not carried on exclusively for the vineyardists of California, but for people all over the United States.

Mr. SNYDER. I think we have about 5,000 experimental stations in this country, experimenting with various things, and they are carrying on, too, an intensive investigation of these things, and I think when you say that you are propagating 700 different kinds of grapes you have got about 695 more than you need to experiment on. And I will be glad to see some of these experimental stations eliminated in the interest of the taxpayers of this country, and I think this one that we are asked to appropriate for now should go out entirely, or become a charge on the State of California.

Mr. BARBOUR. Does the gentleman from New York think that it would be in the interest of the taxpayers, after the Federal Government has spent thousands of dollars on these stations, to walk off and abandon them?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY].

Mr. CURRY of California. The experiment stations in California are not exclusively for the purpose of trying to find out about phylloxera. The phylloxera is a small parasite that attacks the roots of the vine and destroys the vine. But to find out how to eradicate the phylloxera is one of the activities of the experiment stations. In France—and the phylloxera was imported into this country on vines from France—the vineyards were entirely destroyed by this pest. The French Government took over the vineyards of the country and maintained them at the expense of the Government for seven years. It did not collect any tax on them. After they had eradicated the phylloxera, the Government turned the vineyards back to the owners free of cost. They have practically found out how to control the phylloxera in California, and that is to tear up the vineyards and plant resistant vines, one kind in one locality, another kind in another locality, and another kind in another locality. The experimental vineyards are not solely in the interest of the wine grape vines. Ninety per cent of the raisins that are eaten in the United States are from the vineyards of California—the raisin grapes. The experiment stations of California are to conduct experiments in all kinds of viticulture and grape industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, how much time am I entitled to?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for one hour.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is it not the duty of the Chair to inquire of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE] whether or not he is opposed to the bill before he recognizes him?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Ohio is correct. Is the gentleman from Georgia opposed to the bill?

Mr. LEE of Georgia. I am not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then I make the point of order that the gentleman is not entitled to an hour under the Calendar Wednesday rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that if anyone desires the floor in opposition to the bill he may be recognized.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Ohio opposed to the bill?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any member of the Committee on Agriculture who is opposed to the bill and desires recognition in opposition to it? If not, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] is recognized in opposition to the bill.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in what I have to say I shall probably seek information rather than be able to give it. I first desire to know from the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and the two gentlemen from California [Mr. BARBOUR and Mr. CURRY] whether this is to be an established policy of having the Government buy the so-called experimental stations having to do with grapes in the State of California?

While I am not familiar with the number of experiment stations, I suppose there are quite a number, at least they are not limited to these two experimental stations, and with the uncertain future of the grape industry I am led personally to inquire, and I direct my inquiry to the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY], as to whether it is the purpose to acquire all the experimental stations concerning grapes and the culture and propagation of grapes in the State of California?

Mr. CURRY of California. No. These are the only two. The others have been abandoned, or will be. The vines are the things that are there that belong to the Government. The rest will all be abandoned.

Mr. GARD. Can the gentleman tell us how many experiment stations there are in California now?

Mr. CURRY of California. These two are all. Last year they did not appropriate for the others. I believe there are three or four others which have been abandoned.

Mr. GARD. Would the gentleman object to an amendment that would make certain the fact that there are to be no other experiment stations maintained in California but these two?

Mr. CURRY of California. What does the gentleman mean?

Mr. GARD. What I am trying to arrive at is this——

Mr. CURRY of California. Does the gentleman mean vinicultural experimental stations?

Mr. GARD. Yes. My object is not in any way to hamper the industry of grape growing. I seek to do what I reasonably can to encourage any proper agricultural growth. I would like to encourage the growing of grapes in California, but at the same time I realize that we can not go forward on a policy of expense and extravagance in the purchase of lands at this time. What I want to be assured of is that these stations are to be the only stations, if they are thought by gentlemen to be necessary, and whether it is necessary to have more experiment stations than these for experiments in regard to grapes; and if these be the only ones necessary, whether he will agree to an amendment to this bill providing that there shall be no other such stations maintained by the Government?

Mr. CURRY of California. I would be perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to accept that, but I believe that it is Congress that makes the appropriations. I would never ask for another experiment station. I would not stand for a proposition for an appropriation for another station, but I would not want to see adopted an amendment of that kind that would stop the maintenance of experiment stations in California.

Mr. GARD. No. I mean stations like this.

Mr. CURRY of California. Of course, I am not a member of the Committee on Agriculture, and that is done by the Committee on Agriculture. So far as I am concerned, I do not believe that any other vinicultural experiment stations will be maintained or asked for; and if so, I would oppose it.

Mr. LEA of California. The gentleman means in California?

Mr. CURRY of California. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Ohio is adopted and becomes a law, do you think it would be binding on a future Congress?

Mr. GARD. It would be binding until repealed or until another was substituted.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It might be binding on the Committee on Agriculture in establishing experiment stations in the manner in which these two were established, by lease, without the authority of Congress or an appropriation by Congress. But it would not bind a future Congress or the department in the manner or extent that the gentleman from Ohio seems to think.

Mr. GARD. My only thought, I desire to say to the gentleman, in suggesting the amendment was that if it be that there is no necessity for having more than two experimental stations for the culture of grapes and for the investigation of grape diseases in California, why not make that certain in your bill? Because if we put a limitation in the bill the Department of Agriculture, at this time at least, will not establish any additional stations. But if we leave it open, and if these two are maintained, what is to prevent the Department of Agriculture from having 20 experiment stations?

But I am not so much concerned in that as in the policy of establishing experiment stations which increase the value of the land, building up a barren, sandy waste to that which is a typical experiment station, and then paying $750 an acre for what the Government created. That is what I am interested in.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman is not quite correct in saying that this value was created by the Government. It is true, however, that the Government took this land when it had very little value and has developed it in value greatly.

But the value of the land has been created by the growth and improvement of the entire country in that part of California. Land like this is worth much more than it is asked now that the Government should pay. Adjoining land, near-by land, is worth more than this. The ordinary market price is much higher than this.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman mean to say that the land without any improvement on it and without these grapes on it in California is worth $750 an acre up in Fresno and Oakville?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will say that if this bill should become a law and it becomes necessary for the owners to take the land and dispose of it after the Government has removed from it all that can be removed from it the land can be sold for more than the Government is now asked to pay.

Mr. GARD. We have had no information about that, and there is nothing of it in the report. There is no information from the Department of Agriculture about the value of the land.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman from California, speaking a few moments ago, was saying that the land was worth anywhere from $750 to $1,000 an acre.

Mr. GARD. For what purpose?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. For vineyard purposes and intensive farming purposes. One of these is near a city of 45,000 inhabitants. The land is very valuable. This is not an exorbitant price.

Mr. GARD. That would be a prospective value of land near the city.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It is the market value.

Mr. LEA of California. I am familiar with these locations. These tracts are in the vicinity of the most productive lands in California, and lands in that vicinity are selling for that price. In fact, improved lands in the neighborhood of this station near Oakville in the last year have sold for as high as $2,000 an acre; and I have no doubt that is true of Fresno also.

Mr. GARD. Improved how?

Mr. LEA of California. For orchard purposes. Such lands are used for intensive farming. They are too valuable to be used for general farming purposes.

Mr. GARD. This land has no orchards on it.

Mr. LEA of California. It is a vineyard.

Mr. GARD. It is a vineyard, and the investigation in the vineyards, so called, were with respect to the number of different kinds of grapes, so that there is no development on the land as to any quantity of grape production. It is rather a sort of investigation without any desire definitely to fix a certain amount of product?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes. This is not as valuable as an ordinary commercial orchard, because it would not be a business proposition to buy an ordinary experimental vineyard. In other words, what the Government has put on there does not increase its value from a commercial standpoint, but it has greatly increased its value from the standpoint of experimentation.

In response to the suggestion of the gentleman that there should be a provision in this bill definitely preventing any further establishment of experimental vineyards, I will say this: There have been nine experimental vineyards in California, seven of which have been abandoned. These other seven have been run practically without any expense to the United States Government. The Government has simply sent a man at different times in the year to inspect these vineyards, but the cost of maintenance has been borne by the individual owners.

They were repaid by the grape crops they secured from these vineyards. But those seven experiment stations have all been abandoned, and now it is proposed to use only these two. There is no necessity of the provision that you suggest, because no one is advocating anything else.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Speaking not so much with reference to the value of the land as to the expense of conducting the experiment, can the gentleman state to what extent, if at all, the State of California has been carrying on corresponding experiments? I understand they have a very enterprising department of agriculture in the State of California.

Mr. LEA of California. We have an active agricultural department in California which is carrying on experiments similar to those that are being carried on all over the country in agricultural departments.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. This particular vineyard matter is what I am speaking of.

Mr. LEA of California. They have no relation to this particular vineyard.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I understand that, but are they experimenting along the same line as those to which these Federal experiments apply?

Mr. LEA of California. To a degree they have cooperated, but not along this particular line of experimentation, with different varieties of grapes which have been gathered from all over the earth. They have not carried on that sort of experiment. The work of this experiment station has relation to the wine-grape industry and also to the table-grape industry, and the development of better varieties as well as the eradication of disease. So this work has not been completed any more than any other line of experimentation that has been carried on for the benefit of any other industry by the United States Government. In fact, considering it as a business proposition I believe this work is more important now than it was five years ago. Here are 160,000 acres of vineyards in wine grapes that ultimately will have to be transformed largely into other varieties or else dug up, and one important problem of this experimental vineyard is to make these wine grapes profitable for commercial purposes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. What percentage of the total grape product of California in the period preceding the adoption of the eighteenth amendment was used for wine grapes?

Mr. LEA of California. About 170,000 acres were used for wine grapes and about 180,000 acres for table grapes and raisins.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Nearly 50 per cent of the total production.

Mr. LEA of California. Nearly half; yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I should like to find out from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] or from the chairman of the committee whether the Federal Government maintains experimental farms or fields similar to this in other States of the Union?

Mr. GARD. The gentlemen who are interested in the grape industry can answer that question better than I can.

Mr. HAUGEN. We have one or two experimental stations in North Dakota, one or two in Nebraska, and one in Louisiana.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. I think there is one in the State of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Are these experiment stations carried on at the expense of the Government?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. For what purpose?

Mr. HAUGEN. The one in North Dakota for experiments in tree planting, the one in Louisiana for experiments in the raising of live stock, and in Nebraska for tree planting. We have a number of stations. We have not as many as have been suggested for California. Of course, every State has an experiment station.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What I have in mind is whether by passing an act of this kind we are establishing a precedent by which every State in the Union will ultimately come in for some sort of an experimental farm or station, of an expensive kind, to be maintained by the Federal Government instead of by the States.

Mr. HAUGEN. The precedent was established in the establishment of the station in North Dakota.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. How lately was that done?

Mr. HAUGEN. About six or eight years ago.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. There is another question I should like to ask. If I understand it, there are no experiment stations in California that are maintained by the State. Is that correct?

Mr. HAUGEN. I can not answer as to the State.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The gentleman from California probably can tell us.

Mr. BARBOUR. The University of California, I believe, cooperating with the Department of Agriculture, maintains certain stations in California for experimentation in grape growing. One line of work in which they engage and advise the vineyardist is that of proper pruning, proper cultivating, and the proper sprays to use on the vines in order to prevent mildew and such insects as attack the vines. I believe the work of the State department of agriculture is conducted more along that line. I have never understood that the work of these two bureaus was duplicated, although they do cooperate.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is it proposed to drop the experimentation of the State, either by the State university or by your State agricultural department, and have the sole experimentation done by the Federal Government?

Mr. BARBOUR. No; I presume that the State will go on with that work which it is already carrying on, which is of an entirely different nature from that carried on by the Government.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The other seven experiment farms or plantations are privately owned, are they?

Mr. BARBOUR. They are to be abandoned.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Are they conducted by private individuals or by the State?

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand that they are conducted on different lines.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Who conducts them?

Mr. BARBOUR. They have been conducted by the Federal Government, some of them.

Mr. HAUGEN. In cooperation with the State. I think the gentleman has reference to the experiment stations.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The seven which you say are going to be abandoned?

Mr. BARBOUR. They are already abandoned.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Were they maintained by the State?

Mr. BARBOUR. No; they were maintained, I am informed, on private land by the owners of the vineyards, and under a sort of supervision by the officers of the Department of Agriculture who went there occasionally and inspected them.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Has anyone ever offered to donate this land to the Government?

Mr. BARBOUR. No; not that I know of.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Has any effort been made to get them to donate it to the Government?

Mr. BARBOUR. No; the use of the land has been donated to the Government for the last 15 or 17 years. The owners have derived no direct benefit from the use of it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does it not occur to the gentleman that if the Government would establish stations in exchange for the donation of the land probably these owners would agree to it.

Mr. BARBOUR. No; because the owners are going out of the wine-grape business, so that they are not interested in that business any more. They are selling their entire holdings. The wine association has held back these 20 acres because it has been interested in the work and wants the Government to have the benefit of it. Now, so far as the price is concerned, I want to say that it is very reasonable, much below the price asked for land immediately surrounding it.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. There are other vineyard lands surrounding these vineyards?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; but they have sold that land.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Is it not true that the maintenance of these experimental stations for this purpose would enhance the value of the surrounding property?

Mr. BARBOUR. No; no more than it would any other property on which grapes are grown.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. In the State of Illinois we get a certain sum of money to help maintain experimental stations, but that goes into the agricultural college of our State. I suppose the State of California gets the same.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Suppose we asked to have a station for experimental purposes in growing corn. Does the gentleman think that would be a good policy for the Government to pursue?

Mr. BARBOUR. It might. I believe that we did have an appropriation here a while ago for the corn borer.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman know whether the Government owns land elsewhere for experimental purposes?

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand that it does. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture has so stated.

Mr. HAUGEN. The Government owns a half section in North Dakota, and I think it has since added quite a number of acres to it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Land purchased by the Government?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Under a bill passed by Congress?

Mr. HAUGEN. It was an appropriation bill passed by Congress; yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What was it established for?

Mr. HAUGEN. I think for the growing of nursery stock, and some other purposes.

Mr. OSBORNE. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit a question?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. OSBORNE. Assuming that there are appropriations for every State in the Union for experimental purposes, and assuming that there are no other experimental stations in California, is it unreasonable that a State which grows about 90 per cent of the entire grape production of the United States should be selected as a proper place for the location of experimental stations in that particular industry?

Mr. GARD. I will say in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from California that I do not know that experimental stations are maintained in other States of the Union; I do not know whether there are or not.

Mr. OSBORNE. I understood the chairman of the committee to state that there were.

Mr. GARD. He said there were some experimental stations, but I think North Dakota was the only one I heard mentioned.

Mr. OSBORNE. I understood there were appropriations for experimental work in every State.

Mr. HAUGEN. We have a sheep station for experimental purposes, also we have in Louisiana an experimental station for live stock, and stations in Nebraska to develop nursery stock. We have had a number of applications or bills, or amendments have been proposed for experimental stations in different parts of the country. I believe the appropriation bill of last year carried the suggestion of half a dozen, but none of them were allowed. This particular one seems to have merit, and the committee gave it a favorable report.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. A great variety of experiments are carried on by the department through the Bureau of Plant Industry at a cost of $2,250,000. Some of that is spent for experiments at these two particular places.

Mr. HAUGEN. A part of it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. So the only question we have here, it seems to me, is as to the expediency of the Government acquiring the title to these two pieces of land. So far as the policy of experiment is concerned, that is definitely fixed up to this time, and is expressed in the current appropriation bill.

Mr. FLOOD. The report says that if the Government does not acquire this land the experiments will have to stop.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I quite understand that. The point I am making is with reference to the question raised here, that the Government has already adopted the policy of experiment stations; there is no doubt about that, and has appropriated money for that purpose. Now, here is a case where the experiments will cease unless the land is purchased by the Government.

Mr. HAUGEN. And a large investment will be lost. I want to say that we also have one experiment station in Washington for the propagation of fruit.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, let me ask the gentleman one other question.

Mr. GARD. First I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE] where he gets the basis for his statement that 90 per cent of all the grapes raised in the United States are grown in California?

Mr. OSBORNE. I think that is right.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to know why the gentleman says that.

Mr. CURRY of California. Some grapes, of course, are raised in Missouri.

Mr. OSBORNE. I know that, and of course there are a lot raised in New York and Ohio and some of these other minor States, but I think about 90 per cent of them are raised in California.

Mr. GARD. What the gentleman means is that 90 per cent of the raisin grapes are raised in California, is it not?

Mr. OSBORNE. They are all grown there.

Mr. GARD. Ninety per cent of all the grapes raised in the United States are not grown in California.

Mr. OSBORNE. The raisin grapes are.

Mr. GARD. Because the great State of New York has tremendous acreage of vineyards.

Mr. OSBORNE. I think the gentleman will find, if he looks it up, that California grows about 90 per cent of the grapes of the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Before this prohibition amendment was adopted there was one winery in my district that made 3,999,000 gallons of wine in one year, and I do not believe there is any establishment in California that ever did that.

Mr. OSBORNE. I am not posted on the wine industry.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask the Chairman of the committee a question. Has not every State in the Union an agricultural experiment station under the Morrill Act of 1863?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. OSBORNE. That is the point I wanted to make, and I will give way with that explanation. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, the status of this bill, as it seems to have been developed, is, according to the report, that these experimental vineyards were established 15 years ago on lands owned by private persons for the purpose of developing grape stocks that would resist phylloxera, a disease that was then sweeping the grape-producing areas. So efficient was the work of experimentation that this dread disease has been arrested in its career, and grapes which a year and a half ago were selling for $15 a ton in the Golden State of California are now being sold for $160 a ton. The first inquiry, therefore, would logically be this: In view of the remarkable success of the experimental station in getting rid of this awful disease and in view of the greatly increased price of grapes in the State of California, why should the Government of the United States go into the policy of buying as a permanent investment two sites for experimental stations, when they may be continued, and properly continued, by the Government with the assistance of the grape grower and others in interest in the State of California or elsewhere?

Why should not the nine experimental stations, which the gentleman's State had before in existence, maintained by the State or by private individuals, such as the California Wine Growers' Association, be continued, since of course we realize that the first value of the experiment goes to the producer. These experiments in agriculture and in other things are the same as might be made in a manufacturing concern. A man who makes experiments in a factory makes them because he wants to increase his output and decrease his expense of manufacture. Experiments in the grape industry are intended doubtless to increase production and enhance the quality of the grapes. Both of these things seem to have been accomplished, at least it would seem so, when you review the remarkable change in price from $15 a ton to $160 a ton.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. May I have 10 minutes?

Mr. GARD. I can not yield to the gentleman for 10 minutes now.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to put in a short statement to answer the suggestion made by the gentleman himself.

Mr. GARD. I decline to yield for that purpose at this time. The only thing that I am seeking information about, and it is pertinent, is the necessity for permanently putting the Government under the obligation of carrying on these two experimental stations in the State of California, in view of the fact that it is particularly for the benefit of private corporations, and of course for the benefit of the producers of these wine grapes, when in fact the only question about production so far as I am advised is getting enough grapes. The market seems to be very good for grapes in California and elsewhere, and the prospect is that it will continue to be so. What will be gained by the experimentation, so far as the United States is concerned?

The output, no matter what it may be, is hurriedly taken and will probably continue to be hurriedly taken. In other words, if it is of value, it is of important value first to the vine grower. The experimentation is for his benefit, and it has always been my personal view that things of this kind should be paid for by the men getting the immediate benefit. Of course, if there is any disease sweeping through the vineyards, to cope with which the Government may be of assistance, as it was in this matter 15 years ago, that is another question; but when the industry is established and it is on a paying basis that it is now, experiments, I think, should be conducted not in any paternal way but by those who have charge of the active management and who are getting the direct benefit of it. It is only in that view that I have submitted these suggestions.

I yield now 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the full statement of the facts as to the cost and the items for which expenditure is to be had were presented to the Committee on Agriculture last year, showing the purchase of the land, the buildings that are on the land that the Government would retain, the present value of the property, and what it would cost with the additional 10 acres in each tract. It seems to me that too much time or too much thought has been given to the one side of the question—that this applies to the wine grape only. I think that is not exactly the fact. It is true that after the State of California has expended vast sums of money its people, as well as the people of the United States, determined that California had the soil and the climate to produce a wonderful wine grape. It was also found that no place in the United States could produce a raisin grape for food as could the State of California, and this is true practically as to the whole world. While these experiments were being made and stock transported from the Old World it was found, after it had been grafted and cultivated for a number of years, that a vine disease developed, as well as the phylloxera.

In one year as much as some 75,000 acres of grapes were destroyed. It was necessary to make investigation and experiments, first, to get a resistant stock; second, to prevent the wine disease, so that this grape could be raised successfully. So far as the wine grape is concerned, the question is for grafting. They have the stock; they know that it resists the phylloxera; and they have some 700 varieties, gathered from all over the world, for the purpose now of food. It has been demonstrated by scientists and by the Department of Agriculture that there is no food with more nutrition than grapes. This product is being raised in California and sent all over the United States and to the people of the world at a reasonable price.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HUSTED Does the gentleman happen to know anything which has been accomplished at these experiment stations within the past two or three years that has been of any substantial benefit to the grape industry?

Mr. RAKER. Well, I would not like to designate within the last year——

Mr. HUSTED. Since the discovery of a means to withstand the inroads of this disease?

Mr. RAKER. They claim so. They claim in addition to that——

Mr. HUSTED. I understand that has been disposed of now and that is no longer a menace.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no; that is not the fact. We say we cure a certain disease, but it is always prevalent. There is nothing which has been finally cured. But the question of discovering what will make it impossible to extend, of keep changing your location and land——

Mr. HUSTED. But if the gentleman will permit me. The disease may come again, but as I understand it they have now discovered means of resisting it even if it does come again.

Mr. RAKER. Not at all, partly——

Mr. BARBOUR. I would like to say to the gentleman from New York that certain parts of California are now seriously threatened with the disease making serious inroads there. They have discovered certain stock resisting the disease in certain localities; with reference to others, they are still experimenting.

Mr. RAKER. That is the situation; the cure has not been completed. They have been working for the last 15 years, whereas the countries of the whole world have been working for centuries. A lot of people in California have been making a success of raising grapes for raisins for food, and millions of tons have been sent over the United States and abroad that is valuable as cheap, wholesome, and nutritious, good for our people and other people. There is no other place found in the United States yet where this product can be raised so successfully.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield for just one moment?

Mr. RAKER. I would like to finish this thought.

Mr. HUSTED. It is about this disease.

Mr. RAKER. All right.

Mr HUSTED. Is that disease prevalent among all kinds of grapes, or is it peculiar to the wine grape only?

Mr RAKER. It is among all kinds of grapes.

Mr. HUSTED. Food grapes as well as wine grapes?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, yes. That is one of the things that destroyed the other grapes as well. One has but to go back to his boyhood of 35 years ago when instead of the great vineyards of California you saw cattle ranges and sheep ranges, poor, indeed, where few could be kept upon the land because they could not make out on this land because it was too dry, and then to-day we see flourishing cities and thousands and tens of thousands of happy, prosperous homes.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Just let me finish this. And we see trainload after trainload of this product being raised by this country and sent over the United States to places where it can not be raised—a cheap, nutritious food for the benefit of the American people. I now yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. WALSH. Is the gentleman opposed to this measure?

Mr. RAKER. Well, I should say no, with a strong accent on the "No."

Mr. WALSH. Then how is the gentleman occupying time in opposition?

Mr. RAKER. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio kindly and considerately gave me the short space of 10 minutes, and I am occupying that time in favor of the bill.

Mr. GARD. The generosity which always pervades me at the Christmas tide prompted me to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. In addition, it has been said by my distinguished colleague from southern California that California raises and produces all the Zante currants which are raised in the United States or any place outside of Greece, the seedless Zante currants that are used in every household in this country. These experiment stations have made it possible that these people may continue to raise this product without having their grapes destroyed, and raise it to such a large extent that it may be transported at a reasonable price to the housewives, and every American family may obtain this native product, raised at home in one of the glorious States of this Union [applause] by American citizens without being imported from Greece.

That is one of the things that can be done and has been made possible by virtue of the ingenuity and the ability of the Agricultural Department in the West and the Department of Agriculture in the United States and its able men who have gone there, who have gone abroad and studied the subject, have studied it in all the States and found a home where climate and soil are combined for its production. The two stations are for this reason. The one at Fresno is in the dry, elevated altitude, and is in that part of California where irrigation is required, and that has the benefit of this experiment station as to its grapes, as to disease, as to production of grapes successfully. The station at Oakville is in the humid part of California near the bay, where a different climatic condition exists, and where irrigation is not necessary, where they develop the stock by grafting, by studying the question of disease, and so forth, and therefore they get both varieties, both theories, the dry irrigated and the wet unirrigated, so that they may have them properly propagated.

Mr. HUSTED. Pursuing my former inquiry a little bit further, will the gentleman kindly state if he knows just what important work is going on at these experiment stations at the present time?

Mr. RAKER. Well, they have some 700 varieties of grapes gathered from the four corners of the globe. They are raising the grapes, cultivating the vines. They are grafting from one to the other. They are testing them in the location of Fresno as to the dry climate and as to Oakville as to the humid climate. They interchange them, investigate in regard to disease and——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. May I have one minute?

Mr. GARD. I will yield one minute to the gentleman to finish his sentence.

Mr. RAKER. So that the question of the vine disease and Phylloxera is analyzed by actual experiment work on the ground in testing various plants.

Mr. CURRY of California. If the gentleman will permit me to answer, the particular thing that is being done at this time is to graft the Zante currants onto the wine stock and develop a new industry in the United States.

Mr. RAKER. The Zante currant is a small, seedless raisin, and it is grown in the island of Crete. There are not any raised in the United States. The United States Agricultural Department is experimenting with them in California and has met with success to a certain extent, but it will take a year longer to determine whether it is a complete success or not.

I wish the gentlemen would read the hearings and see what is said about the Zante currant and its importation from Greece.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture, after hearing the full statements of those interested in this item, I gave my hearty consent and approval to voting this bill out of the committee and supporting it on the floor of this House. Ordinarily I dislike the policy of the United States Government going into any locality and buying real estate, but we have a situation in the case at hand for which I do not see any other remedy except to buy these two plats of land, unless the Government loses very largely the benefits that have accrued to the people of the United States, and especially to the State of California, in the experimentation that has been going on for some 15 years. These two plats of land have been leased at a nominal rental, and our Government has gone to the four corners of the world and gathered together every known species of grape and planted them on these two plats of ground.

Nothing else in the world will contain what these two plats already contain. If we lose those lands, which we are going to do unless the Government buys them, it will not be the loss of land that will hurt, because we would not need the land if it was not for the vineyards on it, but these vineyards will be destroyed, these experiments will lose much of their force, and the grape industry of the Nation will suffer a great loss, one that probably could never be made good again. And I am not willing as a member of the Committee on Agriculture to see that condition brought about. And so I gave my consent to report to Congress this bill that we might buy these two plats of land, not as land, but by virtue of the fact that they have these vines on them and the vines are the property of the United States. And it is not only for the benefit of California, but way down in Texas where I live, where we must look to California for our raisin crop and our grape crop, we do not feel that we want to do anything that will injure those people in developing that great industry, and in that great State, which I have the honor in part to represent, my people do not object, so far as my vote is concerned, to taking money out of the Treasury that we may develop this grape industry that is such a success in the wonderful State of California. First, it grew up as a matter of destroying a disease. Later it became more than that. It became a question of developing new varieties of grapes. And in the future, if we maintain this station, I see no reason why sections should not be found in the broken lands in many parts of our Nation where the grape industry could spring up and bring with it a happy, contented citizenship. It would be a mistake not to appropriate this small amount of money. I believe, as far removed as I am from the State of California, we should look at the situation as it really exists and appropriate this small sum of money that these institutions may be kept and the people of the Nation may be the beneficiaries of the information that may be brought forth. And I shall heartily vote for this measure. [Applause.]

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 11 minutes remaining.

Mr. GARD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, so far as carrying on this experimentation in behalf of the grape growers of California is concerned, I have not heard any voice in opposition to that work. No Member of Congress, as I understand it, is opposing it. It is something that is needed. I am in favor of it. I am in favor of the Government carrying on sane experimentation in behalf of any kind of industry of that importance. But the point to which objection has been lodged is the policy of our Government to buy land out in a distant State as a permanent experimentation against those things which may cease early in the future if they have not already ceased at this time. That was the objection of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] when he asked for the time to oppose this bill. That is the sole question in this case.

In the current appropriation bill for the present fiscal year, as well as all other agricultural bills within the last 15 years, appropriations have been made annually to carry on experimentation, including this one. There was no objection to it. But why should we buy this land and establish a permanent policy there and let the need for the experimentation cease? And when we have the land on our hands, then the Government salvage will take place, and we all know what Government salvage means.

I was talking to a distinguished officer here in Washington this summer with regard to the probable salvage from one of these big temporary buildings down here. He was then recommending that it be demolished, taken down and destroyed. I asked him, "What do you think the Government could get out of that tremendously big building? There is lots of valuable material in it of every kind." He said, "Well, I think we ought to be able to get some contractor to agree to demolish that building and remove it without cost to the Government."

That was his idea of salvaging Government property. Why, that kind of a building anywhere down in the State from which I come would bring a number of thousands of dollars from contractors. It would be impossible for this Government to sell that land for anything like its cost. I do not care what the market value of land is around it. It would be impossible, if it became necessary for us to stop this experimentation in the next few years, for this Government to realize anything like the cost that we would be paying out for that land, to wit, $750 per acre. Now, if these grape growers want this experimentation to go on as they seem to be the only ones interested, let them see to it that the Government is permitted under proper laws to carry it out under lease contract as we have done for the last 15 years.

It is to their interest to get together and see to it that the Government is permitted to carry on this property under reasonable rental. I am in favor of helping it, just like I would be in favor of helping any industry throughout this Nation. Why should we buy? If the land is worth so much money, why, the grape growers, so far as these two tracts of 35 acres are concerned, could easily arrange for the Government to carry it on. I do not think we ought to buy. I think we ought to continue to lease it.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HERSMAN], unless there be some gentleman on that side who desires to be heard.

Mr. HERSMAN. I will answer the question just asked by the gentleman from Texas. In fact, they can not lease this tract.

The testimony given before the committee brought out these facts: The California Wine Association before the adoption of the eighteenth amendment owned large holdings in wine grapes in California. After the adoption of the eighteenth amendment they disposed of practically all their holdings, retaining this particular tract, with its valuable collection of grapes, in order to give the Government an opportunity to purchase it. For 15 years the California Wine Association has allowed the Government the use of this property in order that they, as well as others engaged in the cultivation of grapes, might be benefited by the experiments the Government would carry on. These experiments have been of great value to the grape interests of the Nation. The origin, cause, and control of the root disease that was wiping out the vineyards of California can be credited largely to successful experiments by Government experts on this land. Now, what will be the result if we do not pass this bill, if we do not buy these vineyards? The Government has collected the most valuable assortment of vines in all the world and they are now growing in Fresno County and Napa County on these two tracts. The value in dollars and cents can hardly be measured when we think of the number of years and great care that has been exercised in collecting them from all the countries of the world and bringing them to California. The Government can not afford to allow this collection of vines to be destroyed, and I again ask what will happen if we do not pass this bill? These two vineyards will be sold to private parties who could not afford to maintain the land with 700 varieties of grapes on it. They would be a liability; the grapevines would have to be dug up, and the land planted either to some one particular variety or to fruit trees, according to the judgment of the purchaser.

If the established policy of the Government to maintain experimental stations in order to encourage agricultural pursuits and combat diseases affecting such occupation is correct, then there can be no question as to the wisdom of buying these two tracts. The testimony shows that the land can be sold for as much or more to individuals who wish to purchase. Why should we hesitate to spend $27,000 in order to preserve and maintain to the industry the result of 15 years of scientific work?

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERSMAN. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Do I understand that some gentlemen in favor of this bill a few moments ago said that it was the intention to graft into the stock of the vines already there the Zante currant or some kind of table grape? Is that the intention?

Mr. HERSMAN. That is only one of the functions of an experimental station. They are sentries to prevent disease, to protect that particular industry. They are physicians to heal when the disease is recognized; they are inventors to discover new and useful varieties. There is nothing in this country that has so increased the wealth of our Nation as the Government activities and experiments in agriculture, and I think that no one disagrees with that statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase and acquire the lands occupied by the department's experiment vineyards near Fresno and Oakville, Calif., now maintained under contracts with the owners of said lands: Provided, That the land purchased for the Fresno vineyard shall not exceed 20 acres at a cost not to exceed $12,000 and for the Oakville vineyard not to exceed 20 acres at a cost not to exceed $15,000; for the payment of which the sum of $27,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. This bill contains a paragraph which is in violation of Rule XXI, as amended by House resolution 324, which became effective July 1 last, in that it carries an appropriation of $27,000, beginning with the word "for," in line 10, and continuing in lines 11, 12, and 13.

The rule, as the chairman will recall, centered the appropriating power in a single committee of 35 Members, which committee has been elected by the House, and no committee other than that provided for in the rule now has jurisdiction over legislation carrying appropriations, unless it should be under the provision of a special rule.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman be kind enough to give us the date when the bill was reported? I have not a copy of it.

Mr. WALSH. The bill was reported April 28, 1920.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I was about to remind the gentleman as to whether the date of the report would not give the jurisdiction to the committee, notwithstanding the rule.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think so, in view of Rule XXI.

Mr. CURRY of California. I would like to ask the Chair if it is not too late to raise the point of order after the bill has been reported?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes in time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the resolution which went into effect July 1, 1920, relates to reporting. It says:

No bill or joint resolution carrying appropriations shall be reported by any committee not having jurisdiction.

This bill, as I understand, was reported on April 28, 1920, before the resolution changing that general rule as to appropriations went into effect.

Mr. WALSH. That is true.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does not the gentleman think that would govern in this case?

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Ohio points out that this measure was reported on April 28, 1920, prior to the adoption of the rule, which became effective July 1 last, and asks if I do not think that fact would make this in order. I hardly think so, from the language of the rule, as amended by the addition of clause 5, which is to the effect, it is true, that—

No bill or joint resolution carrying appropriations shall be reported by any committee not having jurisdiction to report appropriations, nor shall an amendment proposing an appropriation be in order during the consideration of a bill or joint resolution reported by a committee not having that jurisdiction. A question of order on any appropriation in any such bill, joint resolution, or amendment thereto may be raised at any time.

Now, I think that concluding clause, Mr. Chairman, brings within the scope of that amended rule every bill now on the calendar carrying an appropriation brought in by a committee having jurisdiction at the time the report was made, on July 1, and substantially, if a question is raised, eliminates appropriations from bills reported by committees having jurisdiction at the time and converts such measures, if the point is raised, into mere authorizations.

Why, if that be not so, it seems to me that the last sentence, as to the question of order on an appropriation in such bill or joint resolution or amendment, that it may be raised at any time, must be, of course, restricted to measures reported afterwards.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Is not that just what is intended, that to a bill reported and placed on the calendar after the amended rule went into effect a point of order may be raised at any time that such bill is not properly on the calendar? In other words, the point of order could be made that it was reported by a committee that has no jurisdiction to report an appropriation. Of course, no objection can be raised to this bill being on the calendar, because at the time it was reported the committee reporting it had proper jurisdiction of it.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think that is so.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HUSTED. As a general proposition, does not every resolution speak from the date of its adoption unless the contrary intention is clearly expressed in the resolution itself?

Mr. WALSH. This resolution is to take effect July 1, 1920. Of course, that speaks from the date of its taking effect.

Mr. HUSTED. From the date of its adoption.

Mr. WALSH. No; it was adopted June 1 to take effect July 1.

Mr. HUSTED. In other words, it will not have an ex post facto effect unless the intention to give it such effect is clear from the language of the resolution itself.

Mr. WALSH. That resolution was reported on June 1, 1920. The resolution by its terms provided that it should become effective July 1, 1920. But it says that a question of order on an appropriation in any such bill, joint resolution, or amendment thereto may be raised at any time. Now, these bills were upon the calendar at the time that amendment to the rules was adopted.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. I should like to ask the gentleman if he does not think that the language which he has just quoted—may be raised at any time—has reference to the time when it may be raised, when the bill is actually called up for consideration? As, for instance, just now the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY] inquired if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] was not too late in raising the point of order, to which the Chair very properly responded no, because it may be raised at any time. In other words, it may be raised after we reach consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule. The gentleman does not insist that that language "at any time" had reference to bills that were then on the calendar at the time of its adoption.

Mr. WALSH. No; not in so far as the applicability of it refers to the time of raising it. But the Chair has ruled that it is not too late to raise this question now. In the absence of this rule, I think under the ordinary procedure of the House the Chair would have been compelled to hold that it was too late.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, no; because the bill had just been read for amendment. There had been no debate on the bill since it was read for amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I think, however, that this concluding sentence in this rule permits points of order to be raised against the measures which, if reported subsequent to the adoption of the rule, would have been subject to the point of order, even though they were reported prior thereto, and it would seem to me that under the entire language of the rules as amended, which consisted of amendments to Rule X, to Rule XX, and to Rule XXI, the plain intent and purpose of the House was that after July 1 measures taken up for consideration which carried appropriations would be subject to points of order unless they came from the committee possessing the jurisdiction to report appropriations.

This committee has no authority to report appropriations. Neither have the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, or the Committee on Indian Affairs. They have the right to report at any time on certain matters stated within the rule, clause 56, but they can not have considered, even though reported prior to the adoption of the rule, a measure which carries an appropriation, which is in violation of the existing rules of the House at the time the matter is considered. It seems to me that this clause in this bill is clearly subject to Rule XXI as amended by the addition of paragraph 5.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully take issue with the gentleman from Massachusetts. The ruling that is called for by the point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is perhaps a pretty important one. I have not examined the calendar and the various bills that are on it sufficiently to know just how many bills there may be in the category of this particular measure. But without any refereifce to that it seems to me that a retroactive rule should not be adopted by the House unless at least at the time of its adoption it be clearly and specifically made such. And unless it clearly appears from the rule itself that it is and is intended to be retroactive it should not be made so by construction. Although this rule passed on the 1st of June it was within the power of committees, had Congress remained in session up to the 1st of July, to continue reporting bills just as they had reported them through the many years of the past. Now, the construction which the gentleman from Massachusetts seeks to have placed upon this rule would make it absolutely retroactive. It would, of course, go to every bill which, though legitimately placed upon the calendar under the rules of the House at the time, would now be obnoxious to the particular rule which the gentleman has quoted—the budget rule, if I may so term it. Certainly it was not the thought of the Committee on Rules, I am sure, though it did not have consideration of this particular rule except as it considered it in connection with the resolution which was brought in in order to bring up the budget matter; certainly it was not the thought of the Committee on Rules to create a rule which would strike from the calendar bills legitimately placed there before its passage, nor do I think it was in the thought of the membership of the House in adopting the so-called budget rule that it should be retroactive in any sort of a way.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know quite what the gentleman means by "retroactive." Here is a bill that comes up that has an item in it carrying an appropriation. If that item in the appropriation is now subject to a point of order does that make the rule retroactive?

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman from Massachusetts has insisted that the whole bill is out of order because of the particular item.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I did not understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to make the point of order that the bill could not be reported. There is only one paragraph in the bill.

Mr. GARRETT. Perhaps I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If there is anything in that paragraph subject to the point of order, then the whole paragraph is subject to the point of order, and therefore the whole bill is subject to the point of order. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] pointed out why he thought the paragraph was subject to the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to insist that this bill would have been out of order prior to the adoption of this new rule, and that the committee could not report it?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think they could report it.

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; that is it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am inclined to think that they could report it now. The question is, What happens to it when it gets in the House? I do not know what the ruling of the Chair may be in the end, whether the Chair will hold that if a committee of the House reports a Senate bill which has an item of appropriation in it that you can make the point of order in the House and strike the bill off the calendar on the ground that under the rule the committee had no authority to report it, or whether the Chair will hold that it having reported a bill with an item in it subject to a point of order you can make the point of order against the item, as has been customary in the past in appropriation bills. I do not know, because the language in the rule is new, ill considered, and nobody knows what it means, and I doubt if anybody ever knew what was meant by it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It seems to me that the point of order if it lies at all lies against the entire bill, because the rule says that no bill or joint resolution carrying an appropriation shall be reported. It seems to me that the rule applies to the entire bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Suppose this was a Senate bill; does the gentleman contend that no House committee can report a Senate bill—the Committee on Appropriations would not have jurisdiction to report it because they have no legislative jurisdiction—have we adopted a rule by which the House declines to consider a proposition sent to us by the Senate in a bill?

Mr. LONGWORTH. That seems to present a different question. May I suggest to the gentleman that if this was a Senate bill which had been reported by the Committee on Agriculture before the 1st of July, clearly the committee would have jurisdiction to report it at that time, and if reported since I think a point of order would lie against it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Against the report of a committee?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Against it when it came up in the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Have we adopted a rule by which the House can not bring before it a bill sent to it by the Senate for consideration?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not believe I would be prepared to answer that question.

Mr. POU. I would like to have the gentleman from Illinois answer it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am frank to say that I have my opinion about it. The rule says that no committee shall report a bill carrying an appropriation. I do not think the proper construction of that rule is to say that the committee has no power to report a bill, but if it does put an item in the bill carrying an appropriation it is subject to a point of order. For years we have had a rule in the House that no appropriation could be reported in a general appropriation bill unless authorized by law. The prohibition was not against reporting a general appropriation bill, but only against reporting an item in the bill which would be subject to a point of order. We have raised the point of order in the House when the bill came up and it has been ruled out by the Chair without a vote of the House.

It seems to me that the gentleman who drew this rule, without a very critical scanning of the language, intended to make the same principle applicable to this rule. He did not undertake to say to the House by the rule that if the Senate sends over a bill to the House that carries an appropriation in it that no committee of the House can do anything with it, or that any gentleman of the House could come in at any time and strike it off the calendar on the ground that the committee could not report it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman think that if the bill was a Senate bill and had come over after the passage of the resolution of July 1 last that it would have gone to the Appropriations Committee instead of the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think so. The Committee on Appropriations has no jurisdiction over legislative matters. The Committee on Appropriations could not report a bill like this; it would be like sending it to the Dead Sea.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It has jurisdiction over bills making appropriations for agricultural purposes, and this bill is for agricultural purposes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is not a bill making appropriations for agricultural purposes. It is to authorize the purchase of land and makes an appropriation to pay for it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman from Illinois has been giving an interpretation of the rule——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Only on request.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand, and we are glad to have it; but, in the gentleman's judgment, what would become of the bill in the case put by the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think it would go to the Committee on Agriculture, and, if they desired, they would report the bill to the House, and when it came on the floor of the House anyone who desired to make a point of order to the provision carrying an appropriation could make it, and it could never be agreed to in conference without a direct vote of the House. It may be that I am saying more than I know about it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then, in order to legislate, we ought to have a change of the rule.

Mr. HUSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not also true, in addition to the point which he has made, that the provision allowing the point of order to be made at any time can not be construed to create a new ground for a point of order which did not exist before? In other words, it relates solely to the stage of consideration and simply permits the point of order to be made at any stage which might otherwise be made only at a certain stage. The effect of the position taken by the gentleman from Massachusetts would be to create a new ground for a point of order which did not exist before, simply because the rule says that a point of order may be made at any time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman agree with the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] that making the point of order creates a new ground for a point of order?

Mr. GARRETT. I neither assented to or dissented from the statement of the gentleman from New York. I did not answer his question.

Mr. WALSH. Will not the gentleman from Tennessee agree that in the ordinary procedure of the House here points of order are raised only when matters are under consideration?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly. Points of order are reserved on the regular appropriation bills usually when they are reported, but they are not made except as the item at which the point is leveled is reached. I think, Mr. Chairman, that so far as the particular point is concerned raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts the nub of the proposition has been stated. Answering the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], if I may now, as to what I mean by the expression "retroactive," it seems to me that this bill, having gone on the calendar properly under the rules of the House as they then existed, any subsequent rule which would make the bill subject to a point of order would be retroactive in character. That is as clear as I can make myself on that point. That undoubtedly would be the effect, if the point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts be sustained, that a rule brought in here on the 1st of June, and which by its terms would not take effect until the 1st of July, reaches back and strikes down a bill that was properly placed upon the calendar under the rules of the House as they then existed.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Does not that depend upon the language of the rule itself? Suppose the rule itself had said that no bill shall be considered which carries an appropriation, instead of saying, as it does here, that no bill shall be reported.

Mr. GARRETT. We would have had different language for consideration at least. I think it ought to have been made clear that it was intended to reach back even if worded as the gentleman from Connecticut states; but after all, that is academic, because that is not the language.

Mr. TILSON. It seems it meant to exclude that very language by saying that no bill shall be reported.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Was not the attitude of the House made plain when it was designated in the rule that it should not go into effect until 30 days later?

Mr. GARRETT. I think so. I think that is very true.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Has not the House absolute jurisdiction and authority over all bills on the calendar as well as those unreported from committees?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly it has.

Mr. BLANTON. Then any action concerning bills on the calendar would be authoritative action?

Mr. GARRETT. Undoubtedly the House could by a properly drawn rule or resolution clear the calendar of all bills that are on it. I know of no bill on the calendar, and I can not think just now of any bill that could be put on the calendar that could not be taken off by a proper resolution of the House; but this resolution did not do that.

Mr. POU. I would like to ask the gentleman, adopting a word of his own, if the nub of this whole matter is not one of application, whether or not this particular rule applies to this particular bill. If the Chair shall decide that it does not apply, then all these spun-out questions raised here would not have to be answered.

Mr. GARRETT. I think the point is well taken. The express language, as has been emphasized by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], is that no committee should report a bill, and then the date when the rule should take effect was provided. It seems to me, in other words, that the clear meaning is that after July 1 no committee should report a bill such as this.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I can throw any particular light on this question, because I myself have not given it any thorough consideration and it is the first time that the point of order has been raised, so far as I know, under this rule. While the bill itself is of comparatively small importance, the question that the Chair is called upon to decide may be of vast importance, because many bills, though I do not know that this is true, may be on the calendar carrying appropriations, which were reported out of committees before the 1st of last July. It seems to me very clear from a reading of the rule that the resolution of June 1 was not intended to apply to any bills which had theretofore been reported. The rule relates only to the reporting and not to the consideration of bills. It seems to me, therefore, that the question raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] in respect to the time at which it would be proper to raise the point of order has very little to do with the case. The question for the Chair to decide is this: Does the rule apply to anything except the reporting of bills? And if so, the question then arises, Was this bill reported before the rule went into effect? It seems very clear from the phraseology of the last line—

This resolution will take effect on July 1, 1920—

that the language just read expressly excludes any bills on the calendar before that time. It does not seem to me necessary for the Chair to decide whether a different question would arise in case this were a Senate bill. This is a House bill. It was reported on the 14th of April, 1920, when the Committee on Agriculture had full jurisdiction over appropriations. The Committee on Agriculture to-day would not have the right to report such a bill, but did it not have the right to report such a bill at the time it did make that report? It seems to me that is the only question for the Chair to decide, and it seems to me that under those circumstances the Chair must overrule the point of order raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I agree that the point to be decided has been concisely stated by both the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], but I submit that making this rule effective as of July 1, 1920, is not controlling at all in this instance. Here is a matter brought up for consideration in the House. The rules of the House, however, have been changed since the measure was reported and since it went on the calendar, and the rule itself says that the point of order may be raised at any time. The first opportunity to raise it is when the matter is brought up for consideration. The question is, Has this committee, under the present existing rules of the House, authority to call up and put upon passage and take up for consideration a measure carrying an appropriation which is in distinct violation of the existing rules of the House, and if a point of order is made against that part of the bill carrying the appropriation shall it not be sustained? That is the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose there are more than two paragraphs in the bill. Does the gentleman contend that the point of order would apply to the bill if the appropriating language were only in one of the paragraphs of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. I think the point of order would lie against either.

The CHAIRMAN. Would lie against the whole bill?

Mr. WALSH. Either against the whole bill or against the appropriating paragraph. My point of order in this instance was made to the concluding language in lines 10, 11, 12, and 13, which is the appropriating language of the bill.

Now, as I was stating, it seems to me that the question—and I agree with the gentleman from Ohio that it is rather an important question—to be determined, in view of the state of the calendar, many measures upon it carrying appropriations from committees previously having appropriating jurisdiction—whether, their jurisdiction having ceased, those measures still can be called up by the committee, taken up for consideration, and appropriations made without being subject to a point of order, despite the fact that the only jurisdiction in the House to-day to report an appropriation measure is vested in one committee and not in these various other committees. They lost their jurisdiction July 1, 1920. That is true as to reporting anything subsequent to that, and if there is anything still on the calendar, I submit, from the language of Rule XXI, paragraph 5, that still the point of order can be made.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the standing rule of the House for many years, paragraph 2 of Rule XXI, provided:

> No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law—

And so forth.

That has been construed to mean that you could not make a point of order against a general appropriation bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations on the ground it had no authority to report the bill, but when the item of the bill in violation of the rule is reached on a reading of the bill a point of order can be made against that item, not against the bill itself. Now, the language of the new rule is in a different form. It provides:

> No bill or joint resolution carrying appropriation shall be reported by any committee not having jurisdiction to report appropriations, nor shall an amendment proposing an appropriation be in order during the consideration—

And so forth.

I think it is perfectly plain, to begin with, that when an item is proposed here by way of amendment to amend this bill by making an appropriation it would be subject to the rule and would be out of order, but what I hope the Chair will not feel that he is called upon to decide is whether this rule forbids the committee to make report of a bill at all. It is perfectly plain to me, to my mind at least, that points of order can not be made against the bill here. The bill was reported before the rule was adopted. The bill was in order when it was reported. The rule did not strike the bill from the calendar. It did not return the bill to the committee. The bill is properly before the committee in that respect, and the only question is whether the rule shall be enforced when a bill comes up for consideration as to items in the bill. An amendment plainly would be subject to a point of order. Is an item in the bill carrying an appropriation subject to a point of order? Now, if we should hold under this rule it meant exactly what it said, that a point of order could be made on the reporting of a bill, strike the bill off the calendar on a point of order, what will we do with Senate bills that carry items of appropriation?

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. I have had the impression that the expression saying that the point of order may be raised at any time was included for this reason——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know why it was included.

Mr. GARRETT. The custom is when an appropriation bill is reported from the floor that some Member reserves all points of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This does not affect appropriation bills.

Mr. GARRETT. This does not affect appropriation bills, but it does the reverse. It provides that a legislative bill shall not carry appropriations in it. If that old order had been observed and you were required to reserve your point of order at the time and these bills are reported to the basket, of course you could not have raised the point of order, and this language, at least it was my impression, was to meet that condition. I may be wrong.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The language was put in because of the practice in another body. In this House it has been the rule that the point of order must be made before the debate begins, but in the Senate they can discuss an item for a week and at the end of that time make a point of order, insist upon it, and if the point of order is sustained it goes out. There they can raise the point of order at any time. It was intended by this rule to permit the same thing to be done in the House. Now, I do not care how the Chair rules on this proposition, except I hope the Chair will not feel constrained to rule upon the question of whether this rule forbids a committee to make a report upon a bill at all which has been referred to it, although the language of the rule says it can not make the report. It is sufficient, it seems to me, to decide upon the item of the bill subject to the point of order and not endeavor to rule the authority to report a bill which has been referred to it as out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The bill under consideration was introduced in the House on April 1 and referred to the Committee on Agriculture. At that time the Committee on Agriculture had jurisdiction over appropriations for the support of the Department of Agriculture. The committee deliberated upon the bill, and on the 28th of April reported it from the committee and it went on the calendar. It remained there and was on the calendar on the 1st day of July when this rule was adopted:

> No bill or joint resolution carrying appropriations shall be reported by any committee not having jurisdiction to report appropriations, nor shall an amendment proposing an appropriation be in order during the consideration of a bill or joint resolution reported by a committee not having that jurisdiction. A question of order on an appropriation in any such bill, joint resolution, or amendment thereto may be raised at any time.

Is this bill, as a whole, subject to the point of order? Whether the Chair should hold that to be the rule the bill being one paragraph, the decision would not necessarily have application to bills which were not similarly constructed. This bill is in one paragraph, and if one portion of the paragraph is subject to the point of order the entire paragraph would go out under the rules of the House. The important question is as to whether or not the appropriating clause in this bill is subject to a point of order and therefore vitiates the bill under the new rule. The rules of the House are made for the purpose of enabling the House to expedite its business and the rules should have a reasonable construction. The Committee on Agriculture had jurisdiction over appropriations at the time the bill was referred to it and reported by it and placed on the calendar.

That jurisdiction continued. The bill might have been acted upon at any time before the 1st of July without question. Shall an amendment to clause 5 of Rule XXI, effective on the 1st of July, be so construed as to render void all the business of the House of a similar character reported by the committees of the House prior to the 1st of July? The Chair is of the opinion that that would not be a proper interpretation of the rules of the House; it would not tend to expedite the business of the House. If this point of order were to be sustained, it would set aside all that has been done and send this bill back to the Committee on Agriculture. The Chair does not think where a committee having had jurisdiction, and having properly acted upon the subject matter of a bill at the time, that a rule subsequently adopted should be so construed as to retroact on work of committees already done under the rules. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is now undertaking to complete work that was properly done by the Committee on Agriculture and reported to the House on the 28th day of April last. The Chair, therefore, feels constrained to overrule the point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and overrules the point of order.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to say just a few words in support of the bill.

The Department of Agriculture took up the work of experimentation in California at these two places a number of years ago, and it may seem now that the title to these parcels of land should have been acquired, but the department did not take that course. It accepted the offer made of the use of the land without charge to the Government, and during the years that have passed a very large number of roots and cuttings and settings and plants of one kind and another have been put in the ground in each one of these places, making plats of ground, with what is in them, places of very large value. Now, conditions have arisen by which the land is no longer available to the Government unless it shall acquire title, and conditions are such that the valuable property in and connected with the land belonging to the Government can not be removed.

The cancellation of the lease, the leaving of the land by the Government, will destroy all that valuable property and result in very great loss, and the department and the country will lose much of the advantage of all that has been done. It is said it is work the State of California should have carried on itself, because it is peculiarly local. That is not entirely true. It is a matter of general interest, notwithstanding the statement of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] who says the work is local. That is not true. This entire work is of general interest.

The Committee on Agriculture rarely, if ever, recommends a proposition or advises an appropriation of money for carrying on work entirely of local interest to the State in which it is to be done. It must be something of interest to the entire country or of more than State interest. We think the work which has been carried on is of such large importance as not at all to be open to the objection made by the distinguished gentleman from New York. And for us to say that the work on experimentation in grapes and vines of one kind and another of a very numerous character in those localities has been finished is not correct. The department is carrying on new work there, new work is coming on year by year, and new conditions and new problems will come as the years go by. And in the interest of the entire country—of all the country interested in this great industry—these experiment stations should be continued. The amount of money involved is very small, only $27,000. Each of these pieces is worth much more money for other purposes than the owners have asked the Government to pay. The amount of money necessary to continue in the work of experimenting on these propositions will be very small. I do not recall that the department made any estimate or statement to the committee as to how much money would be necessary, but it will be very small, almost insignificant. In my judgment, after mature consideration, the committee having given a great deal of time to the consideration of this matter, the bill ought to be passed.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I think the membership of this House will quite generally agree that any experiment station of general interest to the country or even to one large and important State like California ought to receive very serious consideration before it is discontinued. It seems that in this case an experiment station has been carried on for a long time in cooperation with the State of California, or with individuals in California, or both. It is now proposed to purchase land on which it is located and continue it as an experiment station of the United States exclusively, or at any rate to be owned in fee simple by the United States. As I understand it, that is not the way that most of the experiment stations of the country to-day are carried on. They are largely carried on in connection with the States themselves. I know it is so in the case of my own State. The Federal Government has not bought land and constructed experiment stations as a rule. What I fear is that this is but the beginning of buying land and establishing Government experiment stations all over the United States. It is only the beginning of the trouble and expense when the land is bought. Then we begin to erect the buildings for the stations, and every year we add to them. Then the employees begin to grow in number. In this way we build up another large and expensive Federal agency to do something that might be much better done by the States. In my judgment, the best way, so far as possible, is for the Federal Government to cooperate with the several States in these matters which are so vital to them.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will.

Mr. HUSTED. The gentlemen advocating the passage of this bill and who are more or less familiar with the conditions have stated that a wonderful collection of grapes have been obtained from all parts of the world and have been planted on these two tracts of land, and that they are very valuable for experimentation purposes. Now, does not the gentleman think that some consideration should be given to that fact, in view of the fact that no suggestion has been made by anybody as to what should be done with these plants if this ground is not purchased; and, further, that there does not seem to be any practical way of acquiring possession of that land except by purchase?

Mr. TILSON. These matters should be seriously considered, and if it be so that the Government stands to lose a considerable amount of valuable property here and no arrangement can be made with the State of California or with individuals in that State by which this very valuable collection may be saved, probably the bill ought to be passed. I am addressing myself to the general proposition.

Mr. FLOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will.

Mr. FLOOD. Would it not be possible to lease a piece of land somewhere else and move these plants to them? The plants belong to the Government.

Mr. TILSON. It seems to me it might be possible. It has not been brought out clearly by the advocates of the bill what it is intended to do with this land when purchased, whether it is intended to cut back the grapevines already on the land and graft upon them Zante grapes, or whether it is the intention to graft table grapes upon the wine-grape vines, or whether it is the intention to continue the experiments with wine grapes, regardless of the eighteenth amendment. Just what it is intended to do here has not yet been made perfectly clear.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is it not one of the particular things that must be borne in mind in connection with grape culture that the special varieties depend altogether upon the character of the soil in which the roots are? How are we going to transplant some kinds of grapes? It is the soil that gives character to the product.

Mr. FLOOD. Is this the only character of land that these grapes will grow in?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman will give attention to the principles of viniculture that are most carefully followed and practiced in Europe, he will recall that sometimes there is the most arbitrary distinction between vineyards, and that a distance of a few feet means an entirely different kind of flavor in the grapes.

Mr. FLOOD. If these particular varieties of grapes will not grow anywhere else, then it would be useless to transplant them.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman follows that theory, he will rid himself and the world of some of the most precious varieties of grapes.

Mr. TILSON. This tract of land would not be of great value for experimental purposes if it grows only a certain kind of grape. If the grapes that grow there will grow nowhere else, what is the use in experimenting with them.

Mr. HERSMAN. Of course, everybody having a knowledge of growing plants knows that not one of these vines could be successfully removed from this particular place. For 15 years the Government has been collecting from all over the world different varieties of grapes to experiment with, and to give that information to the people of the United States in building up their vineyards. The testimony had before the committee is direct that if the United States Government does not buy this particular piece of land which is being held, it will be sold to private individuals. What does that mean, if it is sold to private individuals?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make the pro forma motion to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CANNON. I have listened with much interest to the statements that have been made on this bill in general debate, particularly as to the unnumbered millions of tons of grapes that have been produced in California and shipped all over the United States, and so on. It is a great industry, which is liable now from the want of $27,000 to be destroyed or impaired.

So far as the Government is concerned, this is an agricultural experiment station in California, as I understand, where experiments are made; a station which was founded and paid for by the Government upon land—40 acres—that the Government does not own, and here is a proposition to buy two 20-acre pieces of land to maintain those stations. I have no doubt it would be claimed that they should be maintained in perpetuity, although I do not know. Yet it is of great importance, with these millions of tons of grapes that are being sent everywhere in the United States.

One gentleman said the price of grapes had been raised three, four, or five times; indeed somebody said it had been raised ten times. But let that be as it may, this is a precedent that is being set. It is said it will only cost $27,000. What it is to cost through the ages, and through the years to come, I do not know.

We are being taxed pretty heavily, and we are going to be taxed still more heavily, and this Republican Party is soon to come into full power, as you know, and we have got a certain policy to follow, so far as we can, and reduce expenditures. We are to reduce appropriations. I can hear many of the brethren sitting around me say that we are to reduce appropriations; that is to be done, and if not accomplished we will be weighed in the balance and held responsible.

I am going to vote against this bill. It authorizes the purchase of these two tracts of land for $27,000, and as I said, if there is not enough interest in it, with the hundreds of thousands of grapevines, as it is claimed, growing there, and if it would all go to the demnition bowwows unless the land is bought by the Government—if that is true, then let it go. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, some one has said that I am opposed to this measure. I am. Some one has said that the land that it is proposed to buy is owned by the Wine Growers' Association of California. To me it looks very much like a proposition where the wine growers had used the Government for their experimentation for 15 years, and now they have come to the point where they do not need this proposition any longer and want to turn the land back at a profit. On the same theory, it seems to me, every brewer in this country who has been put out of business by the Volstead Act might just as well come here and ask that we purchase his brewery.

That is one reason why I am opposed to the proposition, because I do not think the Government can stand for expenditures of that sort.

The point I made originally here is that it is a fact—and no one is able to say that it is not—that 90 per cent or more of the value of this experiment station has been enjoyed by and confined to the State of California, and under those circumstances it is my belief that the State of California should carry that expense herself. And that is one of the reasons why I am opposed to this bill, and would be opposed to any other legislation of the same kind. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out all after the semicolon following "$15,000," in line 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Line 10, after "$15,000," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not care what the committee does about it. This merely strikes out the appropriation and leaves the authorization, so that if the bill becomes a law the appropriation will come in the proper appropriation bill instead of being segregated here, where nobody will look for it. If we are going to have these new rules enforced, so far as appropriations are concerned, we might as well have them enforced.

Personally I expect to vote for this bill. I am not disposed to be overextravagant, and I doubt whether the grape industry of California will go to ruin if this bill is not passed. But, after all, we do carry on a large amount of work akin to this, experimental work in the Department of Agriculture, designed to benefit all people who may be interested. I can see no reason why we should not carry on this work in California. Doubtless it grew up without any authorization of law to begin with. Somebody in the Department of Agriculture under some appropriation took possession of ground which was voluntarily given for this purpose.

Probably the vines were mostly given to them, but they carried on some work which was useful. It is still useful. Some gentlemen may express the idea that the work ought to have been finished by this time; but as long as grape vines are grown, and that will be as long, probably, as the human race exists, they will keep on finding something new about grapes and grape vines. Wherever the Government does this thing, it does good work if it is done economically.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that he was in doubt.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 26.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13402) for the purchase of land occupied by experiment vineyards near Fresno and Oakville, Calif., had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The question is on the passage of the bill. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 192, nays 106, not voting 133, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota, from the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 15130) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, ordered printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GARRETT reserved all points of order.

IRELAND.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll of committees.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs was called.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs present, and as a member of that committee I call up a resolution reported by that committee and which the chairman was authorized to call up—House concurrent resolution 57—expressing the sympathy of the Congress of the United States with the aspirations of the Irish people for a government of its own choice. It is a very mild resolution, but it will help the Irish patriots in their struggle for self-government to have the House act upon it at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Virginia authorized to call it up?

Mr. FLOOD. Only by being a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I did not have any special authority.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman must be authorized under the rule.

Mr. FLOOD. The rule says that the committee which reported the resolution shall call it up, and this committee reported the resolution on the 28th of May. It was not brought up, because there was no opportunity between that time and the adjournment of Congress on the 5th of June. There is nothing in the rule which denies to any member of the committee the right to call up a resolution reported by the committee.

This is the first Calendar Wednesday that the committee has been called since the resolution was reported. I would like to see the resolution brought before the House and have the House give it consideration.

The SPEAKER. The impression of the Chair was that the gentleman must be authorized, but the Chair will examine the rule.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, when this resolution was reported on the 28th of May——

The SPEAKER. Who reported the resolution?

Mr. FLOOD. The chairman, Mr. PORTER. He was authorized to call it up, but he is not present, and I thought I would perform the service for him. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not claim to be authorized by the committee to call it up?

Mr. FLOOD. No; I think the chairman was authorized to call it up.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it does not require express authority of the committee in committee under the Calendar Wednesday rule.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee think that any member of the committee could call up any business?

Mr. GARRETT. I see no reason why. This is reported and is on the calendar, and therefore the committee is back of its report.

Mr. FLOOD. In addition to that the committee authorized it to be called up on the first Calendar Wednesday that the Committee on Foreign Affairs was called.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Does the gentleman understand that the committee authorized the chairman to call it up on the first Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. FLOOD. I assume that that was the intention, that it should be called up on the first Calendar Wednesday if it had not been acted upon before the committee was reached on a Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I have no such recollection; I do not recollect that there was anything said about Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. FLOOD. The committee authorized it to be called up, and the assumption is that it was to be called up on the first Calendar Wednesday when that committee was called, if not acted upon sooner, and there are no other bills or resolutions from the Committee on Foreign Affairs on the calendar.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, yes; there are several.

Mr. FLOOD. At any rate, that was the assumption. During the closing days the chairman had no opportunity to call that up, because he could not get unanimous consent to call the matter up and he could not get recognition from the Speaker to move a suspension of the rules.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this discussion is all improper, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, the Calendar Wednesday rule reads:

> 7. On Wednesday of each week no business shall be in order except as provided by paragraph 4 of this rule, unless the House by a two-thirds vote on motion to dispense therewith shall otherwise determine. On such a motion there may be debate not to exceed five minutes for and against.
> On a call of committees under this rule bills may be called up from either the House or the Union Calendars excepting bills which are privileged under the rules; but bills called up from the Union Calendar shall be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The point I make is that it is not necessary for a Member to have special authority to call it up, being favorably reported by the committee and being on the calendar, it is presumed that it has been authorized. That is a conclusive presumption. If it should be held that only the chairman could call up bills, then the entire work of the committee would be placed at the mercy of the chairman of the committee.

The chairman of the committee might be against a bill that was reported and refuse to call it up.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield for a question?

Mr. FLOOD. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. In this case, the gentleman from Virginia says that the chairman was authorized by the committee to call this up. Does that give authority to a minority member of the committee to call it up?

Mr. FLOOD. I will be glad to yield to a majority member to call it up.

Mr. GARRETT. So far as the rule itself is concerned, I know of nothing which prescribes who shall call up a bill. Of course, as a matter of practice a bill is called up by the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. It is called up by the member who is authorized to do so, not necessarily by the chairman. Other members are often so authorized.

Mr. GARRETT. Of course, the only official notice that the House has of the action of the committee is that which is contained in the favorable report as it appears on the calendar. The House has no official information as to any action taken in committee directing any particular member to call up a bill.

The SPEAKER. In this case the House has been notified by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD].

Mr. FLOOD. I have a report of the bill in my hand. The report was made on May 29.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I happen to be a member of that committee and I was present when that resolution was reported or passed upon. As I recall it the motion was that the resolution be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass. I think that will be found in the minutes of the committee.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the authority is to the committee to call up a bill. I have seen the matter questioned before. If a bill is called up by a member of the committee who states that he is authorized to call it up, the Chair accepts the statement, but the authority is to the committee. The committee can delegate any member of the committee to call up the bill. It is true, usually, that the authority is not given. The rule provides that a committee may call up a bill, and the Chair has ruled on more than one occasion that he accepts the statement of the chairman of the committee or a member of the committee that he is authorized to call up the bill, but the authority is not to any Member of the House to call up a bill, nor, likewise, to a member of the committee who is not authorized to call it up.

Mr. FLOOD. One member authorized to call up a bill might defeat it absolutely by being opposed to it and never call it up, and thus defeat the wishes and action of the committee.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But a wise committee frequently authorizes any member of a committee to call up a bill.

Mr. GARRETT. May I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that there is nothing in the Calendar Wednesday rule which limits it to the committee?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Calendar Wednesday rule simply extends the authority to call bills up from the Union Calendar, in accordance with the previous rule of the House, and puts certain limitations on debate, and so forth. So far as the practice is concerned, the whole thing comes under paragraph 4 of Rule XXIV. The Calendar Wednesday part of it simply makes application of that rule to the Union Calendar bill.

Mr. FLOOD. Then if one member of the committee was authorized to call up a bill and he was absent continually by reason of sickness or otherwise, nobody could call it up.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the committee desires not to call up a bill, it could find many ways to prevent it being called up.

Mr. FLOOD. And the gentleman from Illinois says that nobody is authorized to call this bill up. What is the status of it then?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That if nobody is authorized to call it up, the status is that the gentleman from Virginia is now authorized to call it up. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLOOD. The resolution has certainly been reported to the House with the recommendation that it be passed, and the Foreign Affairs Committee now has the call.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am frank to say that I am willing that the resolution should be called up. I have my copy of the resolution here with copies of other bills from that committee.

Mr. FLOOD. I suggest that if it is thought a Member of the minority ought not to be permitted to call this resolution up, that some of the members on the majority side of the Foreign Affairs Committee who I see upon the floor take advantage of this and call the resolution up.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, we know that this whole discussion or effort by the gentleman is purely political, and that while he was in power he would not attempt to do it, but the moment he gets out of power he tries to make trouble. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLOOD. That is an unfair statement.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I forced a vote in the Democratic Congress on a similar resolution when the gentleman was trying his best to prevent it.

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. I suppose he is mistaken; I hope he is, for his statement is entirely incorrect. When I was the chairman of the committee we reported an Irish resolution to this House. I was very strongly in favor of that resolution, and I secured recognition by the then Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], and moved to suspend the rules and pass it, and it was passed by an overwhelming vote. I did all that anyone could have done for that resolution, known as the Gallagher resolution. The gentleman is dreaming. I was earnestly for it all of the time, and I am earnestly for this resolution, and now that men, women, and children are being indiscriminately murdered in Ireland, cities are being ruthlessly burned and turned into veritable battle fields, no better occasion could be selected by the Congress of the United States to express its interest in and sympathy for the Irish people and their cause.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This discussion is out of order.

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] started the improper discussion. I want to say that it is not political now with me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds a ruling by Mr. Speaker Carlisle on this very subject. When Mr. Speaker Carlisle was in the chair a similar question arose, and he said:

The Chair decides that under the rule a measure must be called up by the committee having it in charge, which means that the committee must authorize it to be called up, just as a committee authorizes a report to be made, or as a committee is required to authorize a motion to suspend the rules when committees are called for that purpose. But whether the committee did or did not authorize its chairman to call up a particular measure is a question of fact which, of course, the Chair can not decide. * * * That is a question of fact which must be decided by the committee itself, and the Chair must depend, of course, upon the good faith of Members in regard to that matter. Where there is a difference of opinion upon a question of that sort, it is impossible for the Chair to decide it.

The gentleman from Virginia himself stated that the chairman was authorized to call it up. He does not claim that he was authorized to call it up, and therefore it seems to the Chair, under the decision of Mr. Speaker Carlisle, that he has not the right to call it up.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will be glad for any Member of the majority to call it up.

Mr. SNELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk called the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is a motion before the House.

The SPEAKER. What is the motion?

Mr. SEARS. The gentleman from New York made a motion to adjourn.

Mr. SNELL. I was not recognized.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware that the gentleman made a motion to adjourn.

Mr. SEARS. The gentleman made a motion to adjourn and everybody heard it. I make the motion, Mr. Speaker, that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida makes the motion that the House do no adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

SETTLEMENT WITH LESSEES, CAMP FUNSTON, KANS.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 3706, on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar and the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3706, with Mr. HUSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3706, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3706) authorizing the Secretary of War to make settlement with the lessees who erected buildings on a five-year lease on the zone at Camp Funston, Kans., and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to make such settlement as he thinks just and proper, with the several lessees who erected buildings under a five-year lease, with renewal clauses, on the zone of Camp Funston activities and amusements, at Camp Funston, Kans., the buildings having been erected under the authority of the War Department and at the invitation of the department of camp activities, under leases which were properly approved, but which have been canceled before the expiration of any of said leases and over the protest of the holders.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield a minute before he starts? I want to know something about the time the ranking Member on my side will have.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The rule allows not more than two hours' debate, and the practice is that the gentleman recognized in favor of the bill gets an hour, and if there is opposition then the opposition is entitled to an hour.

Mr. QUIN. I guess I had better take charge of this hour over here, then.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. QUIN. I do not say——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is a unanimous report of the committee on it.

Mr. QUIN. I simply wanted to save the hour.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman does not lose——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If I take the hour, if there is no recognition in opposition, the debate is closed at the end of the hour which I control.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman begins may I ask him a question? I have understood from the gentleman that there will be an amendment offered by the committee to insist upon limiting the amount that could be collected from the Government to the actual loss. Is that the fact?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. That is true, and I expect to offer the amendment at the end of my remarks.

Mr. BLANTON. Your committee will insist upon that amendment going into the bill?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes, sir. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, when Camp Funston was organized at the beginning of the war it was decided by the authorities in command at that camp to establish a zone of activities for the purpose of assisting the morale and for the convenience of the troops which were to be trained there. The Eighty-ninth and Ninety-second Divisions were to be trained at Camp Funston, and this zone of activities, comprising theaters, banks, halls, schools, stores, barber shops, restaurants, and other amusements and activities, was to be located in the center of the camp. The War Department gave permission for the location of this zone of activities on the condition that it was to be constructed without expense to the Government under a five-year lease. The officers in charge of the camp solicited concessionaires to come to Camp Funston and build upon the Government reservation these buildings which they designed after plans they had prepared. I have here a picture of the zone of activities at Camp Funston, four blocks long, as built by the requirements of the officers in charge there. The operations for the building of this zone began in October, 1917. It was designed and built under the direction of Maj. Foster, who, before his entrance into the service, had been an architect at Kansas City, Mo. He drew the plans and required each concessionaire to build buildings as prescribed. They also required the building of a heating plant separate and apart from that of the camp, which cost in the neighborhood of $110,000, and to which each concessionaire subscribed according to his use of the plant. The buildings comprised four large blocks, which were built upon concrete piers or foundations and covered with lath and concrete, and were fairly substantial buildings.

They cost nearly a million dollars. In April, 1918, when the contract under which these concessionaires were to build was finally produced by the Government and when these activities had been fairly under way, it was found that in the contract which the Government required to be signed by the concessionaires was a 10 days' forfeiture clause, giving the Government the right to order these men off the reservation and forfeit all rights and all interests and title in the buildings on 10 days' notice. This stopped the activities on the buildings in this zone. Gen. Wood, who was in command of the camp, and his judge advocates were called into consultation, and through Maj. Foster the concessionaires were advised that while this 10 days' forfeiture clause was required by the Government and could not be abrogated or withdrawn from the contract, that it would not be called into use except as a war necessity or when the concessionaires should have violated some rule of the camp. The men who were furnishing the money or financing contractors or concessionaires did not want to accept this explanation, but did so, as they had purchased material and had commenced the construction of their buildings, and they went ahead under the contract, they being on their face for a 5-year term. Trusting upon the assurances of those in command for the Government that the 10 days' forfeiture clause would not be invoked except for either a military necessity or for their own violation of the rules of this camp, it being assured them that a military necessity would mean a need for the ground, and as there are about 30 square miles of land in that reservation owned by the Government, they were convinced that no forfeiture would result from that cause, and were willing to assume the risk of a forfeiture because of their own violation of the rules of the camp.

The zone of activities was completed and was a great success, as testified by Gen. Wood and Maj. Foster before the Committee on War Claims. It afforded entertainment for the men who were training there, there being no city near the camp. It furnished them not only a place of amusement, but also a place to be shaved and to buy food and other things that they cared to buy, and to entertain the parents when they came to visit them at Camp Funston; and, as Gen. Wood testified, it was so great a success that if he were to be called upon to have charge of another camp the first thing he would do would be to create a like zone. This zone of activities——

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Is it intended to compensate organizations such as the Y. M. C. A., the Knights of Columbus, and the Young Men's Hebrew Association for buildings erected?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Not under this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. That is what I wanted to know. Is it only intended for the purpose of paying the claims of individuals who have erected these buildings?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. That were erected on the Government reserve?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes, sir; and the buildings have become the property of the Government.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield to another question bearing on that point?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. These men who erected these buildings went into it as a private venture for gain?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I suppose so.

Mr. BEGG. And they simply took a gamble and lost?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. That is hardly a fair statement. They went into it for a chance of gain, but they were given a five-year lease, and were assured that their contract would not be abrogated or canceled unless they themselves committed some violation of the rules of the camp or there was a military necessity for canceling the contract.

Mr. BEGG. And the contract was canceled?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The contract was canceled in about a year and a half, but not because of a military necessity or because of a violation of the rules of the camp.

Mr. BEGG. Why were the contracts canceled?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. For the purpose, I think, as the hearings show, of getting possession of the buildings and later using them for the war vocational school and other camp purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will permit me in that connection, they carried on their businesses there for quite a while before the contracts were canceled, and some of these parties made money?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes, sir. Some of them did.

Mr. RAKER. How long did the concessionaires use the buildings after the contracts were completed?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Until the fall of 1919; about a year and a half, perhaps; some of them; some of them two years.

Mr. RAKER. What is the amount involved that the concessionaires desire to adjust with the War Department? About how much do they claim?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Under the amendment I shall offer it will amount to probably $60,000 to $70,000.

Mr. RAKER. The total amount?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The total amount.

Mr. RAKER. In other words, if the Government should pay from $60,000 to $70,000 to the concessionaires, all the legal obligations and rights to this place would be disposed of and the Government would be clear of any dispute?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes. The Government has possession of them now and is using them, and then there will be no controversy whatever.

Mr. RAKER. Then this question: What are the concessionaires seeking?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Under the bill they were seeking to recover the value of the buildings, but under the amendment I shall offer only those who lost money will be recompensed for their losses.

Mr. RAKER. I see. And the gentleman thinks it will be about $65,000?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I do not think it will be over that.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. GARD. I have been reading the report. Possibly the gentleman can enlighten me as to what is exactly to be done here. The Secretary of War has said that these concessions were made with the different concessionaires on leases, and he has said that each lease is now being adjusted. He says that these are now being canceled in accordance with the terms of the leases themselves. So whatever is done in the end would depend upon the agreement between the concessionaires and the Government, would it not?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I do not think the gentleman understood my statement regarding it. The leases were supposed to be made for five years, but contained a clause which had been interpreted as I have explained, giving the Government a right to forfeit the leases and forcing the concessionaire off of the reservation on a 10-day notice.

Mr. GARD. Under the law which we passed the Secretary of War can cancel and adjust leases.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes; but after taking the matter under advisement he asked that some authority be given him by Congress. I will explain if given an opportunity.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I will.

Mr. SNELL. I was going to ask the gentleman if the Military Committee had any hearings whatever in regard to this bill?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I do not know whether they had or not. I am not a member of that committee. Our committee had several hearings on this bill.

Mr. SNELL. There were some hearings before the War Claims Committee, but you can not find any record of any hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I am not a member of that committee, and I am not advised of what hearings they had. Our hearings before the War Claims Committee were had when the bill introduced in the House was referred to our committee, but the Senate acted first and passed the bill, and when it came over to this House it was sent to the Military Affairs Committee, which reported it out to this House with the recommendation that it should be passed; it was then that our War Claims Committee discussed the amendment which I shall offer limiting the claims to actual losses to be proven before the Court of Claims.

Mr. SNELL. You do not know that they had any?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I do not know that they had any, or that they did not have any.

Mr. SNELL. It was brought out at our hearings originally that there is only one or perhaps two claimants. How many claimants are there at the present time, so far as you know?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I am advised that there will be perhaps six, but that one of them may not press his claim.

Mr. SNELL. What does the gentleman think will be the total amount of the claims to be presented?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I think from about $60,000 to $65,000. It may be more or it may be less.

Mr. SNELL. But there is no evidence on file to show the amount, is there?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Well, in response to your request, I asked for the claims, and had them sworn to and filed with our War Claims Committee, and they are now on file before our committee.

Mr. SNELL. That includes all of them, does it, as you know personally?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes, sir; all that I know of.

Mr. SNELL. This bill, as it is presented, simply leaves the matter open to the Secretary of War to adjust these claims as he sees fit?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes; but we have an amendment.

Mr. SNELL. I understand that the gentleman has an amendment that he will present which, instead of referring it to the Secretary of War, will give these people the right to go before the Court of Claims and recover the loss they have actually sustained?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. These were the people who erected the buildings, were they?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. They were the ones who constructed the buildings and entered into contract with the Government?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes. They entered into contract for a period of five years.

Mr. MADDEN. Was there a provision in the contract for the cancellation of the concession?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes. In this contract there was a provision that the Government could cancel the privilege within 10 days.

Mr. MADDEN. That was a provision inserted in the contract?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. They knew that that provision was in the contract?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes; they did.

Mr. MADDEN. So that when they erected the buildings they did it as a business risk?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. They did; but they were advised by the officers of the camp that that clause of the contract would not be exercised by the Government except as it might be rendered necessary by military necessity, or from their own violation of the camp rules; and under this assurance they went ahead and invested this money.

Mr. MADDEN. But these men must also have been advised, if they had an attorney, that these officers had not been authorized to make such a promise as that. They must have known that such a promise would not be binding.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I am only stating what I believe to be the facts.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman now, as a Member of the House, believe that this claim ought to be adjudicated?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I certainly do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. When the concessionaires went into the original contracts and built these buildings with their own money, what was the intention as to what should become of these buildings themselves when they ceased to use them?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. It was the intention that they should become the property of the Government at the end of the 5-year period.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. At the end of the 5-year period or on vacancy?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. On vacancy, of course; but they went into this with the understanding that they were to have the use of these buildings for a period of five years.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. Was it not brought out before the Committee on War Claims that at the time these buildings were taken over there were so few men there at the camps that these large concessionaires were not being run at a profit?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Some of them were not run at a profit. One of the theaters was being run. Whether it was the larger one or not I do not know.

Mr. SNELL. It is stated that the one that is making the large claim here, the large theater, was not being run and it could not be run at a profit with the number of people there.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. No. I believe it was the smaller one that was run at a profit.

Mr. SNELL. There were two theaters at that time?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes; but they could not both be run at a profit. One of the theaters was in operation, but the Government took it over and used the property. I understand the camp had something like 5,000 men in it at that time.

Mr. BOIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I will yield for a short question.

Mr. BOIES. Is it not a fact that Gen. Leonard Wood was in command at Camp Funston, and he sent out his agents to induce men to invest their money in this proposition?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. BOIES. And when they came to sign this contract, with the forfeiture clause in it, Gen. Leonard Wood guaranteed to them that that clause would not be insisted upon, and upon his promise they signed the contract?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I do not want to say his "promise," but he assured them that with safety they could go on with the contracts.

Mr. BOIES. Yes; and in a short time Gen. Leonard Wood went to some other camp, and a new man came in and forfeited the contract under the forfeiture clause, without regard to any complaints?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes; upon the forfeiture clause, which they had been assured would not be used against them.

Mr. BOIES. Is it not a fact that some $1,000,000 was invested in these plants?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. BOIES. And these buildings will be taken over by the Government simply by the payment of $60,000 or $65,000, although the concessionaires lost much more?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes; and the camp received over $200,000 in cash from the concessionaire, representing the 10 per cent that was paid from the gross income of the concessionaires.

Mr. BOIES. And do you think that anyone in this House reading Gen. Leonard Wood's statement before the committee would have any objection to the approval of this bill?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I can not think they will if I can get them to understand the proposition.

Mr. JEFFERIS. Was this assurance given by Gen. Wood in writing, or was it verbal?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. It was verbal, of course.

Now, I should like to continue my statement. Under these conditions the zone was completed—the best zone in any camp in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I should like 10 minutes more. I have had nearly all my time taken up in answering questions.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I yield to the gentleman five minutes, and we will see how far we can get. There are several other requests for time within the hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The zone having been completed, these men continued in these activities for about a year and a half, when Gen. Wood was removed from the command of the camp and Gen. McLachlan placed in charge. Soon after that he caused to be served the 10 days' notice requiring these men to get off the reservation and leave their buildings. They immediately protested and went to the War Department. The result was that Senator CURTIS, after a conference, I think, with the War Department, introduced this bill in the Senate, which I introduced in the House. It passed the Senate, but before its passage there the bill in the House was referred to our Committee on War Claims, and Gen. Wood and Maj. Foster being in the city were asked to come before that committee, and we had several hearings upon the matter, in which Gen. Wood and Maj. Foster substantiated the statements I have made, saying that they induced these concessionaires to build this zone for the benefit of the camp; that they followed out the plans required of them; that when the question came up about signing the contract with the 10 days' notice of forfeiture clause they assured them that this clause in the contract would not be taken advantage of except for two reasons, one that of military necessity, which he did not think would be invoked, because of the large size of the reservation, it containing about 20,000 acres, the other reason being their own violation of the rules of the camp. But without claim of a military necessity or any charge of a violation of the rules of the camp, this forfeiture clause was used, and the men were ordered out of their buildings and off the reservation. The Government then immediately proceeded to occupy these buildings. They used the theater; they took charge of the bank and put their zone finance organization in it. They took charge of the restaurant; they took charge of the pool hall and the barber shop. They also used the other buildings for their motor school and their carpenter shop and their other vocational-training activities in connection with their camp school.

This was the condition when these men came and urged before the committee that these claims be referred to the War Department for adjustment.

Before our committee some of our members urged that only those who had lost money in the enterprise should be recompensed; that none of those who had pursued their activities to the point where they had earned enough money to pay themselves for the buildings should be paid anything, and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS] prepared an amendment which in his absence in committee work I have promised to introduce, providing that instead of these claims being referred to the Secretary of War they should be referred to the Court of Claims, with instructions to consider only those claims where the concessionaires lost money upon their enterprise and the building they had constructed and which the Government has and is using.

Mr. SWOPE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. If the gentleman will make it short.

Mr. SWOPE. Has the gentleman the names of the parties who lost money?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Their names are filed with the committee.

Mr. SWOPE. Has the gentleman the exact amounts?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes; as they are stated in their sworn claims.

Mr. SWOPE. How much did they amount to, approximately?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Approximately $54,000 or $55,000, but with interest they will amount to a few thousand dollars more.

Mr. CONNALLY. Where can we get copies of these hearings?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. On the desk there.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does the gentleman intend to introduce that amendment before he leaves the floor, so that it may be pending?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I will. During the time that these concessionaires were operating on the zone the Government also collected under its contract 10 per cent on the gross income received by the concessionaires. Under this provision the camp obtained over $200,000. So the camp organization had $200,000 cash, and the Government has these four blocks of buildings, costing $1,000,000, with a heating plant that cost $110,000. The amendment provides that only those who lost money shall be compensated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Can I have additional time to offer this amendment?

Mr. TILSON. I make the point of order that this is not the time for the gentleman to offer the amendment.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I recall a number of cases where private individuals or corporations have erected buildings in years gone by at military posts for one purpose and another, authorized by the War Department under contracts similar to the one now pending before us. When they were dismissed from further privilege or use of the buildings which they erected, that ended the obligation of the Government.

There are pending before the Committee on Claims probably many claims of this sort, but I have never known one yet to be allowed. I have a claim for one of my constituents amounting to several thousand dollars. It has been pending before the Committee on Claims for years. It is a claim where I believe there is a good deal of merit, but no consideration has been given to it; and how this bill got away from the Committee on Claims and before the House is more than I can understand.

Gen. Wood in his testimony before the Committee on War Claims says that there was a general understanding with these people that they probably would not be disturbed in the occupation of the buildings they were about to erect if they carried out the terms of the agreement. But Gen. Wood also says that the general understanding was that the understanding was in no sense an obligation against the Government. Then, further on, Gen. Wood says that he had been transferred from this command to another and another commander came into power, and under the order of the other commander the buildings were set apart for other purposes and the people that erected them were taken out.

In response to a question asked by the committee, Gen. Wood says that nearly all the concessionnaires made money. Only two of them did not; the two that did not make any money were the bank and the theater, but no one suggests that those who made a lot of money should come in here and divide it with the Government. Just as soon as some person who enters into a plan to supply buildings in which he was permitted to conduct business for the sole purpose of making money lost a few dollars the Government must be held responsible.

Now, I claim, Mr. Chairman, that these men took the ordinary business risk. It is true the risk they took was a hazardous risk, because it was within the power of the War Department at any time to cancel the contract within 10 days, although the contract extended for a period of 5 years. Under the contract these men knew when they made it that they had a 10 days' cancellation clause. If they had made money they would not be here.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. If these gentlemen turned over to the Government their buildings and the Government profited by the use of the buildings, ought they not to be compensated?

Mr. MADDEN. The contract provided that the Government should own the buildings at the end of the period.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Does the gentleman think the Government should put these men out without any fault on their part and take possession of their buildings?

Mr. MADDEN. They were permitted to remain unless some military necessity arose, and the mere suggestion that a military necessity might arise was notice to them that it could arise.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. It did not arise.

Mr. MADDEN. It must have arisen or they would not have been put out. Now, to conclude, I assume that these men were men of ordinary business sense. The purpose for which they entered into the contract was to give them an opportunity to make money.

The testimony shows that the most of them made money and only two lost. These two men are here now asking the Congress of the United States to give them $65,000. The contract provided that they were to pay a certain percentage of their receipts into the Treasury of the United States. But the Government, through the military authorities, remitted this provision of the law immediately after the armistice was signed.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The gentleman means to be fair—after the Government had received $200,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; but they could have insisted on the payment of the percentage from the day the buildings were erected until the business closed, but they did not do it. To the extent that this remission was made, the Government made them a contribution, and to that extent they have been saved from a greater loss; and those who made money have had added to their profits more than they would have been able to make if it had not been for the liberality of the Government. Gen. Wood had no power to make any contract to pay these men anything except what was in the contract made originally.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] I really do not understand how this bill came on the floor of the House from the Committee on Military Affairs. This matter was before the War Claims Committee. That committee held quite extended hearings on the bill. I sent down to-day to the Military Affairs Committee and was informed by the clerk of that committee that they had never held any hearings. It does not seem to me proper for a large committee of the House to bring a matter of this kind on the floor, which involves such an important precedent as this bill does, without any hearings whatever.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Does the gentleman not know that we did discuss this before our committee, when the bill as it passed the Senate came over to the House and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs? We consented to let the bill come back and put in this amendment.

Mr. SNELL. The fact is that these people went there when there were fifty or sixty thousand men. They thought they were going to make a great deal of money by getting these concessions. If the war had lasted long enough they would have made a lot of money. The war did not last long enough, and, according to the testimony before the committee, they did not make anything. There were only two at that time who did not make any money. But when this matter came before Congress, and it got to be rumored around that part of the country that Congress was going to reimburse those who had not made any money, the original two soon became six, and there is no reason to suppose, notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG], that he does not think there will be others who, when they look over their books and find that they did not make any money, will come to Congress to get their share.

I think this is establishing a precedent that ought not to be established. These people went there as a business proposition to make money. The war did not last long enough and, therefore, they did not make the money and we are to blame and must make up the shortage. The conditions of the contract were distinctly understood when they constructed these buildings. There is no legal obligation on the part of the Government. If you do this, you are simply giving this money to these people because they did not make money with the concessions that they got from the Federal Government.

Mr. JEFFERIS. Did the Government take the buildings after the armistice, or before?

Mr. SNELL. I can not tell the exact date, but I do know this, and it was brought out in the testimony before the committee, there were not enough men there at the time the Government took the buildings over so that these men were making any money.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. But those operating were making money.

Mr. SNELL. There were a lot not operating.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The bank was operating there.

Mr. SNELL. Yes; but the two big concessions, the bank and the large theater, were not making any money at that time.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Does the gentleman think that one picture show will not make money in a town of 5,000 people?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; but we are considering them all, whether running or not. They all come in under this bill.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Would not the one that was running be making money?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, the position I take is that at the time the Government took over this property there were not enough men there so that they could operate all of these at a profit, and they really did not lose anything by having the Government take them over. I asked that question of a woman who appeared before our committee, and she said that was true.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask if anyone has been recognized to control the time in opposition to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. No one has been recognized.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I think half of this time ought to be controlled by some one in opposition to the bill. I can not support this bill, but I do not want to fight my friend ANTHONY.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is, of course, a member of the committee, and if he is opposed to bill is entitled to recognition to control half of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Mississippi opposed to the bill?

Mr. QUIN. I can not vote for this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman is entitled to one hour.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. While of course that is strictly within the intention of the rule, it comes somewhat as an ex post facto proposition here. Once before in consideration of this measure an opportunity was given to some one to claim the hour's time in opposition, and it was not taken.

The gentleman from Mississippi was given an opportunity, and at that time he stated, as I recall, that he was not against the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that he can claim it at any time.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Very true; but meanwhile I have parceled out my time here to those for and against the bill.

Mr. QUIN. I will yield the gentleman that part of the time which he has allotted to me.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. All right. With such an understanding——

Mr. WALSH. We ought to have a quorum here, Mr. Chairman, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HUSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill S. 3706, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. EMERSON, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Nebraska, for one day, on account of sickness.

JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 407. Joint resolution authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1920, on the 20th day of said month.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 16, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

223. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of requested legislation to place the direction and management of all vessels in the service of the Government under the control of the Secretary of the Navy in case of war or national emergency; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

224. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting list of disbursing officers who have been relieved of losses after investigation by the Secretary of the Navy; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

225. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting request for amendment to H. R. 12305, in connection with distant control radio station in Porto Rico; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

226. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting request for legislation for the retirement of certain officers of the Marine Corps on account of disability contracted in line of duty; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

227. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Hudson River, New York, with a view to the removal of a shoal near the steamboat landing at Albany; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

228. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, from the Ordnance Department, statement of the cost of manufacture at the several arsenals, etc.; to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

229. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, from the Office of the Inspector General, reports of inspections of money accounts; to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

230. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriation required for the United States Shipping Board for the fiscal year 1921 (H. Doc. No. 924); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ESCH, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14674) to amend section 501 of the transportation act, 1920, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1123), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15130) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1124), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. SANFORD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11182) for the relief of Benjamin R. Buffington, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1122), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HOCH: A bill (H. R. 15122) to prohibit certain sales for future delivery of grain and cotton; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. CLASSON: A bill (H. R. 15123) for the relief of the Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 15124) to appropriate additional sums for Federal aid in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Roads.

By Mr. EVANS of Montana: A bill (H. R. 15125) to reimburse the State of Montana for expenses incurred by it in suppressing forest fires on Government land during the year 1919; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ESCH: A bill (H. R. 15126) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a Federal power commission; to provide for the improvement of navigation; the development of water power; the use of the public lands in relation thereto, and to repeal section 18 of the river and harbor appropriation act, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1920; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 16, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, at the threshold of the duties of a new day we pause to turn our thoughts toward Thee. We would carry the inspiration of a moment of prayer into the duties of this day. Whether Thou dost call us to things that are great or small we would remember that all has a divine relationship and that we are called to be coworkers with God. Fit us for the high calling of this day and enable us to glorify Thy name through the efforts of our lives and the consecration of our spirits to Thy service. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

He also presented a petition of the executive committee of the National Association of Purchasing Agents, praying for the enactment of legislation to establish commercial bribery as a Federal penal offense, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Detroit Branch No. 1, National Association of Letter Carriers of the United States of America, of Detroit, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation granting an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

MEDALS OF MERIT IN MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, from the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 13264) to provide for the award of a medal of merit to the personnel of the merchant marine of the United States of America.

The passage of the bill is recommended quite strongly by the Secretary of Commerce. It is based upon the report of a special commission that he appointed. The bill has passed the House and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to present, but not in the name of Congress, a medal of merit of appropriate design with a bar and ribbon, together with a rosette or other device to be worn in lieu thereof, to any person who in the merchant marine of the United States between the 6th day of April, 1917, and the 11th day of November, 1918, distinguished himself by extraordinary heroism or distinguished service at sea in the line of duty.

SEC. 2. That no more than one medal of merit shall be issued to any one person, but for each succeeding deed or service sufficient to justify the award of a medal, the President may award a suitable bar or other suitable emblem or insignia to be worn with the decoration and the corresponding rosette or other device.

SEC. 3. That, except as otherwise prescribed herein, no medal or bar or suitable emblem or insignia in lieu of said medal shall be issued to any person after three years from the passage of this act, unless a specific statement or report distinctly setting forth the act or distinguished service and suggesting or recommending official recognition thereof shall have been made and substantiated at the time of the act or service or within three years after the passage of this act.

SEC. 4. That in case an individual who shall distinguish himself dies before the making of the award to which he may be entitled, the award nevertheless may be made and the medal or bar or other emblem or insignia presented to such representative of the deceased as the President may designate.

SEC. 5. The Presicent is authorized to make from time to time any and all rules, regulations, and orders which he shall deem necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WATER POWER IN NATIONAL PARKS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Committee on Commerce directs me to report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4554) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a Federal power commission; to provide for the improvement of navigation; the development of water power; the use of the public lands in relation thereto; and to repeal section 18 of the river and harbor appropriation act, approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1920.

I desire to submit an oral report for just a moment, but will not ask for the present consideration of the bill, as there are Members of the Senate, especially of the Committee on Public Lands, who may desire to look over the bill.

At the last session we passed the water-power bill. It was not signed on the last day of the session. It was supposed of course, to have failed by reason of the failure to be signed, but upon investigation we reached the conclusion that the President had further time to consider the bill.

Upon a conference with the Secretary of the Interior I found that he had objected to the signing of the bill for the reason that it embraced within its terms and gave jurisdiction to the commission over national parks. He did not think that this should be done. He thought that no permit for the construction of water power, dams, reservoirs, houses, and so forth, in national parks should be made except by an act of Congress and all the circumstances considered. I assured him that if he would withdraw his objection to the signing of the bill I would introduce a measure at the opening of this session taking the national parks out of the jurisdiction of the Water Power Commission. I, of course, committed no one but myself. Upon that assurance he withdrew his objection, and the bill was signed, and the water-power legislation is now on the statute books.

This bill was introduced to carry out that assurance given to the Secretary. It is a bill prepared by the Secretary to meet his views. The Committee on Commerce considered it this morning, and directed me to report it unanimously without amendment. So I submit the report and ask that the bill may go to the calendar, with the statement, however, that at the first opportunity, after the Senate has had an opportunity to consider it, I shall call it up and ask the Senate to pass it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

BARNEGAT CITY, N. J.—CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the bill (S. 4631) to reimburse the borough of Barnegat City, State of New Jersey, for expenses incurred by it in the construction of jetties and in other work having for its object the protection of the lighthouse and adjacent property belonging to the Government of the United States situate at Barnegat Inlet, in the State aforesaid, was on Monday last referred to the Committee on Commerce. That committee upon examining the bill have decided that it is a bill which properly should go to the Committee on Claims. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Commerce may be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it may be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUPERINTENDENT OF SENATE DOCUMENT ROOM.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, we have had George H. Boyd as superintendent of the document room for a number of years. His salary has been carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. He died recently and it is necessary to appoint a new man.

I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report back favorably Senate resolution 405, providing for the appointment of a new man and the payment of his salary out of the contingent fund of the Senate. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, which was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint William Grant Lieuallen superintendent of the Senate document room at the rate provided by the legislative, executive, and judicial act approved May 20, 1920, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. KING. I did not understand the statement of the Senator. Does the resolution involve the creation of a new place?

Mr. CALDER. The former incumbent of the office died and the new appointee can not be paid in any other way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HENDERSON:

A bill (S. 4657) granting a pension to Ensign O. Lane;

A bill (S. 4658) granting a pension to J. E. Peters; and

A bill (S. 4659) granting a pension to Thomas W. Bath; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 4660) to appropriate $100,000 for the survey of public lands in Utah; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. HEFLIN (for Mr. UNDERWOOD):

A bill (S. 4661) granting a pension to Marie Doughty Gorgas; to the Committee on Pensions.

PROTECTION OF MATERNITY AND INFANCY.

Mr. FRANCE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3259) for the public protection of maternity and infancy and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

Strike out section 15 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 15. That the Secretary of Labor shall include in his annual report to Congress a full account of the administration of this act and of the expenditures of the moneys herein authorized."

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 13402) for the purchase of land occupied by experiment vineyards near Fresno and Oakville, Calif., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.). Is there any further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. CALDER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that we may proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII, beginning at Order of Business No. 198, the point reached when the calendar was last under consideration under Rule VIII.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CALDER. I have no objection to that, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, unanimous consent is granted to proceed with the consideration of the calendar at the point indicated.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take up for consideration Senate resolution 392, amending Senate resolution agreed to April 17, 1920, authorizing the appointment of a committee to inquire into the general building situation.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest that that motion is out of order. We have just entered into a unanimous-consent agreement to take up the calendar. The resolution referred to by the Senator from New York may be considered when it is reached on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair just inquired if there was any objection to the request for unanimous consent, and the Senator from New York said that he had no objection. The Chair will have to rule him out of order.

Mr. CALDER. Very well.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER ON THE CALENDAR.

The bill (S. 2785) to provide aid from the United States for the several States in prevention and control of drug addiction and the care and treatment of drug addicts, and for other purposes, was announced as first in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill will go over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 51) directing the Court of Claims to investigate claims for damages growing out of the riot of United States negro soldiers at Houston, Tex., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 2672) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. KING asked that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

JOHN H. RHEINLANDER.

The bill (S. 1302) for the relief of John H. Rheinlander was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$1,200," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,200 to John H. Rheinlander, of St. Louis, Mo., to compensate him in full for all claims he may have against the United States arising out of injuries received by him while in the Government employ in the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, at St. Louis, Mo., in February, 1883.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2444) to create the commission on rural and urban home settlement was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. KING asked that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3201) fixing the salary of the district attorney for the eastern district of New York was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3224) relating to the creation in the Army of the United States of the grade of lieutenant general was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask some member of the Military Affairs Committee if, in view of the reorganization of the Army which has taken place, there is any necessity for the passage of this bill? I do not know its relation to the legislation which recently was enacted dealing with the question of Army reorganization. In the absence of any explanation, I ask that the bill may go over until the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs comes in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

The resolution (S. Res. 215) providing that whenever the United States becomes a member of the League of Nations this Government should present to the council or the assembly of the league the state of affairs in Ireland and the right of its people to self-government was announced as next in order.

Mr. STERLING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 3090) to repeal the espionage act was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 848) to reimburse Isaiah Stephens, postmaster at McMechen, Marshall County, W. Va., for money and postage stamps stolen was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING and Mr. SMOOT asked that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3109) to amend section 26 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act was announced as next in order.

Mr. STERLING and Mr. FLETCHER asked that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1455) for the relief of John L. O'Mara was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill will go over.

The bill (S. 2954) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Albert S. Smith, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill goes over.

The bill (S. 3152) for the relief of George W. Mellinger was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1453) for the relief of Adolph F. Hitchler was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 1713) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to appoint a commission to investigate and report upon the available sources of water supply for the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. My recollection is that under some other resolution the proposed investigation has been made. In the absence of some Senator who is more familiar with the subject than am I, I will ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

ADDITIONAL MONEYS FOR RECLAMATION FUND.

The bill (S. 2822) making available additional moneys for the reclamation fund, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 4, after the word "or," to insert "heretofore," so as to make the section read:

That for the purpose of carrying on and completing irrigation projects and units thereof heretofore begun or heretofore surveyed, estimated for and approved but not begun for lack of funds, and for the investigation, commencement, and completion of such new projects as may be deemed feasible and desirable to undertake, and that can be completed within the limit of the reclamation fund as increased by the amount herein provided, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated and placed in the reclamation fund, from time to time as estimates are submitted therefor, the sum of $250,000,000 to be expended under the terms and conditions of the act commonly known as the reclamation act and acts amendatory thereof, and to be repaid as is by said act and amendments thereto provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill goes over.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 139) repealing the joint resolution of April 6, 1917, declaring a state of war to exist between the United States and Germany was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the joint resolution goes over.

The bill (S. 3395) to discontinue the improvement to provide a channel extending from the sea to the Charleston Navy Yard was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill goes over.

The bill (S. 3396) to discontinue the construction of a dry dock at the navy yard, Charleston, S. C., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. BALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3396, or I will ask unanimous consent that that be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from Delaware if he will not defer making any motion to take up any particular bill and allow the unanimous-consent agreement for the consideration of the calendar to be carried out, and let us go through the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is going to hold that the unanimous-consent agreement has to be carried out or that it will have to be set aside by unanimous consent.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 310) for the relief of John Murphy was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

The bill (H. R. 5726) to fix the compensation of certain employees of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The bill the title of which has just been stated is pending, I think, on a motion to reconsider made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. May I inquire of the Senator from Colorado whether he desires to press that particular motion?

Mr. THOMAS. I made that motion, Mr. President, because of the absence of certain Senators who had what I conceived to be some very material objections to the bill. Among them was the chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations [Mr. WARREN] and, I think, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. When the bill came up for consideration during the last day, or the last day but one of the last session, the Senator from Wyoming stated at some length what the effect of that bill, if passed as it came from the House, would be upon certain lines of employment. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], having charge of the bill, stated very frankly that from the information given by the Senator from Wyoming the bill should undergo amendment and be further considered. My participation in the matter ended when the motion to reconsider was carried, and I must refer the Senator therefore to the Senator from Wyoming and to the Senator from Georgia, who are far more familiar with the bill than I am, my action being as I have stated.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think the bill should go over and await further consideration on account of certain matters which are before the House which will to some extent affect the necessity for the passage of this measure. There are also some matters which will come before the Senate that may necessitate changes in it. I am not so familiar now with the particular points as I was at the time when this measure was under consideration at the last session; but the complaint comes to the Committee on Appropriations, as well as to other committees, that this measure should not be considered until the question of reclassification is taken up and until the matter of the budget is considered as well; in other words, it seems as if it were somewhat like putting the cart before the horse to pass this bill before we can consider other angles of the situation that are now being considered, in fact, on the House side.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Objection has been made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2292) for the relief of the William Gordon Corporation was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 151) to permit the payment for certain lands whereon Army supply bases are situated was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that joint resolution may be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

UNITED STATES GRAIN CORPORATION.

The bill (S. 3844) to provide for discontinuing the purchase and sale of grain by the Government, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, when I introduced Senate bill 3844 the Grain Corporation was in existence. That corporation has now been discontinued by virtue of the limitations contained in the act creating it. It was wound up on the 30th day of May, 1920. I therefore ask that the bill be indefinitely postponed in order to get it off the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3430) fixing the salaries of certain United States attorneys and United States marshals was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8078) to regulate the importation of coal-tar products, to promote the establishment of the manufacture thereof in the United States, and, as incident thereto, to amend the act of September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3944) to create a Federal live-stock commission, to define its powers and duties, and to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live stock and live-stock products, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a time has been fixed for a vote on that bill, and I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SHIPS ACQUIRED FROM GERMANY.

The bill (S. 3928) relating to the ships acquired from Germany, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, that bill should be indefinitely postponed, the matter having already been dealt with in the merchant marine act. I therefore move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 1853) to reimburse E. T. Thing and S. A. Thing for losses and damages sustained by them by the negligent dipping of their cattle by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3725) authorizing the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claim of Capt. David McD. Shearer for compensation for the adoption and use and acquisition by the United States Government of his patented inventions was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1391) to add certain lands to the Sequoia National Park, Calif., and to change the name of said park to Roosevelt National Park was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 5218) to provide revenue for the Government and to establish and maintain the production of magnesite ores and manufactures thereof in the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7785) to provide revenue for the Government, to establish and maintain in the United States the manufacture of laboratory glassware, laboratory porcelain ware, optical glass, scientific and surgical instruments, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 10074) to enlarge the jurisdiction of the municipal court of the District of Columbia and to regulate appeals from the judgments of said court, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7705) to amend section 339 of the tariff act of October 3, 1913, in respect to the tariff on buttons of steel and pearl, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

Mr. KING. I suggest that that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 4437) to provide revenue for the Government and to promote the production of tungsten ores and manufactures thereof in the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2989) for the relief of Walter I. Whitty was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3139) for the purchase of land adjoining Fort Bliss, Tex., was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 10918) to provide revenue and encourage domestic industries by the elimination, through the assessment of special duties, of unfair foreign competition, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6238) to provide revenue for the Government and to establish and maintain the production of zinc ores and manufactures thereof in the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ELECTION CONTESTS IN THE SENATE.

The bill (S. 4166) to provide for election contests in the Senate of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, this is a bill that provides, may I say, a method for contesting elections in the United States Senate. There is no law upon the question now, because it is only comparatively recently that United States Senators have been elected by the people. The bill follows largely the same procedure that is now in vogue in connection with contests of the election of Members of the House of Representatives. The bill as introduced was presented to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and was sent to a subcommittee, of which the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] was the chairman; and this bill, with two or three simple amendments, is the result. If there is no objection, I think some such legislation ought to be put upon the statute books.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry? Has the Senator found that there has been any difficulty in the past if a person desired to contest the alleged successful candidate's election to the Senate of the United States?

Mr. SPENCER. So far as I know, there has been only one contest for the Senate that has ever been presented since Senators were elected by the people, and that is the Ford-Newberry contest, which we are now considering. This bill would have been a great help in that contest if it had been the law.

Mr. KING. Let me suggest to the Senator that under the Constitution the Senate is the judge of the qualifications and the elections of its own members. Does it not have ample power now to determine whether there has been a fraudulent election or a fair election, and whether or not the contesting candidate is entitled to a seat? What is the necessity of additional legislation?

Mr. SPENCER. The same constitutional provision applies to Members of the House of Representatives, and it has always been found desirable there to have some simple method of procedure, of giving notice and of gathering testimony, in order that it might be presented to the body which, in the last analysis, is the sole judge of the qualifications of its Members.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, is this matter under consideration, or has it been objected to? If it has been objected to, I make the point of order that we should proceed to the consideration of the next bill on the Calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no objection.

Mr. THOMAS. I understood that it had not been objected to.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4166) to provide for election contests in the Senate of the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with amendments.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read for information.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who intends to contest the election of a Member of the United States Senate shall, within 30 days after the result of such election has been determined by the officer or board of officers authorized by law to determine the same, give notice in writing to such Member of such intention, and in such notice shall specify particularly the grounds upon which he intends to rely in the contest.

SEC. 2. That any Member or Member elect of the Senate upon whom such notice is served shall, within 30 days after the service thereof, answer in writing, admitting or denying to the best of his knowledge the facts alleged therein and specifying any grounds upon which he intends to rely in support of the validity of his election; he shall serve a copy of such answer upon the contestant within 30 days after the service of the notice of contest.

SEC. 3. That the time allowed for taking testimony in cases under this act shall not exceed 120 days. Such testimony shall be taken in the following order: The contestant shall be allowed the first 50 days, the Member of the Senate the succeeding 50 days, and the contestant in rebuttal the remaining 20 days.

SEC. 4. That either party desiring to take a deposition under the provisions of this act shall notify the opposite party in writing when and where such deposition will be taken, the names of the witnesses to be examined and their places of residence, and the name of the officer before whom such deposition will be taken. This notice shall be personally served upon the opposite party or upon any agent or attorney authorized by him to take testimony or to cross-examine witnesses in the matter of such contest; but if by the use of reasonable diligence such personal service can not be made, service may be made by leaving a duplicate of the notice at the usual place of abode of the opposite party. The notice shall be served in time to allow the opposite party one day for preparation, exclusive of Sundays, holidays, and the day of service, and sufficient time by the usual route of travel to attend. Testimony in rebuttal may be taken on three days' notice. Testimony may be taken at two or more places at the same time.

SEC. 5. That either party to a contest desiring to obtain testimony respecting such contested election may apply for a subpœna to either of the following officers who may reside within the State in which the election was held:

First. Any judge of any court of the United States.

Second. Any chancellor, judge, or justice of a court of record of any State.

Third. Any commissioner or officer appointed by any judge of any court of the United States or by any chancellor or judge or justice of any court of record of any State, to take such testimony.

SEC. 6. That the officer to whom the application authorized by the preceding section is made shall upon such application issue his writ of subpœna, directed to such witnesses as shall be named to him, requiring their attendance before him, at such time and place named in the subpœna, in order to be examined respecting such election.

SEC. 7. That the parties or their agents or attorneys in any case under this act may take depositions without notice by consent in writing and by written consent may take depositions before any officer authorized in any State to take depositions, and waive proof of the official character of such officer. All such written consents shall be returned with the depositions.

SEC. 8. That each witness shall be served with a subpœna by copy thereof delivered to him or left at his usual place of abode, but no witness shall be required to attend an examination out of the county in which he may reside or in which he may be served with a subpœna, unless at the time of the service of the subpœna he is tendered mileage at the rate of 7 cents per mile going to and returning from the place where such examination is to be held by the shortest route, and $3 for one day's attendance, or to remain outside of the county in which he lives for more than one day unless for each such day there is tendered to him $3 for his living expense.

SEC. 9. That any person who, having been summoned as above provided, refuses or neglects to attend and to testify, shall, except in case of sickness or other unavoidable cause, forfeit the sum of $20, to be recovered with costs in an action of debt, in any court of the United States, by the party at whose instance the subpœna was issued, and shall also be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished by fine not exceeding $100 or imprisonment for not more than six months as the court may direct. All witnesses who attend in obedience to the subpœna or who attend voluntarily at the time and place appointed as provided in this act shall then and there be examined under oath in regard to any matter respecting such contest by either of the parties or their agents, by the officer who issued the subpœna, or, in the case of his absence, by any other officer authorized by the provisions of this act to issue a subpœna, or, in case of his absence, by any officer before whom depositions are to be taken by written consent; that any person who fails to comply with the subpœna issued in pursuance of this act, or in case of the contumacy of any witness appearing for examination under this act, the officer who issued such subpœna or who is conducting such examination may invoke the aid of any United States district court. The court may thereupon order the witness to comply with the requirements of the subpœna or to give evidence touching the matter in evidence, as the case may be, and failure to obey such order may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

SEC. 10. That the testimony to be taken by either party shall be confined to the proof or disproof of the facts alleged or denied in the notice and answer provided for in this act.

SEC. 11. That the officer taking the testimony shall cause it to be reduced to writing by competent stenographers or such other person as he may designate and to be signed by the witness unless such signature is expressly waived by the parties to the contest or their attorneys. He may require the production of papers, and any person who refuses or neglects to produce and deliver up any paper or papers in his possession or any certified or sworn copies in the case of official papers pertaining to the election shall be liable to all the penalties prescribed in this act for witnesses who fail or refuse to answer. All papers thus produced and all certified or sworn copies of official papers, together with the testimony of the witnesses, shall be transmitted by the officer taking the same to the Secretary of the Senate.

SEC. 12. That if any witness refuses to sign the testimony which he has given, the officer taking the same shall certify as to the fact and shall also certify as to the correctness of the testimony of such witness.

SEC. 13. That the taking of testimony may be adjourned from day to day or for a longer period, as may be agreed upon by the parties, within the limits provided for in this act.

SEC. 14. That the notice to take depositions, together with the proof or acknowledgment of the service thereof, and the copies of subpœnas which have been served and of the notice of contest and of the answer shall be attached to the depositions and transmitted with them to the Secretary of the Senate.

SEC. 15. That all officers taking testimony under this act, whether by deposition or otherwise, shall, when the taking of the same is completed, and without unnecessary delay, certify and carefully seal and immediately forward the same, by mail or express, to the Secretary of the Senate, Washington, D. C., and shall also indorse upon the envelope containing such deposition or testimony the name of the case in which it was taken, together with the name of the party in whose behalf it was taken, and shall subscribe such indorsement.

The Secretary of the Senate, upon the receipt of such deposition or testimony, shall notify the contestant and the contestee, by registered letter, to appear before him at the Capitol, in person or by attorney at such reasonable time, not exceeding 20 days from the mailing of such letter, as he may specify. Upon the day appointed for such meeting the Secretary shall proceed to open the packages of testimony in the presence of the parties or their attorneys, and such portions of the testimony as the parties or their attorneys may agree to have printed shall be printed by the Public Printer, under the direction of the Secretary. In case of disagreement between the parties as to the printing of any portion of the testimony, the Secretary shall determine whether such portion shall be printed. The Secretary shall prepare a suitable index of such testimony to be printed with the record. The notice of contest and the answer of the Member shall be printed with the record.

If either party, after having been duly notified, fails to attend, by himself or by an attorney, the Secretary shall proceed to open the depositions or other testimony and shall cause such portions thereof to be printed as he shall determine.

The Secretary shall carefully seal up and preserve the portions of the testimony not printed, together with the other portions when returned from the Public Printer, and lay the same before the Committee on Privileges and Elections as soon as practicable. As soon as the testimony is printed, the Secretary shall, upon request therefor, forward by mail two copies thereof to the contestant and to the contestee, and shall notify the contestant to file with the Secretary, within 30 days thereafter, a brief of the facts and the authorities relied on to establish his case. The Secretary shall forward by mail two copies of the contestant's brief to the contestee, with like notice.

Upon receipt of the contestee's brief the Secretary shall forward two copies thereof to the contestant, who may, if he desires, reply to new matter in such brief within 30 days thereafter. All briefs shall be printed at the expense of the parties, respectively, and shall be of like folio as the printed report; and 60 copies thereof shall be filed with the Secretary for the use of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

SEC. 16. That every witness required by a subpœna to attend an examination under this act shall be entitled to receive 7 cents for each mile necessarily traveled in going to and returning from the place where such examination is to be held by the shortest possible route and $3 for each day's attendance: Provided, That where the testimony is taken at the place of residence of the witness, he shall receive $1 for each day's attendance.

SEC. 17. That any officer taking testimony or serving any subpœna or notice as provided in this act shall be entitled to receive from the party at whose instance the service was performed such fees as are allowed for similar services in the State where such service is rendered.

SEC. 18. That no Member of the Senate or contestant under this act shall be paid any sum on account of expenses in such contest unless he files with the clerk of the Committee on Privileges and Elections a full and detailed account of his expenses, accompanied by the vouchers and receipt for each item, which account and vouchers shall be sworn to by the party presenting the same.

The first amendment of the Committee on Privileges and Elections was, in section 5, on page 3, line 7, to strike out the parentheses and the word "contested," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That either party to a contest desiring to obtain testimony respecting such election may apply for a subpœna to either of the following officers, who may reside within the State in which the election was held.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, in section 9, page 5, lines 9 and 10, to strike out the words "that any person who fails" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "in case of failure"; on page 5, line 9, to strike out the word "the" and to insert in lieu thereof the article "a"; and on page 5, line 17, to strike out the word "evidence" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "question," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That any person who, having been summoned as above provided, refuses or neglects to attend and to testify, shall, except in case of sickness or other unavoidable cause, forfeit the sum of $20, to be recovered with costs in an action of debt, in any court of the United States, by the party at whose instance the subpœna was issued, and shall also be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished by fine not exceeding $100 or imprisonment for not more than six months as the court may direct. All witnesses who attend in obedience to the subpœna or who attend voluntarily at the time and place appointed as provided in this act shall then and there be examined under oath in regard to any matter respecting such contest by either of the parties or their agents, by the officer who issued the subpœna, or, in the case of his absence, by any other officer authorized by the provisions of this act to issue a subpœna, or, in case of his absence, by any officer before whom depositions are to be taken by written consent; in case of failure to comply with a subpœna issued in pursuance of this act, or in case of the contumacy of any witness appearing for examination under this act, the officer who issued such subpœna or who is conducting such examination may invoke the aid of any United States district court. The court may thereupon order the witness to comply with the requirements of the subpœna or to give evidence touching the matter in question, as the case may be, and failure to obey such order may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is as in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] what provision is made in the bill for reopening a case in the event of newly discovered evidence. As the bill has been read—and I have attempted to follow it—it seemed to me that when the testimony was all in there was no provision made, in the event of newly discovered evidence, no matter how important, for taking that evidence and presenting it to the Senate.

Mr. SPENCER. The constitutional provision that the Senate is the judge of the qualification and election of its own Members has been so construed in the House under similar bills, that whenever the Committee on Elections in the House desired any additional evidence they took it. There would be nothing in the bill that could prevent it.

Mr. KING. Let me suggest to the Senator that if after the contestant, by the proceedings provided in the bill, has taken his testimony, and the contestee has submitted his testimony, and the testimony has been printed, but before the Senate takes the matter up for consideration either of the parties discovers material evidence which with due diligence could not have been discovered and obtained prior to that time, it does seem to me that the bill is defective in failing to afford some means by which such testimony can be taken. Of course, I appreciate the fact that he could appeal to the Senate or to the committee and ask for an extension of time within which to produce this additional testimony; but there ought to be some provision, because the Senate may not be in session, by which he can obtain that testimony and complete the record before it is finally considered by the Senate.

Mr. SPENCER. I submit, Mr. President, if I may, to the good judgment of the Senator, that there are two answers: First, there ought to be some time, which ought to be as liberal as may be, within which the evidence ought to be concluded. That is true in every case, and it ought to be true in every contest. The bill does provide fully ample time for the taking of any evidence.

In the second place, if, after the evidence was closed, any additional evidence which was relevant or material should be discovered, there would undoubtedly be two ways by which it could be submitted, either by consent of the parties or by the order of the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate when they came to take up the contest. All the rules as to time are subject to the control of the tribunal which tries the case precisely as the Senator knows in a lawsuit we have the statutes which provide when an answer may be filed or when testimony shall be concluded; but the court can extend it, as can the counsel themselves by agreement. That is equally true in a contested-election case. I submit to the Senator that it would be unwise to accord an additional time within which to close a case at the suggestion alone of either party, after ample time has been given.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, of course the answer which the Senator has made is one which would suggest itself quite readily to anyone who thought of the matter, but I do not think the Senator has really answered the inquiry which I made. We are providing here a code for dealing with contested elections in the Senate of the United States. Provision is made for the taking of testimony to be filed, but there is no provision for taking testimony after the case is closed. While we are enacting a general statute, and in detail, providing the procedure to be followed, provision should be made for the taking of testimony that was not discovered by either the contestant or the contestee, and could not have been discovered with reasonable diligence, when the original testimony was obtained.

Of course, the reply of the Senator was the one which I suggested, that undoubtedly the committee, in the exercise of a sound discretion, upon application, could grant additional time and reopen the case for the purpose of permitting either the contestant or the contestee to obtain additional evidence. But that necessitates a halting of the procedure until the committee meets.

Let me assume a case. The testimony has been taken during a recess of the Senate. All the testimony offered in the first instance by the contestant and contestee is in and is printed. The Senate will not be in session for two or three months. One or the other of the parties discovers additional testimony vital and material in the case. He desires to have it printed as a part of the record, and desires that it shall be considered by the Senate. That can not be done under this bill. He would have to wait until the Senate convenes, wait until the committee was organized, and then address himself to the committee and ask for an order to reopen the case for the purpose of enabling him to obtain the newly discovered evidence.

The committee undoubtedly would reopen the case for the purpose mentioned. I only call attention to the fact that the procedure herein outlined does not cover all the contingencies which may arise, and makes no provision for the condition to which I have just referred, one which, as the Senator knows in his large and extensive practice, is apt to arise in any case.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are proceeding by unanimous-consent agreement under Rule VIII, which authorizes any Senator to speak once and for five minutes and no longer. If the bill is to be passed under Rule VIII, let it be passed; and if it is not, let an objection be made and the bill go over.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1519) making appropriations for expenses incurred under the treaty of Washington was announced as next in order.

SOUTHERN IRON & METAL CO.

The bill (S. 3031) to appropriate $1,189.35 for the relief of the Southern Iron & Metal Co., Jacksonville, Fla., for salvage material, consisting of submarine cable purchased from the War Department, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,189.35 for the relief of Southern Iron & Metal Co., Jacksonville, Fla., for salvage material consisting of submarine cable sold and delivered at Key West, Fla., to Southern Iron & Metal Co. at the instance of the Director of Purchase and Storage of the War Department, which salvage material was in good faith paid for but was not of the kind and quality represented.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RUDOLPH L. DESDUNES.

The bill (H. R. 7900) for the relief of Rudolph L. Desdunes was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Rudolph L. Desdunes, the sum of $1,200 as full compensation for the loss of eyesight while in the discharge of his duties as an assistant weigher in the United States customhouse in New Orleans, La.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMBARGO ON SUGAR.

The bill (S. 4420) to prohibit the exportation of sugar, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] was in the Chamber, I would move that this bill be indefinitely postponed. We would like very much to get some export market for sugar that is piling up from one end of the United States to the other, and there is no necessity for the proposed legislation. But the Senator being out of the Chamber, I merely ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

INTERFERENCE WITH COMMERCE.

The bill (S. 4204) to prohibit interference with commerce was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 1, line 9, after the word "employed," to insert the words "by any carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce, or amendments thereto," so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever with intent to obstruct, delay, hinder, or prevent the movement of commodities in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States shall by word of mouth, or by the presentation, exhibition, or circulation of written or printed words, or otherwise solicit, advise, induce, or persuade, or attempt to induce or persuade any person or persons employed by any carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce, or amendments thereto, in any capacity in the production, care, maintenance, or operation of any means or agency of such commerce to quit such employment shall be guilty of a felony and punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding 10 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 14, to strike out the word "for" and insert "not exceeding," so as to make section 2 read:

SEC. 2. That whoever, with intent to obstruct, delay, impede, hinder, or prevent the movement of commodities in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States shall by force or violence, or by threats or menace of any kind, prevent or seek to prevent any person from engaging in employment or from continuing in employment in any capacity in the production, care, maintenance, or operation of any means or agency of such commerce shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $15,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding 15 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 23, to strike out "of" and insert "not exceeding," and, on line 24, to strike out "for" and insert "not exceeding," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That whoever, with intent to obstruct, delay, hinder, impede, or prevent the movement of commodities in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States shall injure, disable, or destroy any car, bridge, track, ship, or any other means or agency of such commerce or shall with like intent solicit, advise, induce, or persuade others to do so, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 10 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for two or more persons, being officers, directors, managers, agents, attorneys, or employees of any carrier or carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce as amended, for the purpose of maintaining, adjusting, or settling any dispute, demand, or controversy which, under the provisions of this act, can be submitted for decision to the committee of wages and working conditions or to a regional board of adjustment, to enter into any combination or agreement with the intent substantially to hinder, restrain, or prevent the operation of trains or other facilities of transportation for the movement of commodities or persons in interstate commerce, or in pursuance of any such combination or agreement and with like purpose substantially to hinder, restrain, or prevent the operation of trains or other facilities of transportation for the movement of commodities or persons in interstate commerce; and upon conviction any such person shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 5. That nothing in this act shall be taken to deny to any individual the right to quit his employment for any reason.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE subsequently said: Mr. President, while I was temporarily absent from the floor I understand the bill (S. 4204) to prohibit interference with commerce was passed without objection in the Senate. I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which that bill was passed and to have it pending. The bill has not yet been transmitted to the House, I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDERSON in the chair). The Chair understands it has not. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. JOHNSON of California subsequently said: While some of us were absent a brief period ago, Mr. President, the bill S. 4204, introduced by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], I understand was passed, the bill which in ordinary parlance makes it a crime to strike. Some of us are interested in the bill, and I understand from Senators that a motion was made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] subsequently to reconsider it. I want to be certain of the standing of the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). The bill is on the calendar for reconsideration. There is a motion to reconsider pending.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in order that there may not be any possible misunderstanding about the matter, may I inquire, as I did not understand the Chair quite clearly, whether he said that the bill was reconsidered. My understanding was that there was no action taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No action was taken. A motion was entered to reconsider, and it is on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4432) to provide for awarding decorations, devices, or insignia to the next of kin of deceased persons who would have been entitled to receive the same, and making it unlawful for anyone other than the person authorized to do so to wear such decoration, device, or insignia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I reported that bill out from the committee, but I would rather have it go over until the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] can be here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 2665) for the relief of Prof. William H. H. Hart, principal of the Hart Farm School and Junior Republic for Dependent Children, to establish Hart University, and to provide for its maintenance and support, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that this bill may go over until we see what is done with the next number on the calendar, which simply refers this bill to the Court of Claims. If the resolution on the calendar is agreed to, then I shall ask for the indefinite postponement of this bill.

The resolution (S. Res. 377) referring to the Court of Claims the bill (S. 2665) for the relief of Prof. William H. H. Hart, principal of the Hart Farm School and Junior Republic for Dependent Children, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill and resolution will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8067) to establish standard weights and measures for the District of Columbia; to define the duties of the superintendent of weights, measures, and markets of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. KING. I supposed that this was merely a codification of existing law. It seems to create new offices and to increase salaries. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (H. R. 12502) providing for a report on the cost of improving and maintaining the Government boulevard on Missionary Ridge, in the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

HOSPITAL TREATMENT OF DISEASED ALIEN SEAMEN.

The bill (H. R. 7930) to provide for the treatment in hospital of diseased alien seamen was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator reporting the bill is not present.

Mr. KING. Will my colleague permit an interruption?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The bill was very fully considered by the Committee on Immigration. At first it seemed to me to be improper legislation, but upon listening to the testimony which was given and the report submitted by the officials of the Government, the committee, as I recall, unanimously reached the conclusion that it is necessary and proper legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. The only object I had in rising at this time was to ask if the present law does not require this same treatment for all alien seamen.

Mr. KING. It does with respect to one character of disease. It is many months since the matter was before the committee, but as I recall now there is one class of ailment or one disease that is not covered by existing law. It is for the purpose of affording the same relief with respect to that class of disease that is afforded with respect to other classes. I am sure it is proper legislation.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with amendments, in line 11, page 1, to strike out the word "being" and insert the words "to be"; in line 12, after the word "vessel," to insert the words "and not to be deducted from the seamen's wages"; on page 2, in line 3, to strike out the word "however"; in line 3, page 2, strike out the words "in cases" and insert the words "alien seamen suspected of being afflicted with any such disability or disease may be removed from the vessel on which they arrived to an immigration station or other appropriate place for such observation as will enable the examining surgeons definitely to determine whether or not they are so afflicted, all expenses connected therewith to be borne in the manner hereinbefore prescribed," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That alien seamen found on arrival in ports of the United States to be afflicted with any of the disabilities or diseases mentioned in section 35 of the act of February 5, 1917, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States," shall be placed in a hospital designated by the immigration official in charge at the port of arrival and treated, all expenses connected therewith, including burial in the event of death, to be borne by the owner, agent, consignee, or master of the vessel, and not to be deducted from the seamen's wages, and no such vessel shall be granted clearance until such expenses are paid or their payment appropriately guaranteed and the collector of customs so notified by the immigration official in charge: Provided, That alien seamen suspected of being afflicted with any such disability or disease may be removed from the vessel on which they arrive to an immigration station or other appropriate place for such observation as will enable the examining surgeons definitely to determine whether or not they are so afflicted, all expenses connected therewith to be borne in the manner hereinbefore prescribed: Provided further, That in cases in which it shall appear to the satisfaction of the immigration official in charge that it will not be possible within a reasonable time to effect a cure, the return of the alien seamen shall be enforced on or at the expense of the vessel on which they came, upon such conditions as the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall prescribe, to insure that the aliens shall be properly cared for and protected, and that the spread of contagion shall be guarded against.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3279) for the public protection of maternity and infancy and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States, and the bill (S. 4357) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for discharged soldiers, sailors, marines, Army and Navy nurses (male and female), and for other purposes, were next in order on the calendar.

Mr. KING. These two measures, one of which will be under consideration to-day and the other of which will need some amendment and some discussion, I suggest go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They will go over.

The resolution (S. Res. 380) referring to the Court of Claims the bill (S. 2673) for the relief of James L. Vai was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let it be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask if any Senator present knows what is the nature of the claim. I do not see the chairman of the committee here.

Mr. KING. Then I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 3483) for the relief of George T. Hamilton was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I reserve the right to object after the bill is read.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 4057) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to remove the charge of desertion under certain conditions from the records of former members of the naval service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 4322) for the relief of Philip A. Hertz was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. That is to relieve a person from the charge of desertion and give him a pension. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

LIABILITY OF HOTEL PROPRIETORS.

The bill (H. R. 12887) establishing the liability of hotel proprietors and innkeepers in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. If that bill will lower the prices charged by hotel proprietors, I am very much in favor of it. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever the proprietor of any hotel or inn in the District of Columbia shall provide in such hotel or inn a suitable safe or vault for the safe-keeping of any money, jewelry, or other articles of value, other than wearing apparel, belonging to or in the custody of guests, and shall notify the guests thereof by keeping conspicuously posted in the office and on the inside of the entrance door of the sleeping rooms of said hotel or inn a notice printed in distinct English type, such proprietor shall not be liable for the loss of or injury to any such property by theft or otherwise sustained by any guest unless such guest has offered to deliver the same to such proprietor for custody in such safe or vault and such proprietor has omitted or refused to receive it and deposit it in such safe or vault and to give such guest a receipt therefor: Provided, That in no case shall such proprietor be liable for the loss or injury to property so deposited in an amount exceeding the sum of $500, except by special contract in writing, stating the kind and value of property received, the kind and extent of the liability of said proprietor, and the reasonable consideration to be paid for such safe-keeping, not in excess of the customary insurance charge or premium, and which said contract shall be signed by said guest and said proprietor or his clerk: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall apply to such an amount of money and such jewelry or other articles of value as is usual, common, or prudent for guests to retain in their rooms.

SEC. 2. That whenever the proprietor of any hotel or inn shall keep posted in a conspicuous manner on the inside of the entrance door to the sleeping rooms of said hotel or inn a notice printed in distinct English type requiring the guests occupying said rooms to lock or bolt the door of said room and upon leaving said room to lock the door and deposit the key at the office, the proprietor shall not be liable for any baggage stolen from said room if it shall appear that said room was left by the guest unlocked or unbolted, or that the key was not so deposited at the office at the time of the loss of said baggage, unless the loss is directly or indirectly caused by or attributable to the proprietor or his employee or employees.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4501) for the relief of certain estates was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 1856) for the relief of Arthur J. Burdick was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 9794) for the relief of Wendell Phillips Lodge, No. 365, Knights of Pythias, was announced as next in order.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the language of that bill seems to be rather ambiguous, and I suggest that it go over until we can have some explanation of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7567) for the relief of G. T. and W. B. Hastings, partners trading as Hastings Bros., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4005) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Fore River Shipbuilding Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 676) for the relief of Reuben R. Hunter was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to award and pay to Reuben R. Hunter, of Deming, N. Mex., who suffered a total and permanent loss of sight in both eyes as a result of voluntarily fighting a forest fire on Government land in the vicinity of Cloudcroft, Otero County, N. Mex., in May, 1904, in an effort to protect valuable standing timber and other property of the United States, compensation at the rate of $66.67 per month, from September 7, 1916, for the period and in the manner provided by the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, for the payment of compensation for permanent disability of a civil employee resulting from personal injury sustained while engaged in the performance of his duty.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4372) to encourage the establishment of farms and suburban homes by veterans of the World War was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill will go over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 203) authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to turn over to the county commissioners of Dickinson County, Kans., suitable pontoon equipment for temporary use across the Smoky Hill River at Chapman, Kans., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the joint resolution will go over.

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

The bill (H. R. 14441) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I suggest that that bill may go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is exactly similar to the bill which heretofore passed the Senate, with the exception of the amendment which was made in the other House to the original bill in order to meet the objection of the President, because of which he vetoed the bill, which had passed both bodies. I will say to the junior Senator from Utah that the amendment that was agreed to in the other House meets the objection of the President, without a doubt.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the objection made to the budget bill by the President of the United States may have merit, but it occurred to me that the bill as it was passed was not an infringement of the rights of the Executive department; indeed, I think the bill did not go far enough in giving the legislative branch of the Government control over the employees of the Government. Personally, I should be very glad to see the bill become a law as it passed the House and the Senate rather than accede to the amendment made by the House. I suggest to the senior Senator from Utah that the bill ought to go over for the present.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I have no objection to that, but I will say to the Senator that there is no need of passing the bill in the shape in which it heretofore passed, because it would meet the same veto at the hands of the President.

Mr. KING. The bill, of course, would fail to become a law unless it should be passed over the veto of the President by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with my colleague; I do not believe the bill as it originally passed Congress was unconstitutional, and I think the objection which was made to it by the President was merely technical. However, the President is still in the White House; this bill, if passed, will be again sent to him and, of course, he would again veto it if it contained a similar provison.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I prefer that the bill go over in order to see if we can hereafter get a two-thirds majority in its favor. I should be willing to pass it over the President's veto; but if that can not be done, it may be well to let the bill go over to the next Congress, when we may then strengthen the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1920.

The bill (S. 4526) to amend section 501 of the transportation act, 1920, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 501 of the transportation act, 1920, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 501. The effective date on and after which the provisions of section 10 of the act entitled 'An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' approved October 15, 1914, shall become and be effective is hereby deferred and extended to January 1, 1922: Provided, That such extension shall not apply in the case of any corporation organized after January 12, 1918."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT DE RUSSY MILITARY RESERVATION, HAWAII.

The bill (S. 4572) granting to the city and county of Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, a right of way over and across the Fort De Russy Military Reservation for the purpose of extending its sewer system was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and there hereby is, granted to the city and county of Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, subject to the conditions named in section 2 of this act, a right of way over and across the Fort De Russy Military Reservation in said Territory for the purpose of constructing an extension of its sewer system, including a booster station in connection therewith, and of maintaining and operating the same, said right of way to include a strip of land 12 feet in width and approximately 1,420 feet in length, and in addition thereto a contiguous area of approximately 800 square feet for the erection, maintenance, and operation of said booster station.

SEC. 2. That the grant made in section 1 of this act is upon the condition that said sewer and booster station shall be placed underground; that the United States shall have the right at any and all times to connect with said sewer at such place and places as it shall deem desirable and to use the same for purposes of drainage and sewage disposal from said reservation; and that the construction of said sewer and booster station upon the right of way herein granted shall be along such route and upon such site and in accordance with such plans and specifications as shall have been previously approved by the Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT JACKSON, NEW DEPTFORD, GA.

The resolution (S. J. Res. 172) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to sell a certain parcel of land known as Fort Jackson, at New Deptford, on the Savannah River, Ga., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment on page 1, line 4, after the word "advertisement," to strike out "or private sale, as in his judgment may best subserve the interests of the United States," and insert "public sale," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to sell for cash, by advertisement and public sale, and to make the required conveyances, of all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to that certain parcel of land occupied by Fort Jackson, formerly known as wharf lot No. 12, situate at New Deptford on Savannah River, east of the city of Savannah, Ga., described as follows: Beginning at a point A on the outside wall of the moat surrounding the fort and adjacent to the river; thence south 37° 13′ 7″ east, 75 feet to point No. 1, which point No. 1 bears south 53° 14′ 44″ east, 14⅛ feet from harbor reference point No. 82, which reference point is in concrete monument with a copper bolt in center buried in the center of wall surrounding the moat of Fort Jackson; thence south 37° 13′ 7″ east, 258 feet to point No. 2; thence north 52° 46′ 53″ east, 200 feet to point No. 3; thence north 37° 13′ 7″ west, 194 feet to point No. 4; thence north 37° 13′ 7″ west, 90 feet to point B, which point is on the outside wall surrounding the moat of Fort Jackson and adjacent to the river; thence along the outside wall of the moat surrounding the fort on the river side of the same to point A, which is the point of beginning; containing 1⅛ acres; all as shown by a map made under the direction of Lieut. Col. F. W. Alstaetter, Corps of Engineers, on March 6 and 7, 1920, filed in United States Engineer office, Savannah, Ga., and indexed D. P. 1–16.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT ON HOUSING CONDITIONS.

The resolution (S. Res. 392) amending Senate resolution agreed to April 17, 1920, authorizing the chairman of the committee to inquire into the general building situation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 392) which had been reported by Mr. CALDER from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate on the 14th instant was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution of the Senate No. 350, agreed to April 17, 1920, authorizing a special committee of the Senate to investigate the existing situation in relation to the general construction of houses, manufacturing establishments, and buildings, and the effect thereof upon other industries and upon the public welfare, be, and the same is hereby, amended to empower said special committee to employ counsel, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the resolution go over.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think, inasmuch as the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] is very much concerned about this measure and attempted to get it before the Senate a little while ago, that we ought not to dispose of it so hastily. I am not in favor, as a general proposition, of investigating committees, because they accomplish comparatively little and promote the tendency to investigate everything, well founded or otherwise, to which the attention of some individual Senator be called; but the purpose of the Senator from New York in asking for this amendment to the original resolution, I think, is prompted by and is certainly justified by the disclosures which have been made by the New York legislative investigating committee under the direction of Mr. Samuel Untermyer.

This committee has disclosed the existence of one or two ironclad combinations or conspiracies against trade and against social and economic conditions that may surprise some, but which seem to me to be the direct outgrowth of the tendencies of the times. The remarkable and startling fact disclosed by that committee is the fact that this combination is not peculiar to New York. There seems to be, in every city sufficiently large to justify it, a similar coalition between a few owners of certain classes of material, a few building concerns, and a few labor unions, and the combination enables the beneficiaries of it to work their will in every community where they exist, to dictate prices, to determine who shall and who shall not receive contracts and at what figure, to declare strikes, to create at any time differences between employee and employer, and to levy blackmail by the hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Yesterday the committee had before it Mr. Grace, the president of the Bethlehem Steel Co. He was called before the committee because the day before two of the great contracting firms of the country, speaking through their principal officers, testified that they were unable to purchase any structural steel from the steel manufacturers of the country because the concerns represented in another combination had determined to refuse to sell structural steel to any concern which did not operate what is called the open shop.

Now, I am an open-shop man. I believe in it thoroughly, and must believe in it as long as I believe in equality of opportunity in a country like this. But a combination of steel producers which proposes to dictate to purchasers what course they shall pursue with regard to employment, and to refuse to supply material, at whatever cost, to those who will not comply with its requirements is quite as vicious and wholly as indefensible as any combination I ever heard of.

I have reason to believe that in my city, having a population of less than 275,000 people, materials and contracts and labor are also united for the purpose of dominating the building trade; and I am fully satisfied that if this committee, headed by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], is given authority to investigate, it will bring these things to the attention of the public, and thereby set in operation the machinery of the courts of justice and punish this system of profiteering, which is little short of infamous; because housing conditions everywhere are not up to the demands for shelter, and the one justification which the landlords of the country can now have lies in the fact that they must pay an enormous excess price in the shape of blackmail for every brick that is laid, every column of steel that is erected, and every barrel of cement that is used in construction.

Generally speaking, I do not favor the selection of outside counsel to conduct proceedings for a senatorial committee; but it is clear that the splendid work of the legislative committee now sitting in New York is largely due to the excellence and the ability of their counsel, just as the insurance investigation became successful through the splendid exertions and talent of Charles E. Hughes. These combinations will have plenty of counsel, and good counsel; and to turn our committee loose upon this investigation without giving them authority to employ competent counsel to conduct the investigation, and to cross-examine these conspirators and scoundrels—for that is what they are—would, in all probability, lead to comparatively small results.

I do not know whom the committee have in view. I do not care. He may be a Republican or he may be a Democrat. The chances are that there are no Democratic lawyers to speak of since the election of November; but whoever he may be, he should be a most excellent, competent, and experienced man, and here is an instance in which we can expend money wisely. It will not take a great deal, comparatively, for public opinion will be aroused by the facts that they will disclose—and I know they will disclose them. I should like to see Mr. Untermyer selected, to be perfectly frank about it, because of his experience and the success which has attended his efforts as the counsel for this committee in New York City.

The desire, therefore, of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]—and I wish he were here——

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I will say that the Senator from New York was compelled to leave the city at 1 o'clock. He asked me, as a fellow member of the committee, to bring this matter before the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. If I had known that, I should not have taken up the time of the Senate.

Mr. KENYON. No; the Senator has done it much better than I could do it.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Iowa is on the committee, and he has been connected with its work of investigation up to this time, and consequently he must be more familiar with the details that I can be; but I think at this time, when we are exempting certain associations from the operation of general law, we ought to investigate what some of the fellows who are not yet exempted have been doing and will continue to do. I want to see the producers of steel in this country compelled to sell their material to anybody who will buy it at the market price. It is none of their business whom the contractors employ for the purpose of construction and of use of that material. I want to see these scoundrels who call themselves contractors and material men and union labor men who conspire and combine for the purpose of holding up honest property holders and honest builders brought to book by the States where they operate and by the Nation, if it can be done through the exercise of our powers over interstate commerce, and the fundamental basis of it is this investigation; and it can not be done too quickly, because people are suffering for shelter and winter is here.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to get a little advice from the Senator that may be valuable as we proceed with the investigation. I should like to have the Senator's idea as to how the steel people, for instance, can be compelled to sell steel to any particular persons.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know.

Mr. KENYON. I thought perhaps the Senator had some ideas on that subject.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know. I know that the Supreme Court of the United States has held frequently that whenever a concern grows so large as to affect the public and affect it seriously it is charged with a public interest.

Mr. KENYON. That is exactly what I have been contending for the last week or two as to the packers, and I have not been able to get very much support.

Mr. THOMAS. I know the Senator has, and he is absolutely right; but I say that if the packers' combination is to be disciplined by statute, then, a fortiori, combinations like the one that the Senator from New York proposes to run to earth should not only be disciplined but be disciplined severely and punished for the violation of these laws, because they are criminals at common law, which is the best law in the world—a good deal better than 99 per cent of the statutes that have been passed to interfere with its processes and to destroy or undermine its principles. Men who at common law conspire to injure the public in this way can be indicted, and if found guilty, can be punished and punished severely, and ought to be; but, unfortunately, in these days men seem to be able to do these things with impunity by applying the good old principle of protection as we have applied it so much and so often to their own affairs and to their own combinations.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was interested in the statement of the Senator that at common law the classes of people or combinations to whom the Senator has referred could be punished, and I deduce from his observations that they could be punished now under the common law.

Mr. THOMAS. Why, certainly.

Mr. KING. I desire to ask the Senator whether or not we have any Federal penal statute covering the subject, because we have no penal Federal common law?

Mr. THOMAS. I am not talking about Federal punishment. There is no common law that applies to the Nation.

Mr. KING. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. THOMAS. But each of these combinations in the State where it is organized or where it is operating violates the common law of that State.

Mr. KING. Oh, absolutely; but the conduct of many of the States would lead one to believe that they are paralyzed or atrophied or are under the control of corporations and trusts and conspiracies to destroy competition, because the criminal laws upon their books, which would reach these criminal organizations, are not invoked, and the scoundrels controlling such organizations continue their nefarious acts with impunity, to the injury of their people.

Mr. THOMAS. Why, Mr. President, every monopoly that has vexed the people has been the outgrowth of a neglect to enforce the State laws where it was created or of State laws that have been passed for the purpose of creating it; and the corporation laws of New Jersey and Delaware, enacted for the purpose of procuring revenue, have invited every scoundrel, every adventurer, every speculator, every man who is willing to take a chance, to go to those States and incorporate his company, because they practically exempt him and his officers from all responsibility, on the one hand, while endowing them with authority to take their charter on the other, and invade any or all the other States of the Union and there practice their nefarious business.

I do not mean to imply that that is the only result of the statutes of those States, because they are utilized by good men and by honest corporations and by legitimate business perhaps to a greater degree, but the fact that liberal laws, as they are called, are passed under the operation of which any scheme, however nefarious, may find shelter, justifies my contention that in their genesis all of these violations of the rights of consumers and of producers, all of these levies of blackmail—for that is what they are—upon the property holders and producing energies of the country are due either to State laws or to the permissive conduct of State officials.

Our efforts to control them, in my judgment, will only be successful when we require all corporations engaged in interstate commerce either to incorporate or to secure licenses from the Federal Government, if the Federal Government is ultimately to become, as now seems probable, the one authority to deal with them, to correct them or to punish them. I am not in favor of that unless it be absolutely essential, but I am strongly impressed with the absolute need of this investigation, and the need also for its being conducted under the auspices of some lawyer of high reputation and great experience, having the power to wring from the breasts of these conspirators the secrets of which the people have been so long ignorant, and unless that is done the investigation is apt to prove abortive.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I withdraw my objection. I offer this amendment, however: After the words "shall employ counsel," I move that there be inserted the words "at a sum not exceeding $5,000."

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I think there will be no objection to accepting that amendment. I know I feel, as a good many other Senators do, that the fees which are paid special counsel are entirely too high in most cases, and I believe we can get along on this committee with that limitation. We care more for some counsel who will work than for one who may have a great reputation.

I believe, Mr. President, that this committee, under the chairmanship of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], is doing real work. It is one of the few committees that is engaged in constructive work, not after somebody, and not destructive in its tendencies. We already have a great many leads along various lines of profiteering and plundering and propose to follow them out, no matter whom it hits or how it hurts.

The situation in New York, as developed by the committee of the State legislature over there, has been such as to shock the conscience of all citizens who have read the proceedings of that committee. They can not extend their work beyond the State. I have no authority to state that our committee will cooperate with them in any way, but we shall try to see whether the same plan of blackmail that has gone on in New York has been carried into the other States, and resulted, through this building trust, in preventing the building of homes. That is the purpose of this committee. We are all too busy to do all of this work ourselves, and that has led us to ask for counsel, and as far as I am concerned, as far as I have the power, we will accept the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] limiting the amount to be spent for counsel fees under the resolution to $5,000.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How long does the Senator think it will take to finish the investigation? Five thousand dollars might not be adequate compensation at all, or it might be overpay.

Mr. KENYON. I think that will have to be left to the committee. If it will not carry it through, we shall have to do more ourselves. I think a couple of months will be sufficient, if we can get down to work, with our other duties.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. We have had experience with this kind of an investigation, and it is not easy to get competent counsel, as the Senator knows. Special men, especially qualified, are usually pretty hard to get.

Mr. KENYON. I know, but I think we pay too much for reputation oftentimes.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is true.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when the resolution creating the committee to investigate building conditions in the United States was under consideration by the Senate, I expressed, as I now recall, some dubiety as to the efficacy of any investigation which would be made by the committee, and also expressed some doubt as to the propriety of creating the committee, as well as the authority of Congress to make investigations into purely local and domestic concerns. The committee, however, seems to have elaborated its purposes and to have entered upon a rather comprehensive investigation, one which involves alleged infractions of the Sherman antitrust law, if not other penal or quasi penal Federal statutes. I have sometimes felt that committees appointed by Congress have served no useful purposes, and that their investigations brought no reforms, or suggested remedial legislation.

There is too much of an inclination upon the part of the Federal Government, or, at least, upon the part of officials of the Federal Government, to inquire into the activities of individuals and of States and to investigate matters with which the Federal Government has no concern. I have been led to believe that Congress has encouraged the development of a disposition upon the part of too many of our people to come to Congress with complaints which relate to local and domestic affairs, and can not, by the wildest stretch of imagination, be construed to be within the purview of the General Government. Hysterical people are constantly knocking at the doors of Congress asking for investigation of matters which have no relation to political, economic, or industrial affairs—indeed, which call for no investigation. If fancied evils exist, an immediate demand is made by one or more for congressional investigation. Thousands and tens of thousands of pages of testimony are taken by committees of both the House and the Senate which no one ever reads and which contain no valuable or important information.

The welfare of the people would be best subserved if the press and men of influence and standing in the various local communities would preach sound individualism and inculcate the view that the vast majority of our problems are individual or local and can be solved only by the people themselves. This constant invocation of Federal interposition in the domestic affairs of the people and of the States is enervating, and can only result in weakening the moral fiber of the people and those splendid qualities and virtues upon which free government and civilization must rest. Instead of weakening and devitalizing the States, the citizens living therein should seek to have them maintain their proud eminence and that primacy which, under our form of government, is their mission.

But, returning to the matter before us. I confess to an agreeable surprise with respect to the work of this committee. I believe that it is in the way of doing some substantial service to the country. The recent investigations of the so-called "Lockwood committee" in the State of New York have revealed a condition so shocking as to call for correction. Mr. Samuel Untermyer is doing most excellent service in connection with the work of the Lockwood committee. The investigations of this committee furnish incontrovertible evidence of the existence of corrupt combinations and criminal conspiracies aimed at the destruction of competition and the plundering of the people. I do not recall that in the revelations as to the existence of trusts and monopolies in the United States a more sordid page has been presented than that brought to our attention by the Lockwood committee. Contractors, builders, labor-union leaders—all have joined in criminal and wicked conspiracies to rob the public and to hamper building activities, notwithstandng the fact that thousands of homeless people were subjected to continued hardships as a result of these wicked machinations and corrupt and criminal combinations. It has been shown that the dealers in lumber and in all forms of building material have built up the most gigantic and oppressive monopolies and have resorted to the most cowardly and wicked schemes and practices to enhance their profits and to plunder the public.

There are still cells in the penitentiaries unoccupied. These men who have engaged in these conspiracies and have violated not only every rule of honor and decency but the plain letter of criminal statutes should speedily be sent to fill them.

As I understand, the Senate subcommittee, of which the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] is chairman, expects to investigate organizations whose operations are interstate in character, which have, perhaps, followed the wicked practices of the builders and organizations which have been under investigation by the Lockwood committee, and also corporations and organizations, interstate in character, which have combined and conspired to create monopolies in restraint of trade and commerce or to destroy competition in interstate commerce. There are increasing evidences that combinations in restraint of trade and conspiracies in aid of monopolies and organizations and combinations for the purpose of stifling and destroying competition are in existence in all parts of our country. During the war many combinations were formed which, in my opinion, violated the Sherman antitrust law. We became so used to cooperation and combination that, following the armistice, organizations and combinations were either perpetuated or new ones formed which were criminal in character and oppressive in their activities. In a most flagrant and brazen manner monopolies have operated and conspiracies in restraint of trade have functioned.

The recent position of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Steel Trust case seems to devitalize the Sherman antitrust law, or at least to reduce it to a rather anemic and flaccid pronouncement. That decision, in my opinion, will encourage the growth of monopolies and stimulate still further combinations in restraint of trade and conspiracies to lessen, if not destroy, competition. This is to be regretted. The competitive system, notwithstanding its disadvantages and weaknesses, and notwithstanding the waste and inefficiency which inevitably flows therefrom, has brought our Nation to the heights of economic growth and industrial prosperity. But there can not be competition if trusts and monopolies are permitted unrestrained action and combinations to destroy competition are afforded a free and unrestricted field of operation. The American people, in my opinion, desire the maintenance of the competitive system in our economic and industrial life. They desire a free and fair field for those who engage in industry. They do not desire special privileges or advantages or preferences.

Of course, there are some who not only desire special advantages and privileges, but who would deliberately strive to obtain them. To this class belong those who would use the Government for private ends. To this class belong the criminals who have been unmasked by the Lockwood committee.

Even the most casual investigation of the evils resulting from combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade and commerce reveals the lamentable fact that the States have been derelict in the performance of their duties. I conceive it to be the duty of the sovereign States to exercise their undoubted power to deal with combinations and conspiracies and monopolies intrastate in character. Many of the criminal organizations of the character under discussion operate within the States; that is, their operations are circumscribed by the boundaries of the States within which they are created. They are amenable to State law, and there is no reason why the States should not enact comprehensive laws dealing with these criminal organizations. The people of the States should be protected by the States. The indifference of the States to deal in an effective way with this manifest evil compels the most serious reflection. Are the States to abdicate their powers and conventions and to shirk their responsibilities which rest upon them? The States are the citadels of the liberties of the people. Their maintenance unimpaired is essential to the preservation of our Government, and in that form which is indispensable to the happiness, progress, and prosperity of the people.

It would be a tragedy, almost unexampled in history, if the States of this Union were to become atrophied, and by their indifference to their prerogatives and duties lead the people to make demands for Federal usurpations and the assertion by the Federal Government of unauthorized and of unrestricted power. The States should immediately, if their laws are inadequate to deal with these criminal organizations, enact broad and comprehensive ones; and where they have statutes under which trusts and monopolies and conspiracies to restrain trade and stifle competition can be prevented, they should be vigorously enforced and stern justice meted out to all malefactors. But, of course, there is a field in which the Federal Government may not only act with propriety, but within which the duty rests upon it to exercise its undoubted authority.

The Sherman antitrust law was enacted to reach combinations and monopolies and conspiracies in restraint of trade, which were not amenable to State statutes. It would seem that this statute, as interpreted by the Supreme Court of the United States, does not reach all who offend against good morals and who engage in practices which result in monopolies and lessen competition. The investigation which is being conducted by the subcommittee of the Senate may obtain information that will call for additional legislation, or may obtain facts which will further inform Congress, and in the light of which the Sherman antitrust law may be strengthened. I am therefore willing to continue this committee and to give it proper aid so that it may investigate the activities of corporations and individuals engaged in interstate commerce, with a view to determining whether they are violating any existing law or indulging in practices which are against good morals and which should be denounced by an appropriate act upon the part of the General Government. Let me say, Mr. President, that it is very important that organizations and combinations engaged in interstate commerce shall not be permitted to create monopolies or interfere with legitimate trade and commerce, or destroy competition or indulge in practices inimical to the best interests of the public. We desire interstate trade and commerce. We desire the development of the resources of our great Republic. We want the agriculturist to be prosperous. It is important that those engaged in manufacturing pursuits shall enjoy prosperity. Additional railroads are required. Additional factories must be built, and in a thousand fields of human endeavor the virile and energetic pushing American must have full and fair opportunity for endeavor and to win the prize of success, and in order that these results may be realized, the sinister forms of monopolies and trusts and combinations to restrain trade and destroy competition must not be permitted to arise. I desire to preserve the competitive system. I am opposed to governmental control of the private activities of the people. I should regret to see the Federal Government take charge of all interstate commerce, require licenses of all corporations and individuals so engaged, and control the business of our country through the medium of Federal commissions, agencies, bureaus, and an army of agents and employees.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has just referred to the packers bill, and he is demanding that the packing industries of our country should be placed under Federal control. I have received communications urging that the canneries, the elevators, the smelters, as well as other industries and business enterprises be required to obtain Federal licenses and be subjected to the regu'ation and control of the Federal Government. If the day shall ever come when our business activities must be conducted under the surveillance and control and regulation of a Federal bureaucracy, then, in my opinion, America's progress in the economic world will be arrested and the crown of leadership of this Nation in the industrial and business world will in the end be worn by some other nation. But if monopolies are organized and combinations are formed which destroy competition, and if gigantic corporations absorb through unfair and destructive methods the business of the country, there will be developed a sentiment socialistic or paternalistic in character which will culminate in the overthrow of the competitive system and our present economic structure. I believe that Congress should immediately address itself to the consideration of legislation necessary to preserve competition and to prevent monopolies and combinations that interfere with legitimate trade and destroy competition.

The Sherman antitrust law should be strengthened. We are about to reach a point in our economic and industrial life where we will be compelled to decide whether we shall have free competition or whether business shall be put into a straitjacket and be conducted under such forms and regulations and bureaucratic and "red tape" and exasperating methods as the General Government shall prescribe. The business men of our country should be alive to the situation. The future is largely in their hands. If they act with wisdom and fairness and honesty and patriotism then prosperity and progress and peace and happiness will be the inheritance of the American people.

"Big business" and the great industries of our country must have a clean slate. Their methods must be above reproach; their policies such as to square with the ideals and moral concepts of an enlightened and Christian Commonwealth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. The Secretary will state it.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 8, after the word "counsel," insert the words "at a sum not exceeding $5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ATMOSPHERIC NITROGEN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 3390) to provide further for the national defense; to establish a self-sustaining Federal agency for the manufacture, production, and development of the products of atmospheric nitrogen for military, experimental, and other purposes; to provide research laboratories and experimental plants for the development of fixed nitrogen production, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harrison	McNary	Smoot
Beckham	Heflin	Nelson	Spencer
Borah	Henderson	New	Stanley
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Norris	Sterling
Capper	Johnson, Calif.	Nugent	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Swanson
Colt	Kendrick	Phipps	Thomas
Curtis	Kenyon	Poindexter	Townsend
Dillingham	Keyes	Pomerene	Trammell
Fernald	King	Ransdell	Warren
Fletcher	Kirby	Sheppard	Watson
France	Knox	Simmons	Wolcott
Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Smith, Ariz.
Gronna	McCumber	Smith, Md.
Harris	McKellar	Smith, S. C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDERSON in the chair). Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that we may take up the maternity bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROTECTION OF MATERNITY AND INFANCY.

Mr. FRANCE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3259) for the public protection of maternity and infancy, and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Let the bill be read.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] that there is a conference appointed between members of the Finance Committee of the Senate and the Ways and Means Committee of the House to meet at 2 o'clock. I simply wish to give notice to the Senator that I am obliged to attend that meeting. As I understand it, the amendment which I have offered to the bill is now pending, and, of course, if it leads to any discussion I would like the Senator to notify me at the meeting, and I will come to the Chamber as quickly as possible.

Mr. FRANCE. Very well.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to ask if the Senator from Maryland will not put the bill over for to-day. There are Senators who wish to be heard who do not happen to be in the city at this time. I did not have an opportunity to read the bill until an hour ago. It is going to lead to some discussion, and I think we will gain time by allowing it to go over until Senators can become more familiar with its provisions. I have an important committee meeting this afternoon, and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] seems to be situated likewise. The bill is one that I think ought to have consideration and discussion at the proper time, and it ought not to be—I will not say forced upon us, because, of course, it has not been, but I think it ought not to be brought up here so unexpectedly as it now comes up.

Mr. FRANCE. I should be pleased to yield to the wishes of the Senator from Wyoming, but I feel that inasmuch as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has laid aside his measure, which is the unfinished business, in order that we may proceed with the maternity bill, I am not at liberty to defer action upon the measure. I feel that this is the only opportunity which I may have to get consideration for it. If the maternity bill was the unfinished business, I should be very glad to accommodate the Senator by laying it aside, but I do not feel that I am at liberty to do so under the circumstances.

Mr. WARREN. I was not in the Chamber at the close of business yesterday, but I understand that there was no difference of opinion between the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Maryland as to the two bills being considered one immediately after the other. I do not ask to have it put over with any idea of delaying it beyond a day or two until we can consider it a little more fully.

Mr. FRANCE. I think there will be some discussion of the bill this afternoon, and that Senators will have an opportunity of becoming informed as to its provisions. It is a very simple measure and does not carry a very large appropriation. I feel that if we should have a brief discussion this afternoon it would be advantageous to all of us and would advance the measure.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me, I have heard quite a number of Senators indicate that they desire to discuss the bill and intimate that they are prepared to discuss it. It seems to me that no time would be lost to allow those who care to discuss it to begin this afternoon, and this may give ample opportunity to those who wish to do so to look further into it during that discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. Before leaving the Chamber I wish to ask the Senator from South Carolina if he has not an agreement with the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] that no final action will be taken upon the unfinished business until he returns?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. He called me up and stated that he was unavoidably called from the city. That is also true of other Members of the Senate who were unavoidably called away, one of them on account of illness in his family.

Mr. SMOOT. I just wanted to know before leaving, because I know the Senator from New York is very much interested in the measure.

Mr. WARREN. I happened to take the Senator from New York home from the Capitol last night, and he expressed an earnest desire to be present when the bill is considered. He assumed that it would be laid over since it came up in a rather unexpected way.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to state that I am not advised as to what debate either one of the bills will lead to. I have been informed there are quite a number of amendments that will be proposed to the present unfinished business. I think, if the Senator from Maryland would now proceed with his bill that we will a little later on get a clearer vision of the whole situation than we have now.

Mr. FRANCE. I hope the Senator from Wyoming will not object to our proceeding at this time with the consideration of the bill, as I think discussion will be most helpful and informing to the Senate, and I feel that the bill can be moved on speedily to its passage.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I should be very glad to hear the Senator from Maryland explain what the bill involves, how large an appropriation is called for, and all the important details of it. The range of legislation is so great that about all a Senator can well keep track of are the measures that belong to his own committee, and when it comes to measures from other committees we have to rely on the members of those committees. I should be very glad if the Senator would explain his bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I was going to say that I had called for the reading of the bill at the time this discussion began.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The bill is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is now before the Senate.

The reading clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby annually authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sums authorized in section 2 of this act, to be paid to the several States for the purpose of cooperating with the States in promoting the care of maternity and infancy in the several States; to provide instruction in the hygiene of maternity and infancy, and the sum authorized in section 5 for the use of the Federal board of maternal and infant hygiene for the administration of this act and for the purpose of making such studies, investigations, and reports as will further the efficient administration of this act.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of paying the expenses of said cooperative work in providing the services and facilities specified in this act and the necessary printing and distribution of information in connection with the same there is permanently authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $480,000 for each year, $10,000 of which shall be paid annually to each State in the manner hereinafter provided: Provided, That there is also authorized to be appropriated for the use of the States, subject to the provisions of this act, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, an additional sum of $2,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, the sum of $2,400,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, the sum of $2,800,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, the sum of $3,200,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, the sum of $3,600,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, the sum of $4,000,000; and annually thereafter the sum of $4,000,000: Provided further, That the additional appropriations herein authorized shall be apportioned among the States in the proportion which their population bears to the total population of the United States, not including outlying possessions, according to the last preceding United States census: And provided further, That no payment out of the additional appropriation herein authorized shall be made in any year to any State until an equal sum has been appropriated for that year by the legislature of such State for the maintenance of the services and facilities provided for in this act.

So much of the amount appropriated apportioned to any State for any fiscal year as remains unexpended at the close thereof shall be available for expenditures in that State until the close of the succeeding fiscal year. Any amount apportioned under the provisions of this act unexpended at the end of the period during which it is available for expenditure under the terms of this section shall be reapportioned, within 60 days thereafter, to all the States in the same manner and on the same basis, and certified to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the State boards described in section 4 in the same way as if it were being apportioned under this act for the first time.

SEC. 3. The Federal Board of Maternal and Infant Hygiene (hereinafter called the Federal board) shall consist of the Secretary of Labor, who shall be the chairman; the Chief of the Children's Bureau, who shall be the executive officer; the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and the United States Commissioner of Education. The Federal board shall have charge of all matters concerning the administration of this act, and shall have power to cooperate with the State boards authorized to carry out the provisions of this act. It shall be the duty of said Federal board to make, or cause to have made, such studies, investigations, and reports as will promote the efficient administration of this act.

SEC. 4. That in order to secure the benefits of the appropriations authorized in section 2 of this act, any State shall, through the legislative authority thereof, accept the provisions of this act and designate or authorize the creation of a State board of maternal and infant hygiene, consisting of not less than three members, which shall have all necessary powers to cooperate as herein provided with the Federal board in the administration of the provisions of this act: Provided, That in any State having a child welfare or child hygiene division in its State board of health, the said State board of health may be directed to administer the provisions of this act through such divisions. The Federal board may require the State boards cooperating under this act to appoint advisory committees, both State and local, to assist in carrying out the purposes of this act; the members of such advisory committees shall be selected by the State boards, and at least half of such members shall be women. In any State, the legislature of which does not meet in 1920, the governor of that State, so far as he is authorized to do so, may accept the provisions of this act and create a State board of maternal and infant hygiene of not less than three members, or designate a division of child welfare or child hygiene in the State board of health, to act in cooperation with the Federal board. The said Federal board shall then recognize such State board for the purposes of this act until the legislature of such State meets in due course and has been in session 60 days.

SEC. 5. That so much, not to exceed 5 per cent of the amount authorized for any fiscal year under this act, as the Federal board may estimate to be necessary for administering the provisions of this act, shall be deducted for that purpose, to be available until expended. Within 60 days after the close of each fiscal year the said Federal board shall determine what part, if any, of the sums theretofore deducted for administering the provisions of this act will not be needed for that purpose, and apportion such part, if any, for the fiscal year then current in the same manner and on the same basis, and certify it to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the several State boards described in section 4 above, in the same way as other amounts authorized by this act to be apportioned among the several States for such current fiscal year.

SEC. 6. That out of the amounts authorized under this act the Federal board is authorized to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons in the city of Washington and elsewhere, to rent buildings outside of the city of Washington, to purchase such supplies, material, equipment, office fixtures, and apparatus, and to incur such travel and other expense as it may deem necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 7. That within 60 days after the approval of this act the Federal board shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury and to each State board described in section 4 the sum which the Federal board has estimated to be deducted for administering the provisions of this act, and the sum which it has apportioned to each State for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and on or before January 20 next preceding the commencement of each succeeding fiscal year it shall make similar certifications for such fiscal year.

SEC. 8. That any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of this act shall, by its board described in section 4, submit to the Federal board detailed plans for carrying out the provisions of this act. These plans shall include the provisions to be made in the State for the administration of the act; the provision of instruction in the hygiene of maternity and infancy through public health nurses, consultation centers, and other suitable methods, and the provision of medical and nursing care for mothers and infants at home or at a hospital when necessary, especially in remote areas. If the Federal board finds these plans to be in conformity with provisions and purposes of this act, due notice of approval shall be sent to the State board.

SEC. 9. That in order to provide popular, nontechnical instruction to the residents of the various States, particularly to those to whom such facilities are not accessible, on the subject of the hygiene of infancy, hygiene of maternity, and related subjects, the State board described in section 4 is authorized to arrange with the State university, land-grant college, or other public educational institution for the provision of extension courses by qualified lecturers: Provided, That not more than 25 per cent of the sums granted by the United States to a State under this act may be used for this purpose.

SEC. 10. That in order to receive the benefits of the appropriations authorized under this act the State shall, through the legislative authority thereof, appoint as custodian for said moneys its State treasurer, who shall receive and provide for the proper custody of such money and its disbursement on requisition of the State board described in section 4.

SEC. 11. That the facilities provided by any State boards cooperating under the provisions of this act shall be available for all residents of the State.

SEC. 12. That the Federal board shall every three months ascertain the amounts expended by the several State boards described in section 4 in the preceding quarter year. On or before the 1st day of January and quarterly thereafter the Federal board shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount to which each State is entitled under the provisions of this act. Upon such certification the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the State treasurer as custodian the amounts so certified.

SEC. 13. That each State board cooperating under this act shall make such reports concerning its operation and expenditures as shall be prescribed by the Federal board. The Federal board may withhold the allotment of moneys to any State whenever it shall be determined that such moneys are not being expended for the purposes and under the conditions of this act.

If any allotment is withheld from any State, the State board of such State may appeal to the Congress of the United States, and if the Congress shall not direct such sum to be paid it shall be distributed elsewhere, in the manner described in the last paragraph of section 2.

SEC. 14. That if any portion of the moneys received by the treasurer of any State as custodian under this act shall, by any action or contingency, be diminished or lost, it shall be replaced by such State, and until so replaced no subsequent allotment under this act shall be paid to such State. No portion of any moneys apportioned under this act for the benefit of the States shall be applied, directly or indirectly, to the purchase, erection, preservation, or repair of any building or buildings or equipment, or for the purchase or rental of any buildings or lands.

SEC. 15. That as chairman of the Federal board, the Secretary of Labor shall include in his annual report to Congress a full account of the administration of this act and of the expenditures of the moneys herein authorized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NUGENT in the chair). The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and there is an amendment reported from the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I do not wish at this time to discuss the measure further than to say that I reported it from the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine on the 2d day of June last. The bill was reported after we had held a hearing and after it had been carefully considered by the members of the committee, all of whom seemed to feel that it was an important and wise measure. I shall not further discuss the bill at this moment, because I think it might be well to have the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], who introduced the bill, explain to the Senate its provisions.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, unless there is objection, I wish the amendment to the bill may be now read, in order that we may have the whole measure before us as reported from the committee.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have no objection to that course being taken.

Mr. WARREN. I desire whatever amendments have been offered to the bill may be now stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendments which have been proposed to the bill.

The READING CLERK. On page 6, section 8, line 16, the committee propose to strike out:

That any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of this act shall, by its board described in section 4, submit to the Federal board detailed plans for carrying out the provisions of this act. These plans shall include the provisions to be made in the State for the administration of the act; the provision of instruction in the hygiene of maternity and infancy through public health nurses, consultation centers, and other suitable methods, and the provision of medical and nursing care for mothers and infants at home or at a hospital when necessary, especially in remote areas. If the Federal Board finds these plans to be in conformity with provisions and purposes of this act, due notice of approval shall be sent to the State board.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That the cooperative work in promoting the care of maternity and infancy shall consist of instruction in the hygiene of maternity and infancy through public health nurses, consultation centers, and other suitable methods, and the provision of medical and nursing care for mothers and infants at home or at a hospital when necessary, especially in remote areas; and this work shall be carried on in such manner as may be mutually agreed upon by the Federal board and any State receiving the benefits of this act.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does the Senator from Wyoming desire amendments which have been offered to the bill by Senators also stated?

Mr. WARREN. I desire to have all amendments, by whomsoever offered to the bill, now stated. The amendment which has just been stated is embodied in the printed copy of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if I correctly understood, the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], before leaving the Chamber, referred to some amendments which he had offered or proposed to offer.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have a copy of his amendments, and I shall be glad to have them read.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to be informed of its purpose.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I send the amendments to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be read for the information of the Senate.

The READING CLERK. The senior Senator from Utah proposes the following amendments:

On page 1 strike out all of line 10, and on page 2 strike out lines 1, 2, and 3 and substitute therefor the following: "For the use of the Children's Bureau, for the promotion of maternal and infant hygiene, for the administration of this act, and for the purpose of making such studies, investigations, and reports as will further the efficient administration of this act."

On pages 3 and 4 strike out all of section 3 and substitute therefor the following:

"SEC. 3. The Chief of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, acting through the agency of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor (hereinafter called 'the Children's Bureau'), shall be charged with the carrying out of the provisions of this act and the Chief of the Children's Bureau shall be the executive officer. The Chief of the Children's Bureau as executive officer is hereby authorized to form an advisory committee to consult with the Chief of the Children's Bureau and to advise concerning any problems which may arise in connection with the carrying out of the provisions of this act, such advisory committee to consist of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and the United States Commissioner of Education. The Children's Bureau shall have charge of all matters concerning the administration of this act and shall have power to cooperate with the State board authorized to carry out the provisions of this act. It shall be the duty of the Children's Bureau to make or cause to be made such studies, investigations, and reports as will promote the efficient administration of this act."

On page 4, line 14, and wherever thereafter they appear in the bill, strike out the words "Federal board" and substitute therefor the words "Children's Bureau."

On page 4, line 24, insert after the word "women" the following words: "All of the members of which advisory committees shall serve without compensation."

On page 7, line 8, after the word "medical," insert the following: "Or other suitable remedial measures."

Mr. SHEPPARD obtained the floor.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a moment——

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. FRANCE. I will say that I have examined the amendments presented by the senior Senator from Utah, and I feel that they materially improve the measure, and I shall be very glad to see those amendments adopted. However, if they shall be adopted, one additional amendment will be required. I send that amendment to the desk in order that it may be read, and at the proper time I shall offer it, if the amendments of the Senator from Utah shall be adopted.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas is to discuss this measure at this time, I think there should be more Senators here.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I think we have a fairly representative attendance here, in view of the record of the Senate so far at this session.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that he consider the old adage that "you can lead a horse to water, but you can not make him drink."

Mr. KENYON. In other words, you can bring a Senator here, but you can not make him listen to what is said?

Mr. THOMAS. No; the chances are that after the roll is called there will be fewer Senators here than at present.

Mr. KENYON. I had not reached the point of making the suggestion of the absence of a quorum, so it is not necessary to withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read, for the information of the Senate, the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Maryland.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 15 and in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 15. That as executive officer the Chief of the Children's Bureau shall make an annual report to the Secretary of Labor for presentation to Congress, such report to render a full account of the administration of the act and of the expenditure of the moneys herein authorized.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the principal object of this bill is to enable the Federal Government to cooperate with the States in the distribution of information relating to maternal and infant hygiene. The immediate direction of the work is to rest with the State agencies, and the work is to be carried on in such manner as may be mutually agreed upon by Federal and State authorities.

The work consists in distributing information and instruction in the hygiene of maternity and infancy through bulletins, public-health nurses, consultation centers, lectures, and other suitable methods. Wherever necessary, and especially in remote areas, medical and nursing care for mothers and infants may be provided, in so far as available funds will permit.

A Federal board of maternal and infant hygiene, composed of the Secretary of Labor as chairman, the chief of the Children's Bureau as executive officer, the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and the United States Commissioner of Education, is created to represent the Federal Government in cooperating with State agencies.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] confers upon the Children's Bureau the function of administering the act, and converts the Federal board established by the bill into an advisory committee—a change which the chairman of the committee has accepted.

A State signifies its intention to cooperate under this measure when its legislature authorizes a State board of maternal and infant hygiene or a child welfare or a child hygiene division of the State board of health to represent the State. The board representing the State submits to the Federal board a plan for carrying on within the State the purposes of this act.

Acceptance of the plan by the Federal board qualifies the State to receive the sum of $10,000 from the United States Treasury to aid in enacting its details, and also to receive a share of an additional Federal appropriation conditioned on the appropriation of a like amount by the State itself. This additional Federal appropriation is to be $2,000,000 for the first fiscal year after the passage of this act, $2,400,000 for the second, $2,800,000 for the third, $3,200,000 for the fourth, $3,600,000 for the fifth, and $4,000,000 for each succeeding fiscal year. The share of a State in this additional allotment is to be based on the proportion of its population to that of the United States, not including outlying possessions, according to the last preceding United States census.

Thus every State establishing or having a proper agency and submitting an acceptable plan will receive substantial cooperation from the Federal Government as follows: First, every complying State receives $10,000, and, if it should desire to go further, a share in the additional appropriation before described, based on an equal appropriation from its own treasury.

The Federal board certifies to the Secretary of the Treasury on the 1st of each January, and every three months thereafter, the amounts to which each accepting State is entitled, whereupon the Secretary pays such amounts to the State treasurer. The State treasurer pays out these funds on vouchers signed by the State board. The Federal board may withhold any allotment if it appears that a State is not properly cooperating, the State board having an appeal to Congress from the decision of the Federal board.

The Federal board may require such reports from State boards as it deems advisable, and thus keeps in intimate touch with the work in the States.

The Secretary of Labor is to include in his annual report to Congress a full account of the administration of this measure and the expenditures authorized by it.

The need for this act is shown in the appalling number of deaths of mothers in the United States due to causes connected with childbirth, and among infants under one year of age. It developed at the hearing on this bill before the Committee on Public Health that 23,000 mothers died in this country from such causes in 1918, that nearly 250,000 infants less than one year old perished during the same year, and that most of these deaths were preventable. It was made clear that lack of instruction and care not only led to such deaths, but to reduced vitality and permanently impaired health and efficiency among thousands of women and children who survive.

In March, 1920, the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. issued a statistical bulletin in which it was stated that even at this late date more women between the ages of 15 and 45 years die from causes incidental to childbearing than from any other cause except tuberculosis; that this condition has begun to interest those concerned with the conservation of human life; and that, as a result, a hitherto undeveloped field of public health work has been opened up.

The Federal Government expends millions of dollars every year in the distribution of information and instruction as to how cattle and hogs and other domestic animals may be saved from disease and death, but so far has provided the merest pittance for women and babes, who are suffering each year a preventable mortality greater than that of our armies during the entire period of our participation in the World War.

This bill provides a simple and practicable method by which instruction and assistance may be made available to mothers in the hygiene of maternity, infancy, and childhood. It meets one of the most vital needs of the time. It is nonpartisan, and should have the support of all parties and sections. In the House a Republican has introduced it, in the Senate a Democrat. In the preceding Congress a bill of similar purpose was introduced by Miss Rankin, a Republican, and the first woman Member of Congress. Both President elect Harding and Gov. Cox have indorsed legislation of this kind. It is approved by nearly every woman's organization of importance in the country.

The League of Women Voters and the National Federation of Women's Clubs have listed it among the leading measures representing the desires and the demands of American women. Both the women's national Republican and Democratic committees have recorded their approval. The Democratic national platform of 1920 specifically favors an enactment of this nature.

The bill involves no radical departure in method or principle. In providing for State and National cooperation, it follows the example of the vocational education and good roads acts. Other countries have already adopted policies of similar aid to maternity and infancy, with most satisfying results.

The bill creates no new department, no new supervising officials, but combines existing Federal officials into a single board for the administration of its provisions. It has been indorsed by the following organizations, and many others:

General Federation of Women's Clubs.
National Congress of Mothers and Parent Teacher Associations.
Women's National Democratic Committee.
Women's National Republican Committee.
League of Women Voters.
Association of Collegiate Alumnæ.
National Women's Christian Temperance Union.
Council of Jewish Women.
National Board of Young Women's Christian Association.
Continental Congress of the Daughters American Revolution.

Women's Press Club.

I desire to conclude this brief explanation of the bill by reading to the Senate the letters of the governors of many States in reference to this measure, showing that the States will welcome it and will cooperate with the Federal Government in this beneficent work.

These letters were sent to Mr. W. F. Bigelow, editor of Good Housekeeping, who has taken a profound interest in this bill and rendered invaluable service in its behalf:

STATE OF NEW YORK,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Albany, April 28, 1920.

Mr. W. F. BIGELOW,
Editor Good Housekeeping, New York City.

MY DEAR MR. BIGELOW: I am of the opinion that legislation looking toward the establishment of health centers, public health nursing, and maternity centers is of great importance. I have dealt with these matters in both of my messages to the Legislature of New York State and in special messages covering special phases of public health legislation.

The State of New York will be among the first to give the Federal Government effective cooperation in carrying out the provisions of the Sheppard-Towner bill.

Yours, very truly, ALFRED E. SMITH.

CHARLESTON, W. VA., November 3.

W. F. BIGELOW,
Editor Good Housekeeping:

Referring to your letter of the 31st ultimo, this State will cooperate to the limit.

JOHN J. CORNWELL, Governor.

COLUMBIA, S. C., November 3.

W. F. BIGELOW,
Editor Good Housekeeping:

Your letter. I heartily approve of measure for protection of maternity and infancy. I think it important for bill to retain feature providing that this fund shall be handled by State health machinery already existing, otherwise there might arise annoying duplication.

R. A. COOPER, Governor.

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., November 3, 1919.

W. F. BIGELOW,
119 West Fortieth Street, New York:

Letter received. I am in favor of anything that will help the mothers and infants of our country.

SIDNEY J. CATTS, Governor.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., November 12, 1919.

W. F. BIGELOW,
Editor Good Housekeeping:

Am heartily in favor of Sheppard bill for public protection of maternity and infancy. In event it passes, will extend cooperation of the State of Arizona for its successful administration. Am sure that legislature will take necessary steps to carry out purposes of the act, and I will make such recommendations when it convenes.

THOMAS E. CAMPBELL, Governor.

TOPEKA, KANS., November 6, 1919.

W. F. BIGELOW,
Editor Good Housekeeping:

Am heartily in favor measures for protection of maternity and infancy. Kansas is already organized for that work through the child-hygiene division, State board of health, and we will welcome cooperation of National Government.

HENRY J. ALLEN, Governor.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., December 12, 1919.

W. F. BIGELOW,

STATE OF ALABAMA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Montgomery, January 12, 1920.

Mr. W. F. BIGELOW,
119 West Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, with inclosure of a copy of the Towner bill pending in the House of Representatives. I am in hearty sympathy with the purpose of the bill and shall do whatever lies within my power to further its passage through Congress and for all necessary cooperating legislation by this State.

Very truly, yours, THOS. E. KILBY, Governor.

STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Bismarck, December 27, 1919.

Hon. W. F. BIGELOW,
119 West Fortieth Street, New York City, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of December 9 awaited my return of several days' absence from the city.

I assure you that I am heartily in favor of laws that will protect the mothers and children of our country. I have made the statement a great many times that the State and National Governments were giving more consideration to the health of live stock than they were to the health of the people.

Yours, very truly, LYNN J. FRAZIER.

STATE OF NEVADA,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Carson City, January 13, 1920.

Mr. W. H. BIGELOW,
Editor Good Housekeeping, New York City, N. Y.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of January 8, together with a copy of the Sheppard bill for the promotion of maternity and infant welfare. It gives me pleasure to indorse this measure and to assure you that should it be enacted in Congress, I will recommend to the State of Nevada that it assent to the acceptance of its terms.

Very sincerely, yours,

EMMET D. BOYLE, Governor.

STATE OF NEW MEXICO,
EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Santa Fe, November 5, 1919.

Mr. W. F. BIGELOW,
119 West Fortieth Street, New York City.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 1st instant, informing me of the introduction of a bill in the Senate of the United States by Senator SHEPPARD, of Texas, providing for the cooperation of the Federal Government with State governments in the matter of hygiene for mothers, to the end that mothers, as well as babies, may be properly taken care of and the mortality heretofore existing among them be reduced to the minimum.

In this connection I beg to say that I am heartily in favor of such a law. We have in this State a child-welfare board, created by the last legislature, the object of which is strictly in line with the objects that would be accomplished by the Sheppard bill now pending in the Senate. If that bill passes the Federal Congress, New Mexico will be in a position to cooperate along those lines and will be very glad to do so.

In fact, I believe our Government should go one step further in that direction. Among other things, you say in your letter: "The Nation rests on mothers; it should protect them."

I quite agree with that, and, let me add, the Government should help poor widowed mothers who have infant children on their hands, without means of support, to properly support those children, who are to be the future citizens of the State. In other words, there should be a pension provided by law for such mothers.

Very respectfully,

O. A. LARRAZOLO, Governor.

STATE OF IDAHO,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Boise, November 6, 1919.

Mr. W. F. BIGELOW, Editor,
119 West Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

MY DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of October 31, I am very glad to say Idaho already has on her statute books a law similar to that proposed for the Nation by Senator SHEPPARD, of Texas. I take pleasure in attaching a copy hereto. If you desire to know more in detail concerning the operation of the law, Mr. J. K. White, commissioner of public welfare, Boise, Idaho, will be glad to send you all information at hand.

Since I gave my approval to this bill for the State of Idaho, it follows that I shall be glad to see other States adopt such legislation, and would advocate legislation in this State in cooperation with the bill pending as outlined in your letter.

Very truly, yours,

D. W. DAVIS, Governor.

[Chap. 121, S. B. No. 118.]

An act creating a bureau of child hygiene in the department of public welfare, and defining the duties of the same.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Idaho:

SECTION 1. There is hereby created in the department of public welfare a bureau to be known as the division of child hygiene, to be under the general supervision and direction of the department, the director of which bureau shall be the commissioner of the public welfare, or some woman, if any there be, in that department.

SEC. 2. The general duties of the bureau of child hygiene shall include the issuance of educational literature on the care of the baby and the hygiene of the child, the study of the causes of infant mortality and the application of preventive measures for the prevention and suppression of the diseases of infancy and early childhood, and such other duties as are prescribed by the department.

Approved, March 11, 1919.

STATE OF MAINE, OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Augusta, November 6, 1919.

DEAR MR. BIGELOW: I have noted with much interest your letter of the 1st instant regarding a bill for the public protection of maternity and infancy. I feel that the subject is one that could well be taken up by the State of Maine, but I believe that the creation of a special State board of maternal and infant hygiene is not necessary here.

The work could very well be carried on by our State department of health, which is one of the most efficient organizations in the country, headed by Leverett Dale Bristol, an energetic young man, who has already been giving this subject much consideration.

I am prepared to recommend to the legislature the granting of a special appropriation to meet any funds made available by the Federal Government and to suggest that this work be carried on by special division for child hygiene and infant welfare, under the auspices of the State department of health.

Very truly, yours,

CARL E. MILLIKEN.

Mr. W. F. BIGELOW,
Editor Good Housekeeping,

STATE OF WYOMING, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Cheyenne, December 15, 1919.

Mr. W. F. BIGELOW,
Editor Good Housekeeping,
119 West Fortieth Street, New York City, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 10th instant, and wish to advise you that I will be very pleased to write to our delegation in Congress indorsing the bill which you mention in your letter.

Very truly, yours,

ROBERT D. CAREY.

STATE OF MONTANA, EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Helena, April 26, 1920.

Mr. W. F. BIGELOW,
Editor Good Housekeeping,
New York City.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of April 20 relative to the Sheppard-Towner maternity bill, and am writing to say that you may advise the Senate committee that I recognize the necessity of cooperation between the States and the Federal Government in all possible protection to mothers and babies.

Very truly, yours,

S. V. STEWART, Governor of Montana.

EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Nashville, Tenn., April 27, 1920.

Hon. W. F. BIGELOW,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: You are authorized to add my name to the list of those favoring the Sheppard-Towner maternity bill.

Very respectfully,

A. H. ROBERTS, Governor.

STATE OF NEBRASKA,
Lincoln, April 26, 1920.

Mr. W. F. BIGELOW,
Care Good Housekeeping Magazine, New York City.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 20th instant, addressed to Hon. Samuel R. McKelvie, Lincoln, Nebr., has been referred to my attention.

Will say in reply that letters of indorsement have gone forward to the Senators of this State urging their support of the Sheppard-Towner maternity bill. This bureau is very heartily in favor of all of the provisions of the bill, and think there is no question but what the State of Nebraska will comply with the requirements of this bill should it be enacted into a law.

Yours, respectfully,

I. H. DILLON, M. D.,
Chief Bureau of Health.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator yield before he takes his seat?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. It may have been that some amendments were adopted before I came into the Chamber.

Mr. THOMAS. None have been adopted.

Mr. HARRISON. On page 2 the original appropriation is for $480,000 for each year. Then the following language:

Provided, That there is also authorized to be appropriated for the use of the States, subject to the provisions of this act, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, an additional sum of $2,000,000.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Of course, that would be put forward a year.

Mr. HARRISON. That is what I wanted to inquire. So the Senator will put that off one year, to June 30, 1922?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to ask the Senator another question. Does this bill in any way repeal the law which now prevents the dissemination of information touching the control of childbirth?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It does not.

Mr. HARRISON. This in no way affects that?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; it does not.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, with 15 Senators present, the Secretary, the reading clerk, the doorkeepers, the pages, and spaces filled with unoccupied and deserted seats, I shall occupy a few moments of your time and of the Senate's time in expressing the reasons which compel me to oppose the adoption of this measure.

I know full well, Mr. President, that all opposition to this and similar measures is futile, and consequently that opposition is a waste of effort. It is no pleasure to me, I can assure my small but highly cultivated audience, to persist in expressing opposition and objecting to measures which, so far as my own convictions go, are either beyond the powers of the National Congress, consist of added burdens upon the Treasury, or are otherwise seriously objectionable.
